Let me tell you where that hurts this country. Fifty years ago the local banker was watching every young man in that community. When the local banker would see a young man who was taking an interest in civic affairs and church work and becoming a good citizen, building and cultivating good will, and then going into business and prospering, the banker would say to that young man, "If you need money, I will let you have it." He would start that man out in a larger business. Some of the best and wealthiest men in this country were started that way, by building character first, locally. The local banker knew those people, but with the tendency toward larger banks and fewer banks, that banker is not observing the young people in his neighborhood like he used to. He is not looking to character for loans. He is looking to the stock market. Every morning he picks up the paper and looks at the stock market to see the prices of certain stocks.

DECENTRALIZATION

So we have to get away from that. The way to get away from it is through decentralization—more banks instead of fewer banks, but safe banks. We can have them if we have safe banking practices. I know that a few of those small businesses and small banks are going broke. Yes; they certainly will. But in the end, even though they do, the gains to the community and the Nation will be much greater than the loss.

In connection with these banks I invite your attention to another chart which shows greater concentration. There are 24 banks in this country, 13 of them in one city, that own approximately one-third of the banking resources of all the banks in this Nation. Now, get that straight. It is hard to believe. It is an astounding statement, I know, but it is true nevertheless, that 24 banks, 13 of them in one city, own more than 30 percent, and approximately one-third of the banking resources of all the 15,000 or more banks in the entire United States. Now, follow those 24 banks on this chart. They have 484 directors. Those 484 directors are also the directors of the largest industrial and manufacturing concerns, insurance, and railroad companies in America. They interlock with industrial and manufacturing concerns and utilities that own 58 percent of the corporate wealth of the entire Nation. So the conclusion is, and no one can escape it, that a few men controlling a few banks, control a majority of the corporate wealth of the entire Nation.

ENCOURAGE LOCAL BUSINESS

Now, instead of going in that direction, which we are, we should be going in the opposite direction. The way to go in the opposite direction is to encourage the local individual with character and the local community and local banks and local institutions of all kinds.

NATIONAL DEBT

By reason of all the laws to help the people the last 6 years, we have had to go into debt. When we talk about spending tax money, oftentimes people overlook what that money has been spent for.

Let us look at the situation from a national-debt standpoint for a few moments. We have $40,000,000,000 owing by this Federal Government to the bondholders. That is a large sum of money. That is equal to about 10 percent, or a little more, of the entire wealth of the Nation. This $40,000,000,000 is drawing interest.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. The figure is over $45,000,000,000, because the gentleman did not mention the guaranteed debt.

Mr. PATMAN. I understand the point the gentleman makes, that there are certain obligations that the Government is responsible for, that are not included in the $40,000,000,000. That is correct. There are several billion dollars. For instance, the Home Owners' Loan and the F. H. A., and many other things, but that money will be paid back with interest.

Now, in regard to this debt of $40,000,000,000. We are paying each year approximately $1,000,000,000 interest on this debt. Suppose someone opposes each of us next year in the primaries or at the general election and should base his campaign solely on the theory that it is wrong for the Government to pay interest for the use of its own credit, and Congress is wrong in permitting it or causing it to be paid, and for not changing the law that compels it, and charges you and me as Members with our part of that responsibility. How would we answer it?

No one yet has been able to convince me—and I would certainly like to be convinced if I am wrong—as to why the Government should pay for the use of its own credit. I do not believe it is right. I do not believe it is logical. I do not believe it is reasonable. I do not believe it should be done. There is a billion dollars a year that is paid out that way that should not be paid.

We passed the Gold Act. The Gold Act says that the title to all gold in this country is in the Government of the United States. There is one exception that I know of, and that is, of course, where it is used in the arts and trades. It is all right to have gold in your possession for such purposes. Another exception is where it is held by banks in this country; by the Federal Reserve bank, for instance, in New York, for foreign central banks and foreign governments, if the Secretary of the Treasury has issued licenses for that purpose.

Today we have in New York City about seven or eight hundreds of millions of dollars in gold that is held there for foreign central banks and for foreign governments that is earmarked, that is not a part of the $15,000,000,000 and more of gold the title to which is in the Government of the United States. What should we do with this gold? It is true that we have been turning it over to the Federal Reserve banks. That is a sort of gold certificate—we have been turning it over to them for use as they desire to use it; but what would be the most sensible way to use that gold?

No one has ever contended that more than 40 percent gold reserve is necessary as a base for the currency in any country in the world, and England for a hundred years remained on the gold standard with 10 percent gold, so there is no question about 40 percent gold being sufficient. A few years ago when we did not have much gold and we were talking about paying the soldiers by issuing Government credit, or Government currency, our opponents on the other side said that if we had gold enough to provide a 40-percent reserve as a basis for the issuance of that currency it would be perfectly all right to pay the soldiers that way, but that we did not have the gold that was necessary then. Since that time we have acquired this enormous amount of $15,163,040,543.03 in gold as of March 30, 1939, and the title to every dollar of it is in the Government of the United States.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman must not make a statement like that. Who holds the gold certificates? How much foreign investment is here? How much of this gold belongs to nations who sent it here for investment? The gentleman spoke of the $700,000,000, but it is billions. How much does the Treasury actually own of that gold? Only a little.

Mr. PATMAN. I did not mean for the gentleman to make a speech in my time. I like the gentleman and like to hear him talk, but not in my time.

Mr. GIFFORD. We like each other, but we differ.

Mr. PATMAN. I know we differ. Let me answer the gentleman's question now.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman says the Government owns that gold.

Mr. PATMAN. I say that, and the gentleman himself says that.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, no.

Mr. PATMAN. Get the law and read it.

Mr. GIFFORD. Who owns those gold certificates?

Mr. PATMAN. I ask the gentleman to get the law. He has time now before I get through talking to go into the library here off the floor and get the law and satisfy himself as to what it says. The law says that title to all that gold is in the Government of the United States. If I am wrong the gentleman can get the law and read it. He can get the law in 2 minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gold certificate belongs to the Federal Reserve.

Mr. PATMAN. The Federal Reserve cannot get that gold except for the purpose of adjusting balances of trade with foreign countries; and, of course, we have always had trade with foreign countries. We used to have more trade than we have now.

Mr. GIFFORD. If the gentleman will yield further, I would bother him again.

Mr. PATMAN. Just for a question, if the gentleman does not mind.

Mr. GIFFORD. He said in another campaign that he would tell the people of the country that. I want to insert in his remarks that I have no doubt he will tell our people that the Government should not borrow money but that the Government should print money.

Mr. PATMAN. I did not yield time to the gentleman to make a speech, much as I enjoy hearing him.

Mr. GIFFORD. That is what the gentleman said. When people need more money than they have, they must go out and borrow money on their credit.

Mr. PATMAN. The Government should not borrow money on its own credit, and the gentleman cannot give one good reason why it should.

Mr. GIFFORD. We all borrow money on our own credit.

Mr. PATMAN. Let us take the gentleman's home town—I do not recall the name of the gentleman's home town—but we will say that the Government wants to sell some bonds. Possibly his home-town bank will buy $100,000 of those bonds. The bank in his home town does not actually transfer $100,000 in money down to the Treasury; no, it does not transfer anything at all, it places a pencil mark upon the books of the bank and creates $100,000 in money. This $100,000 is not paid out to the Government.

As the Government pays the gentleman his salary each month, as it pays the postmaster, the city carriers, the R. F. D. carriers, and the other Government employees in his home town, they get credit for a part of it and the credit is transferred from one to the other and remains upon the books of that bank, and no money is transferred at all. The Government, however, pays the bank interest on the $100,000.

The use of the Government's credit is better credit than the bank's credit and we should not get the banks to endorse our notes and pay the banks for that purpose; and that is exactly what we have been doing and we should not do it. If the gentleman knows any reason why we should do it I wish he would get time to answer me.

Mr. GIFFORD. I will answer that now.

Mr. PATMAN. Explain to us where logic and reason support it, but not in my time.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman does not want it in his time because he does not want his own argument offset at any telling point.

Mr. PATMAN. I know what the gentleman's views are: If the Government is going to borrow money, borrow it from the banks and pay them interest, pay them for the use of the Government's own credit.

Those are the gentleman's views. I know what they are, but I think he is wrong. If I am wrong I want to be shown where I am wrong.

In regard to the use of this gold, may I say that $15,000,000,000 in gold is sufficient for the issuance of $37,500,000,000 of Government credit based upon a 40-percent gold reserve. If we were to issue this credit quickly or suddenly it would be ruinous inflation and would absolutely destroy our financial system and we do not want that to happen. It is not the thing to do. But we can gradually and eventually use this gold for the purpose of issuing Government credit. The best way, I think, is for the Government to first own the Federal Reserve banks. We have these 12 banks which are not Government banks. They are not Federal banks. They are owned by private banks. Not one penny of their stock is owned by the Government. The private banks have invested $134,000,000 only in those 12 great institutions.

When those 12 banks want bonds, in open-market transactions, they buy those bonds. They own now $2,500,000,000 of Government bonds. On whose credit were those bonds purchased? Why, on the Government's credit.

Take a Federal Reserve note that you may have in your possession or examine any Federal Reserve note and you will find on it that the Federal Reserve banks do not agree to pay that money. You will find that the United States Government guarantees payment of that note, which is a blanket mortgage on the property of all the people of this country. That is what it is. It is used absolutely free by the Federal Reserve banks owned by private corporations.

Those 12 Federal Reserve banks should be owned by this Government, and there is no reason why they should not be, because they are performing a governmental function and should be considered an arm of this great Government instead of being under obligation to private banks. Then this gold could be used and we could gradually and eventually acquire the national debt, saving the people $1,000,000,000 a year in interest that is now being paid on Government obligations.

At one time we thought the social-security reserve fund would acquire this great debt, but in the last few days there have been developments that lead us to believe that theory is going to be abandoned. Therefore, we should look around for another place that this enormous debt can be acquired and save the people this enormous interest charge.

Mr. GORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. Along that line of thought, does the gentleman agree with the recommendation that we should abandon that principle of reserve?

Mr. PATMAN. No; I do not agree with that principle at all. I think it was a good principle; but I understand, for the purpose of preventing an increased payment, an increased contribution from going into effect on both the employee and employer for the next 2 or 3 years, that plan has been agreed upon. I do not say it is not justified for the reason stated. I am not going to condemn. I am going to presume it is the best thing to do under the circumstances. I think the plan to build up this enormous reserve was the best; then eventually acquire the national debt with this reserve, then as we paid this billion dollars a year interest, that money would go to the old people, to the unemployed, the helpless, the crippled, and the blind, instead of going to the private holders of United States Government obligations. But that theory has for the moment been abandoned.

Along with the payment of money we must consider velocity. I saw an interesting statement the other day made by Mr. Eccles, Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. He says the amount of money in circulation has nothing to do with prices, citing as evidence that in 1929, compared with today, we had $2,000,000,000 less actual money in circulation then than we have today; therefore, the volume of currency has not influenced prices and economic conditions. He next cites as an example that deposit currency will not influence prices, because in 1938 we had more deposits than we had in 1929 when times were real good; therefore, neither volume of currency nor the volume of bank deposits would materially influence economic conditions. But Mr. Eccles failed to mention that velocity of money and credit has as much to do with it as volume.

I had a chart made up to try to explain that. Here on the chart are bank deposits which go back to 1920 and from there up to date.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of the Members to the deposits from 1930 on to date. There is the line showing currency outside of banks. The currency has gone up and up and up all the time. This refers to the amount of currency in circulation. That is what Mr. Eccles said, and he is right about it. You will notice the demand deposits have been going up, up, and up since 1932. But farm prices have not gone along. Farm prices [indicating] are way down here. It will be noticed, however, that farm prices have closely followed the total business transactions. The way to ascertain the total business transactions is to take the volume of deposit currency or deposits in the banks and add the aggregate to the amount of money that is in circulation, then multiply that by the velocity, or the turn-over, each year, and you get the total business transactions.

There is no accurate way of determining the turn-over of actual currency, or pocketbook money, because there is no check made of it, but there is a very accurate way of determining the total business transactions in checks. We have that. The pocketbook-money transactions are estimated to be about 25 percent in addition to the check transactions. So, by adding 25 percent to the check transactions, you will get a rough estimate.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HARRINGTON. In connection with banking monopoly, does the gentleman think that has anything to do with the situation that a great many of the small towns have been faced with; that is, finding themselves in the grasp of certain monopolies, particularly its relation to chain stores?

Mr. PATMAN. I think so.

Mr. HARRINGTON. I may say to the gentleman I am very much in favor of his chain-store tax bill. I hope it may be reported out. I also believe the gentleman is making a very interesting statement in connection with the money situation.

Mr. PATMAN. I thank the gentleman for the help he has given in the past on the chain-store bill. Of course, in the chain stores, interstate chains, especially, there is trend toward monopoly. You let a few people get control of the retail distribution of this country and what is going to happen to the local communities? What is going to happen to the man who thinks character is the greatest asset?

A few years ago when you were addressing a graduating class you would say to the young men, "You are the architects of your own fortunes. You can do anything you want to do." And you believed that, and the young men could almost do it. But can you truthfully tell them that today?

I know in my home town there are young men who start in working for a dry goods company. They get to be good. They are expert salesmen. They know the business; they know how to buy. They are ready to go out on their own, so to speak, and start a store of their own. Suppose one of these young men goes to the bank. He says to the banker, "I have a few thousand dollars I have saved during the 15 years I worked for the dry goods company. I want to put that with the money I can borrow and go into the dry-goods business. Will you let me have some money for that purpose?"

The banker, being his friend, will say, "Young man, do not do that. You will lose your money. When you build your business up, one of these New York concerns will come in and go into business next door and sell below cost for awhile and put you out of business and destroy your business. They can do it, because they have thousands of stores over the country where they can make profits, and they will sell here at a loss until they put you out of business. Do not go into that business."

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman stated there is about $2,000,000,000 more in circulation now than there was in 1929. I assume that is correct.

Mr. PATMAN. That is what I understand it to be; yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Can the gentleman tell the House why it is that money has almost ceased to flow in this country?

Mr. PATMAN. I do not believe there is any way you can determine it. There are 130,000,000 people in this country, and you know money is used every day and all the time.

Mr. KNUTSON. The reports I get are that there is no money in circulation today in the rural sections of the country. Can the gentleman tell the House why that is?

Mr. PATMAN. Of course, there is no way to tell how much money there is in actual circulation.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I believe the gentleman answered that question himself awhile ago in commenting on Mr. Eccles' statement, when he pointed out that what Mr. Eccles failed to mention was the velocity of circulation of bank deposits and whether some of them may not be entirely idle. It seems to me what the gentleman himself said awhile ago is the appropriate answer to the question of the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Does not the gentleman believe that the operation of the interlocking directorates, which was so plainly shown on the chart the gentleman exhibited a few minutes ago, has something to do with the velocity of money in circulation?

Mr. PATMAN. Certainly, because they get this money and carry it to their vaults in New York City and it stays there. It is idle, it is hoarded. You have to get this money out among the masses some way where they will spend it for goods and services.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. KNUTSON. In addition to lack of confidence, what other reasons are there that money is not circulating at the present time?

Mr. PATMAN. Money, of course, is circulating. There are billions of dollars of pocket money in circulation. We see it every day.

Mr. KNUTSON. About the only money that is circulating now is what the Government is putting into circulation in the form of benefits.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not believe that all of it is what the Government is putting in circulation.

Mr. KNUTSON. There is no incentive for private owners of money to keep their money.

Mr. PATMAN. Oh, yes; in days gone by, as well as now, they had plenty of incentive to invest their money.

Mr. KNUTSON. The Government takes all the returns in the form of taxes.

Mr. PATMAN. Not in every case.

Mr. KNUTSON. Almost.

Mr. PATMAN. I know there are many things that can be said about our tax system taking so much of the profits, but I do not agree it has paralyzed business.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Does not the gentleman believe monopoly has something to do with the lack of circulation?

Mr. PATMAN. I believe monopoly has a great deal to do with it; in fact, it is one of the principal reasons.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BURDICK. Is not the main reason for money not circulating that about all the security the average fellow has has already been taken, and they will not lend him any money unless he has security?

Mr. PATMAN. Character used to be the best security in the world. That is the point I am trying to make. We are getting away from character. We are getting away from the local communities. We are getting away from the man who is really a worth-while citizen. Now we have absentee ownership and absentee control by people who know nothing about the local people who have good character and who would be good risks. These absentee owners would be glad to let them have money if they only knew them, but they do not know them.

Going back to this illustration of the young man who wants to go into business, he will ask the banker, "What about the grocery business? I believe I can go in the grocery business and make money. I have lots of friends." The banker says, "No, one of these New York stores will come in here and go in opposition to you as soon as you get your business built up and will sell way below cost. They have always done it to destroy competition, and they admit it. They will destroy your business and you will have no chance. Do not go into the grocery business."

"What about the drug business?"

"The same thing. The very minute you even go out into the suburbs of a city and build up a business in the drug business one of these large concerns will come in and go into competition with you, backed by the great resources of thousands of other stores where they can sell at a tremendous profit and practically have a monopoly, they sell below cost until you are put out of business."

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. PATMAN. I have already been allotted the time, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the gentleman completes his statement I may be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. PATMAN. In view of that request, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes instead of 5.

Mr. GIFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair submit the request.

Mr. GIFFORD. I will make it 30 minutes then.

Mr. PATMAN. I will withdraw my request and will be satisfied with only the 5 minutes already allotted as I have taken quite a bit of time already.

Mr. GIFFORD. Then I will ask for 10 mintues.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. PATMAN. The same way with the drug business——

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I think the gentleman's statement was that our demand deposits today are about the same as they were in 1929.

Mr. PATMAN. A little higher today.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Is not that made up, to a great extent at least, by the deposits of the Federal Government which are being checked against?

Mr. PATMAN. No; the computation I have does not include Federal Government deposits at all.

Let me finish this statement, as I have only a few minutes, and I want to apologize for taking so much of your time.

Then there is the insurance business. You take the insurance business out of your local town and, while you will not destroy it by any means, you will cripple it. The people who are directly and indirectly dependent upon insurance for a livelihood will be put out of business locally along with absentee ownership of local business.

Are you going to tell this young man to go into the printing business? That is a good trade. I do not know of a better trade than printing. No; if absentee ownership gets control of all these towns in the country, they have all their printing done in one place or in one shop, and they do not need a local printer.

What about the newspapers? Well, as they get control they quit using the newspapers for advertising purposes. They get out their own advertising in their own printing plants.

So where is this young man going and what is he going to do? He has trained and equipped himself for a business career; what kind of business or profession will you ask him to engage in? Is it law? Absentee owners only use a few lawyers in some of the larger cities; and suppose he is the best and most influential young lawyer in the city, yet if there is another lawyer there who happens to have a connection with New York interests that own these concerns, he gets retained to look after their legal business and not this particular lawyer.

So along with absentee ownership you destroy your local banks, you destroy your local business, and then you destroy character as security, which is the greatest asset in this country of ours. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for 25 minutes to address the House tomorrow. I would like to change that request and ask that my time may be transferred and that I may address the House for 25 minutes at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the interest that I thought was manifested in the remarks of the last gentleman, I have asked for 10 minutes. Some statements should not go unchallenged. Everyone knows how able the gentleman from Texas is. We all know how able the gentleman who is to follow me also is. So, I am a volunteer between two difficult opponents, and yet someone should make a few remarks lest these arguments, if uninterrupted, have too much weight with those who may read them.

The question is "printed money against borrowed money." The line is gradually drawing closer all the time.

I have taken this floor many times, asserting that our debt was too great and that too much debt money has been created. I have declared that it was a very highly dangerous situation that we are in, and that it may be only one short step to actual printed money.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] several years ago advocated paying the soldiers' bonus by simply printing the money needed. The soldiers did not want to be made the guinea pigs in that operation and they made themselves heard most emphatically to the effect that the Government should not try the experiment of printed money on them and let them bear the curse that might very likely follow such an experiment.

I have argued always that there ought to be a due date on borrowings; that a slight fine, fee, or interest should be paid for the privilege of using other people's money. I can see no reason why governments should not be charged interest for borrowed funds the same as individuals. However, I am fully familiar with the dangerous, although plausible, argument that a government should not pay so-called tribute to banks, but should be permitted to print actual money on its own credit without limitation, a definite pay day, or cancelation of promises. If I have something free and unencumbered, why cannot I print money against it? Yes; even that has often been argued.

Mr. PATMAN. Does not the gentleman see a distinction in this? When we borrow money from a foreign government we should pay interest. That is right. But when we borrow money based on our own credit why should we pay interest?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, the distinction is of slight importance to many, I grant, but the voyage on which the gentleman wants to embark is one which many other nations have attempted to take, and always with the same dire results. When we embark on simply printed money, with no time limit, with no interest, then people quickly get very much disturbed over their nation's credit.

It has always been so, and when you go on the stump next year, as you suggest, and try to explain to the people that the Government should not have to borrow money on its own credit, just put it more plainly and ask, Why should not the Government print money ad libitum rather than borrow money as individuals have to do? Although we are now in greater danger from printing bonds, the line of demarcation is very great. Once that Rubicon is passed and money, merely printed money, is used not only to pay the cost of our Government but for the loaning of many billions, such as we have witnessed in the last 6 years, it would be the beginning of the end. Sound money is all that holds the Nation together. Your pocketbook constitutes a very delicate nerve in your system.

Why is not money being used? I say to the gentleman that one of the things that the administration has done which he probably thinks is wonderful is the guaranteeing of bank deposits. People in the little communities who have always lived "off each other," circulating what little money they may have had, now find their deposits insured. Safety is all they think about now, and they will not risk that money any more. They even do not want their bankers to put it to work. Insured by the Government. How comforting. How safe. That is one of the conditions created on the other side of the ledger, and there is always the other side. In fact, most of the cures offered by this administration are far worse than the diseases themselves. Some of us have to protest these innovations. I think I am one of those conservative—I hope I am—sent here to watch people like the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], who plainly sees national diseases and who has a powerful brain and truly wants to find remedies. When he can assure himself he has found a remedy, as he so often does, his enthusiasm knows no bounds and he must be restrained. I often think I should go back over his original speeches a decade ago and see if they check up with what he now advocates, with a good deal more of moderation.

If he should go on the hustings next year and argue that the Federal Reserve banks should not be agents of the Government, and that we should not pay interest to the Federal Reserve, then somebody should be there to contend the issue. These banks get very little interest and remuneration for the service that they perform. Often during these days will it be debated, "Shall the Government print money or shall the Government continue to borrow money?" May there be those ready to refute this dangerous suggestion.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. If the gentleman will take the report of the Federal Reserve Board, he will discover that practically all of the earnings of the Federal Reserve banks last year came from interest on United States Government bonds, bought on the Government's own credit.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; and the Riggs National Bank, with perhaps three-fourths of its assets in Government bonds, is the real source of its earnings. There seems nowhere else to make any earnings with so much of their funds idle. You have wiped out the initiative of our people and put the Government in business, so that lending to the Government is the only way that there is left to earn money.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BURDICK. While the gentleman is making this explanation of the use of money, I wish he would tell us how it came about that we have used Lincoln's issue of $450,000,000 worth of greenbacks successfully ever since they were issued without paying interest.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, we know that a little poison sometimes is good for our system, but if we take a lot we know what happens. We were forced to use this method to a degree during Lincoln's day. We let the national banks issue a certain amount of bank notes that we might have a little real money in circulation to buy postage stamps and theater tickets. Ninety-five percent has been so-called check money.

Mr. BURDICK. And just how much more would the gentleman recommend?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, I do not know exactly how much more of such poison we could take into the money system, but not a very large amount. I may have suggested this before, when some of us pretend to talk about money. Is it not marvelous that a man should know so much about money who never has any? [Laughter.]

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. The complaint in my district is that the banks are simply counters over which to make change. Nobody can get a loan any more, either for industry or mercantile affairs or business. Can the gentleman explain why that is?

Mr. GIFFORD. Absolutely. Everybody is playing safe with this Government of ours today. Anybody that has a dollar seeks its safety only. When you begin to print, the telegraph wires will work overtime transferring to safer havens. Not much of the fifteen billions of gold belongs to the Government. "We have hot money in this country," as the President termed it. He wanted to know how much of it we had. We found there was some $6,000,000,000 of that so-called hot money. Foreigners had nearly a billion of gold on deposit, and their investments here, if sold, might call for transfer of nearly five billions in gold. Gold certificates have been given to the Federal Reserve banks which are owned by member banks. Thank goodness they are still owned by member banks and perhaps not yet fully controlled by political appointees. The gentleman would like the Government to take them over.

Mr. Speaker, I offered myself for 10 minutes as a lamb for slaughter. I shall now let the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] continue the skinning of these brief arguments. [Applause and laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LARRABEE). The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD my own speech, including a congressional breakfast broadcast on money made by Members of this Congress or ex-Members.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a radio address delivered by me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein an article entitled "The American People Do Not Want War."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein some resolutions from the State Legislature of Nebraska.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a radio address I recently made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 25 minutes.

OUR NATIONAL MONETARY POLICY

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I was not very much impressed by the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] about his being a "lamb for slaughter." I have a very deep and profound respect and also affection for the gentleman from Massachusetts, but I certainly do not feel sorry for him. I feel that he is quite capable of taking care of himself. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to make this talk tomorrow instead of today, but there has been so much said this afternoon on this general subject that I thought perhaps the best thing to do was to go ahead with it and do the best I could.

TWO CONDITIONS WHEN GOVERNMENT SHOULD NOT PAY INTEREST

The first thing I want to say is in answer to something the gentleman from Massachusetts said. There are two times when I believe that the Government of the United States should not pay interest when it utilizes its own credit. The first of those times is when the Government of the United States is lending money on adequate security. As a matter of fact, no private bank has to sell bonds in order to make a loan on adequate security. What happens when a farmer comes into a private bank with a mortgage on which he wants to borrow, is that the banker loans on the borrower's security; creates a deposit to make the loan.

I see no reason, therefore, why the R. F. C., the Home Owners' Loan, the United States Housing Authority, or the Farm Credit Administration should have to go out and sell Government-guaranteed obligations for bank credit before they can make a secured loan to the American people. If we eliminate the interest on the bonds from the situation, we would then be able to lend either at a reduced rate of interest or else we would have a handsome income to the Treasury of the United States, and a large proportion of the answer to our unbalanced Budget.

The second time when I do not believe the Government should pay interest when it uses its own credit is when the Government of the United States is engaged in the task of seeing to it that the volume of actively circulating money in the Nation keeps pace with the increased capacity of the Nation to produce wealth. I believe this one factor is perhaps the most important single factor which has been neglected in all of our economic calculations for many, many years.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. On the first point as to the analogy of the farmer who goes into a bank to borrow, would the gentleman see any distinction that in the case of the Government it would be both borrower and lender, and that when the farmer comes in there is presumably a check by the banking authority as to whether or not the security is good. When you substitute the Government coming in and either borrowing or issuing its own currency, you have no check on the extent to which that agency may go.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. As a matter of fact we have no effective check on the inflation of private bank credit; and the Federal Reserve Board in a statement last January, as proof of that fact, stated that if the banks ever started in on an inflation of bank credit that there was not a power in their hands that would be effective in checking it; and may I further say that ultimately our reliance in any one of these Government credit agencies must be a reliance on the Congress itself, and people in charge of the agencies over which Congress can exercise control. In spite of attacks and criticisms by the minority, these Government credit agencies have made a remarkably excellent record. Their collection records are very fine indeed in spite of the fact that many of their loans have been distress loans.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I hope the gentleman will be very brief. I may say to him that I have 57 pages of manuscript to cover in the brief time at my disposal. Obviously I shall not be able to read them all. I hope the gentleman will not take much of my time.

Mr. BREWSTER. I have no desire to distract the gentleman's attention from his speech, but only last year we wrote off more than $2,000,000,000 of these Government obligations.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. We wrote off money these agencies had given outright, not as a loan, but as a gift to the relief agencies.

Mr. BREWSTER. Why did we have to write that off?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. It was just a financial device to get money into the hands of the relief agencies at a time of real emergency.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. We have heard a great deal of criticism on the floor of this Chamber, have we not, to the effect that many of these Government lending and credit agencies have been overcautious.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes; we have in some cases.

Now I want to say a few words on the subject of money, because I have a bill before the House, H. R. 4931, which I believe in very deeply and which is the main reason I have asked this time today. I know that one argument that may be made against that bill or any other similar bill that attempts to free the American people and their Government from their present bondage to the private bankers of the country is going to be the argument that we must have sound money. And so at the outset I want to make it plain that my bill will give us a far sounder money than we have now—for most of our money today consists, as I shall show, of nothing substantial at all but merely of bankers' promises to pay, backed by the credit of the people's government. I shall show that this so-called sound money disappears and reappears as bank loans are called or new ones made and that the whole affair is essentially a hit-and-miss proposition.

Under H. R. 4931 the value of our money would be maintained at a decently stable level and its volume geared to the flow of goods and services in the Nation. We would have a far sounder money than we have ever had before, for it would be money that could not be inflated or deflated but would bear a constant relationship to the real wealth of America.

TO KEEP A "FREE ECONOMY"

We in this country and in this House are frequently confronted with a great many talks on the general subject, What is the matter with America? I am one of those who believe that our country basically is the greatest country in the world, that it is going to remain that way; and I think that one reason for it is that the American people have always had the ability when confronted with a new and difficult problem to make an adjustment to the problem. We are called upon to make such an adjustment now. I am hopeful it can be made in the field of improving the flow of buying power in the Nation. I firmly desire to maintain a Nation of freedom for the individual, and to the greatest possible extent, a free economy, and in my remarks this afternoon I am going to point out to you what I believe is necessary to be done to maintain a system where we do enjoy a basic freedom such as has always marked America. I am convinced that our ability to do this depends upon our ability to see that the flow of purchasing power in the Nation matches the capacity of our farms and industries to produce. If we cannot do that then we are going to have great difficulty in maintaining freedom in our economic system. So it is with this idea in view and with this hope in mind that I am speaking to you this afternoon.

I am convinced that the industries of America would be producing a great abundance of goods in this country today if we did just one thing, if we saw to it that that one hundred or more billions of dollars' worth of goods and services could be distributed regularly and continuously to the consumers of the Nation. People are in want today not because there are not raw materials and not because our producers cannot produce goods but simply because there has been a break-down in our system of distribution; and remember that money is the link that ties production on the one hand to consumption on the other; it is the vital link that connects these two functions.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. BURDICK. We hear complaint as to what we are going to do with all this surplus cotton. We are trying to find an outlet for it. Does not the gentleman think we have an outlet for it right here at home?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am positive that we have. This by way of preface.

THREE ESSENTIALS OF WORKABLE MONETARY SYSTEM

My bill, H. R. 4931, consists of three parts, and I am not coming to those right away, but I want to get them before you. The first is the establishment of a central monetary authority in this country. The second is giving this monetary authority the powers necessary to control our monetary system, which no agency has now. The third is specifying in a mandate from the Congress how these powers shall be used to promote the general prosperity and welfare of the people of the country.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED TO THE CONSTITUTION?

The Constitution has a clause in it, article I, section 8, which says that Congress shall "coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin."

Does this mean that Congress shall coin pennies and quarters? The Supreme Court has decided in the Legal Tender cases that this power also included control over the issuance of bank notes and paper money. And surely, since over 90 percent of our business is done with what may be termed "check-book money" or bank credit, the power of Congress to regulate the value of money would be meaningless unless it extends to this money substitute as well. And so I believe the constitutional duty of Congress to regulate the value of money must extend to all kinds of money, including check-book money.

What today actually does regulate the value of the purchasing power of our money in this country? There are four agencies in this Nation which, as a matter of fact, have something to do with it. In the first place, the United States Treasury issues silver certificates in exchange for silver bought from domestic or foreign producers. In the second place, the mint, when it pays United States notes for newly mined gold at the rate of $35 an ounce, and when it coins the small change of the country—the pennies, nickels, dimes, quarters, half dollars and silver dollars. In the third place, the Federal Reserve System, when it issues Federal Reserve notes and extends Federal Reserve credit to the member banks of the Federal Reserve System. In the fourth place, our 15,000 commercial banks, when they create check-book money in the process of making loans. So I can say without fear of contradiction that it is not the Congress which coins the money of the Nation, and not the Congress which regulates its value, but four different agencies, of which the two most important are the privately owned Federal Reserve System and the privately owned 15,000 commercial banks of the Nation. Each of these four agencies I have mentioned can by increasing or decreasing the volume of our money affect its value. If there are many dollars in active circulation, the individual dollar buys fewer goods and services than if dollars are scarce. The power of these agencies to affect the volume of our money therefore gives them power to regulate its value.

In addition, we have given the President the power to change the gold content of the dollar, and we have given the Secretary of the Treasury the power to change the price of silver and gold and of the foreign exchanges. These discretionary powers were given these gentlemen at a time when the country was in a state of emergency and in the absence of any governmental agency which might have been prepared to use these powers for the purpose of protecting the dollar from detrimental influences from abroad. Recently there has been a demand to abolish these powers. My bill provides that these powers shall be taken from the President and Secretary of the Treasury and given to the monetary authority set up in my bill.

Under this condition I am willing to take the powers away from the Executive, but so long as we do not have a properly constituted monetary authority set up by the Congress to do that job, just so long I am not willing to take this power away from the President and the Secretary of the Treasury and place it in the hands of the privately owned Federal Reserve System.

By far the most powerful agency in our Government that regulates the value of our money is the Federal Reserve System. The Board of Governors of that system exerts a tremendous influence over the commercial banks of this country by opening up market operations and by buying bonds in the open market it can put new money into the banks and put them into a position to expand deposit currency; by selling Government bonds it can reduce the cash resources of the banks and thus enforce contraction.

The Board has power to change the reserve requirements of banks; that is, it may say to the banks that instead of holding $12 of cash behind $100 of demand deposits the banks now must hold $20 of cash reserve; in this manner the Board may reduce the ability of the banks to expand or the Board may lower reserve requirements and thus facilitate the possible expansion of bank money. But nowhere does the Board have any power to actually and directly bring about an expansion of the actively circulating money in this country. It can cut it down if it wants to, and it can put more reserves into the banks, but it cannot get that bank credit out of the banks and into use throughout the Nation.

HOW OUR PRESENT SYSTEM WAS SUPPOSED TO WORK

Our present banking system was supposed to function on the principle of "automatic expansion." Let us see whether it does. It was assumed that as more goods and services were being produced the necessary expansion in the volume of means of payment was to be automatically brought about by additional borrowing by business from the banks. The money thus created would again automatically be destroyed as business repaid its bank loans after having been paid itself. In this manner the volume of our means of payment was supposed to expand and contract with the volume of short-term or self-liquidating commercial loans. The banks monetized temporarily goods in process of production or distribution. In actual practice, however, what happened? What has really happened is that in times when we did not need an expansion in this manner, when a boom was in progress, these credits have been expanded vigorously, even though the country certainly did not need more money in circulation, and, on the other hand, credits and loans have been contracted sharply at times when more money was desperately needed to overcome deflation, bankruptcy, and depression. The system has and must by its very nature continue to work exactly in the opposite direction from the public interest of the United States.

Another practice that has grown up recently is the practice of monetizing not only short-term, self-liquidating loans but long-term loans and the purchase of securities. In this manner the banks have interfered with what is essentially the function of savings, since savings must in the end be the source of funds for long-term investment. They have also disturbed the rate of interest on long-term investment and, most serious of all, by creating demand deposits on the basis of long-term loans which could not be repaid within reasonably short periods of time, the banks filled their portfolios with slow assets which froze completely when in the depression of 1929–33 they were supposed to be repaid.

This monetization of long-term loans contributed substantially to the failure of about 10,000 banks in this depression. Likewise, the monetization of securities purchases not only sent the stock market skyrocketing but provided the banks with assets of fictitiously high value and led straight to the stock market crash of 1929, the deflation of those values, and disaster not only for the banks but for everyone else.

We have come into a period where the banks are not willing any longer to supply America with a circulating medium through the process of monetizing these loans of various kinds. I do not want to go into the reasons for that, but I do know that it is true. Furthermore, our industries have found other means of financing themselves. They have built up cash reserves in some cases and they have offered their investments directly to the public for purchase, so that the trend seems to be in the direction of not more but less commercial loans. I am not blaming anybody for this, but I am pointing out that we are in an indefensible position when we contend that America can continue to depend upon the creation of bank credit brought into circulation through the making of loans for the very existence of a circulating medium in this country.

Congress' responsibility to coin money and regulate its value, therefore, has been delegated to a number of different agencies. In some instances this power has been usurped, but the central responsibility for keeping in circulation the amount of money this Nation needs to carry on an expanding trade has been placed nowhere, nor is there any agency to which has been given the definite responsibility of regulating the value of money so as to give us the stability of purchasing power without which the exchange value of every service and every commodity and the size of every debt is subject to change without notice and without regard to consequences. Without that stability, all business is a gamble, periodic farm foreclosures are a certainty, and the honest investor is at the mercy of the smart speculator.

The Federal Reserve Board has recently delivered itself of a number of statements, the gist of which boil down approximately to this, that there is very little that the Board can do about it, that, after all, the trouble is that the people get discouraged sometimes and then they get encouraged at other times, and it is pretty hard for the Board to have any effective influence on economic conditions in the country.

If you will look through the statements of the Board made from time to time in the past, you will find they said that what the Board is supposed to do is to work for "economic stability," but they never have told us just what that economic stability was nor just exactly how they were going to work toward it.

I do not propose to go into a long talk today about the Federal Reserve Board, except to say that I am convinced that what this country needs today is not people who will say, "This is none of our responsibility" and not people who will say, "Because we cannot solve the entire problem, therefore we do not propose to do anything," but rather people who can give us a constructive program and a direction in which we can move toward a solution of this economic problem.

H. R. 4931 SETS UP REAL MONETARY AUTHORITY

In this bill it is proposed that we set up a new Federal Reserve Board consisting of seven members, as it does now. It is proposed that the present so-called open-market committee be abolished and that its powers be put into the hands of the Board, and that the Board be given the power to determine the price of gold and silver and to buy these precious metals, and to determine foreign exchange rates. The Board is not required to buy gold from abroad, but may do so if it sees fit.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yeld?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Some of our conservative friends are opposing the change of our national debt limit that is being advocated, and wherein it is proposed that we should increase the debt limit of $45,000,000,000. Those of us who would like to use the Government's credit could well join with them and oppose it, could we not, so as to force the use of the Government's credit instead of these tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I believe that logically we certainly could. I am not ready to say definitely what my position will be at that time, but I think that logically the gentleman is absolutely correct and that we have been attempting through all this time to borrow into circulation the volume of money necessary to accommodate business in this country, and paying interest on it, when as a matter of fact the Government credit was really behind every dollar of the bank credit that has been borrowed into circulation during this time. The bonds themselves have backed the very credit on which the bond's interest has been paid.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. Does the gentleman feel we have too much or too little money now in circulation?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I believe we have too little money in circulation.

Mr. BREWSTER. The gentleman wants to get it out?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. BREWSTER. In spite of the enormous possibilities of inflation?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am coming to a provision in my bill that will be the answer to what the gentleman has in mind. I do not know whether I am going to get there, but I am coming to it.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 10 additional minutes to complete his statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LARRABEE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman very much.

TWELVE FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS SHOULD BE GOVERNMENT INSTITUTIONS

Most important of all in connection with the establishment of a central monetary agency that can really handle this job, my bill provides exactly what the gentleman from Texas has been talking about this afternoon, as does also a very excellent bill of the gentleman [Mr. PATMAN], for the Government purchase of the capital stock of the 12 Federal Reserve banks, which I believe to be essential and necessary. After all, the Federal Reserve banks are the banks of issue of the United States of America and as such they ought to be national institutions. They have been given gold certificates which give them a certain lien against a portion of this gold stock.

They execute the open-market policy of the Board, and as a matter of fact, purchase with Government credit Government bonds when they see fit. Anybody that wants to ask that question and find out the truth about it will find that when the Federal Reserve Board goes out and buys bonds it buys those bonds with pure Government credit. I believe the advantage from being able to do that should accrue to the American people and not to an institution that is the property of a certain number of member banks.

Furthermore, if this were done, if some $132,000,000 were spent to acquire the capital stock of these banks, we would obtain a definite answer to all the confusion, whatever it may be, that exists about this gold. Then we would be in a position to utilize those 12 Federal Reserve banks as the central factors in giving us a monetary system that really could be controlled. But even that is not a complete answer to the problem, nor does it answer the question that the gentleman from Maine has just mentioned.

All these powers are still insufficient to give the Board complete control over the volume of our money, because nine-tenths of our business is carried on by means of demand bank deposits created by the commercial banks on the basis of fractional reserves.

Now, how, specifically, can the commercial banks create money? They can do it, because they are required to hold on the average only about $20 in cash for every $100 they lend and promise to furnish on demand. The promises of the bank to furnish money are permitted to circulate as money, and they perform the functions of money, provided the people do not all come to the bank and ask for their money. If they do, as they did in 1932 and 1933, they find the money is not there, and unless the Government interferes the banks fail. Ten thousand banks disappeared in this depression, largely because their depositors asked for their money, which they believed they had in the banks.

It is a little difficult for me to understand the criticism of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] of the guaranty of bank deposits, because I think that is the main reason we have not had a similar situation since that time.

What the people actually had in the banks were merely the banks' promises to pay on demand. The banks "were sorry"—so were the depositors.

This practice of permitting the banks' promises to circulate as money actually affects the volume of our money in circulation in this manner. When a bank makes a loan, what it lends is not actual money but its "credit," and this credit takes the form of a "demand deposit." The bank credits the account of its customer with, say, $1,000, and he can draw against this $1,000 as if it were actually in the bank. The bank has, by a stroke of the pen, increased its demand liabilities and also the total of demand deposits in circulation in the country. Reversely, when the loan is repaid to the bank, the demand deposits of that bank are reduced by that $1,000, and the total of all demand deposits in circulation are reduced by that much. This is how bank loans first increase and then decrease the volume of money in the country. It is the process that accounted for the destruction of $8,000,000,000 of America's circulating medium between 1929 and 1932, when the banks were calling and refusing to renew outstanding loans, and when the real property of the American people was falling once again into banks' hands because the people could not make good in cash the promises the bankers had loaned to them.

So it seems to me that if we are going to ever have a controlled monetary system we have got to say that behind demand deposits the banks have to carry one dollar for every dollar of demand deposits outstanding. We have got to make a distinction between the demand deposits which function like money, on the one hand, and savings and investments upon the other. We have got to require that banks hold demand deposits in trust for their deposits. H. R. 4931 provides for exactly that.

If we require the banks to hold a real dollar or a deposit in a Federal Reserve bank or a Government bond behind their demand deposits, then we will know that if there is a certain volume of demand deposits in existence in the country that that is real money, that it cannot be manipulated upward or downward in hit-or-miss fashion by 15,000 different banks. Then and only then will we be able to have a controllable system.

Furthermore—and this is the main reason for this provision—if we find then that we need in circulation an additional volume of money in order to compensate for increased productive capacity or increased population, we can safely put in circulation an increased volume of money without laying the basis for a possible 6-to-1 expansion in the form of bank credits based on 20-percent reserves. It is important also to have a much greater degree of segregation between the investment and savings department of a bank on the one hand and the demand deposit department upon the other. Savings and time deposits are, in effect, investments on the part of the depositor who comes to the bank and says to the bank, "Here is some of my money, please invest it for me"; but when a man makes a demand deposit he means that he wants to be able to get that money at a moment's notice and that demand deposit really amounts to actual cash.

This 100-percent reserve system I am proposing is not a new system at all. It is the original system of deposit banking as it was carried on for centuries. The fractional reserve system is relatively young. It dates from the seventeenth century and was invented by the goldsmiths of London who, because they had facilities for storage, were entrusted with the precious metal and money of the people of London. The goldsmiths soon found out that the people were satisfied to transfer their deposits by means of the receipts the goldsmiths had given them, and seldom asked for their money. So the goldsmiths handed out more receipts than they had metal or money in storage, thus beginning the system of pyramiding deposits. It was essentially a breach of trust, but it soon became such a general practice that people ceased to think of the system of fractional reserve banking as a sort of legalized fraud which, strictly speaking, it really is.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Does gold enter in upon this monetary scheme outlined in the gentleman's bill?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I believe that gold is mostly a psychological proposition.

Mr. HINSHAW. Does it enter in as a base of this money in any way?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I have not brought it into the bill at all as a required base.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is it in circulation?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Not in direct fashion. I do feel that for psychological reasons gold as a reserve behind our money and credit is perhaps useful, but I think it is only useful because the people think it is. I believe what gives money its value is what the money will buy.

Mr. HINSHAW. I believe it is generally conceded that the Government under the present Gold Purchase Act is purchasing in the neighborhood of one and a half billion dollars of gold per year at $35 an ounce.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Sometimes we do, and sometimes we do not purchase that amount.

Mr. HINSHAW. It is on the average about that.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Then it would be conceded that the people of the United States are exchanging for that approximately one and a half billion dollars worth of goods and services.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Most of that gold has been bought by issuing bonds.

Mr. HINSHAW. And if purchased abroad, it must also sell foreign exchange.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I think so.

Mr. HINSHAW. If we were to completely abandon the use of gold for money, as the rest of the world practically has today, what would the gentleman guess would be the free market price per ounce for gold?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I do not want to guess; but I do know this: That we are in effect off the gold standard. All the Government of the United States is doing is maintaining a certain price for gold which pertains throughout the world. The main thing about it is this: If the private banks had that gold, or if the Federal Reserve banks had gold certificates against it, as they do for part of it, they are privileged to expand at the ratio of two and a half dollars of notes for every dollar of gold they have——

Mr. HINSHAW. I admit that.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. But I want the gentleman to admit more. The Treasury when it has the gold is forestalled from utilizing the gold as a basis for expansion. It occurs to me that it would not hurt so much if we bought that gold, providing that we could use it as a basis for expansion. I do not think gold is necessary. I think it is psychologically useful.

Mr. HINSHAW. I agree with the gentleman; but under the circumstances we do not have gold monetized in this country, but simply the statement in which we say that our Federal Reserve currency is backed by 40 percent gold.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. It is backed by gold certificates, and they are supposed to be a call on the gold, which the Federal Reserve banks cannot get.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is a fiction, that we could get the gold.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. We know that it will not disappear. They are pretty safe about it. My main objection is that the Federal Reserve gets the gold certificates at all and that the advantages from the possession of the gold do not accrue to the whole American people.

Mr. HINSHAW. I want to know what the gold is worth when it is not used for currency.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am in favor of making use of the gold as a backing for credit and currency, but I do not want to be understood as saying that it is a single bit necessary to have gold backing in order to maintain the value of our money.

Mr. HINSHAW. I want to know what the loss is we will suffer through purchasing it.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. We would not suffer any serious loss at all, providing we put our Government in the position which any sovereign government ought to hold—namely the position of being the only agency in the Nation that has the right to bring money or credit originally into circulation. To put our Government in that position is the main purpose of my bill.

THE CENTRAL PRINCIPLE

And now in the few moments I have left let me say with the greatest possible emphasis that the main reason for depriving the banking system of its power to create money as the 100 percent reserve system would do is in order to place this power in the hands of a public agency of the American people, acting under direction of the Congress.

If, by the introduction of 100 percent reserves we put the banks in the position of making loans not with fiat credit but with real money we must then see to it that the money-creating power is exercised in the public interest by the Government of the United States itself. This should always have been the case, but in recent years every time it has been proposed for the Government to expand the volume of money by using some of the gold or in some other way, the objection has always, and I think quite properly, been raised that to do so would inevitably add to the excess reserves in the banks and to the consequent danger of an uncontrolled inflation of bank credit at some future time.

And let me say here, emphatically, that my main reason, though not the only one, for wanting 100-percent reserves is in order to give us a controllable monetary system and one in which the Congress can safely provide for bringing into circulation regularly, year by year, a volume of money and/or credit which bears a scientific relationship to the needs of the Nation, its people, and its businesses for such money. This is the end and aim of my whole bill. It is the only way we can obtain stability in the buying power of our dollar over considerable periods of time. H. R. 4931 will give us that stability.

And the justification and argument for it are these. Money, in any sane economy, must be the means of moving goods and services from producer to consumer. It should not be a factor that decides whether goods and services are to be moved from producer to consumer, neither should it be an all-important commodity bought and sold like other commodities and subject to manipulation for private advantage by those who deal in and control it. So far as possible, the relation of money to commodities—its value in terms of commodities—should be constant, for until this is the case we will not produce our goods and services for the good and logical reason that they are needed and can be sold at a fairly assured value, but will instead continue to produce goods only when we think their value in terms of money is going to rise and will refrain from producing them when we think their value in terms of money is going to fall. Until we have a dollar whose purchasing and debt-paying power will remain relatively constant for a generation—as the President has said—we cannot proceed with any assurance to the solution of the problem of the unjustly high prices for monopoly goods and services and the unjustly low prices for agricultural products. To those who contend that due to declining costs of production we should seek a declining price level I have two answers. First, that as a historical fact we never have had any period of prosperity on the declining price level, and that so long as we retain a free economic system we never can expect production and employment to be full on a declining price level. And second, that if Government controls the issue of money and can direct it into the hands of those who need and will spend it—as, for example by paying pensions to the aged—the benefits of declining production costs will be passed on to the consumers of the Nation even more certainly than can be done by a declining general price level with its almost certain consequence of unemployment.

THE PEOPLE'S MONEY

For these reasons my bill provides that the function of creating money, removed from the hands of private banks by the 100 percent reserve system, shall be exercised by the Federal Reserve Board as agent of the Congress.

The economic advantage from the creation of money and credit would accrue to the Government and people of the United States under the terms of this bill. Unless that economic advantage does accrue to the whole people, there can never be a balance between production and consumption in the Nation and we will face the break-down of our free institutions. In the past the commercial banks have failed disastrously to supply this need. As we have seen, the banks have invariably expanded when they should have contracted, and contracted when they should have expanded. Instead of increasing our debt, as we now do, in order to increase our volume of money, we will in the future, if this bill passes, reduce our debt with every dollar of new money put into circulation.

LIMIT TO INCREASE IN MONEY IS PRODUCTIVE-CAPACITY SOLUTION TO PROBLEM OF NATIONAL DEBT

H. R. 4931 does not propose inflation nor deflation. It provides for a sufficient increase in the volume of money to maintain stability in the dollar in an economy of expanding production. It says the more consumers there are and the larger volume of production there is, the more money is needed to move the goods and services.

If we would do this, pass this bill, put this one factor to work, we would free America from her bondage to debt. The fact is the people of the Nation by their industry and their inventiveness are even now paying off that debt. Only our bookkeeping system does not give them credit for it, but says to the people's Government, "You must never monetize the net increase in national population and productive capacity until you have made your propitiation in the form of interest to those who now hold the monopoly of the right to create your money."

Under H. R. 4931, approximately half of the national debt would, in effect, be turned into cash upon passage of the bill. For bonds held by the banks would be required to be held as part of reserves behind demand deposits and would, as they matured, be paid off by public creation of credit even as they were bought in the first place by private creation of credit. The interest on the bonds which the banks would receive, meanwhile, would be like compensation to them for their services to demand depositors and would be the means of keeping service charges low or making them, in some instances, unnecessary. Furthermore, the bill provides that as expansion of the volume of money is called for one of the ways it can be used is for retirement of the public debt. The passage of this bill would, therefore, allay once and for all the concern of this Nation over the public debt situation. Instead of trying to pay old debt by contracting new debt or adding to taxes, we would have a system whereby the people of America, through the process of increasing wealth production, would earn into circulation the money with which to pay their debt.

There are many matters concerning this bill that I have not been able to touch; many questions that I know remain unanswered. I shall try to complete my defense of this legislation—and that of other Members who are working in this field—at a later date. I hope I have helped to open the way for further constructive thought and discussion.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

SENATE

TUESDAY, APRIL 4, 1939

(Legislative day of Monday, April 3, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Saviour of the world, at whose coming the springs of our humanity were purified, and by whose life the ways of God were justified to men: Help us at this holy season to unbar our hearts to the wondrous things Thou dost impart. Man of Sorrows, Fountain of Love, give to us all in our every endeavor the deftness of love, and in all our deliberations the wisdom of love; and may we truly share with Thee Thy love made perfect through suffering. We pray for all who are trouble-tossed and weary, for all in whose homes there is sorrow and woe, for all those broken beneath the blows of adversity, for the transgressor scourged at length by his own deeds, for all prisoners and captives, and for all who are desolate and oppressed.

Let Thine arms of everlasting mercy be about us still and evermore, Thou blessed Burden Bearer, 'till the last lost sheep of the wilderness is brought back home and every note of sadness turned to joy. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, April 3, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	La Follette	Radcliffe
Andrews	Downey	Lee	Reed
Ashurst	Ellender	Lodge	Reynolds
Austin	Frazier	Logan	Russell

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] is absent from the Senate because of a death in his family.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are unavoidably detained.

Mr. MCNARY. I announce that the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] is absent because of a death in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES IN THE CANAL ZONE

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, on March 14 the Senate passed Senate bill 1215, to amend the Canal Zone Code. It is a bill recommended by the War Department, having to do only with two very meritorious cases in the Panama Canal Zone. Almost at the same time the House passed House bill 3577. The Senate bill was referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in the House, and the House bill was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals in the Senate.

Inasmuch as the bills are identical and each of them has already passed the House in which it originated, and each embodies a meritorious proposition which is recommended by the War Department, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interoceanic Canals be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 3577, and further ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri for the discharge of the committee? The Chair hears none, and the Committee on Interoceanic Canals is discharged from the further consideration of House bill 3577.

The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 3577) to amend the Canal Zone Code was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of subsection (b) of section 94 of title 2, Canal Zone Code, as amended by section 2 of the act of June 24, 1936 (49 Stat. 1904), is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Any employee to whom this article applies who shall have served for a total period of not less than 5 years, and who, before becoming eligible for retirement under the conditions defined in section 92 of this title, shall have become totally disabled for useful and efficient service in the grade or class of position occupied by the employee, by reason of disease or injury not due to vicious habits, intemperance, or willful misconduct on the part of the employee, shall upon his own application or upon request or order of the Governor of the Panama Canal, be retired on an annuity computed in accordance with the provisions of section 96 of this title: Provided, That proof of freedom from vicious habits, intemperance, or willful misconduct for a period of more than 5 years next prior to becoming so disabled for useful and efficient service shall not be required in any case; and the claim of any employee which was or would have been disallowed under this section by reason of the requirement of such proof with respect to a longer period than 5 years shall upon request of the applicant be reinstated and shall thereupon be redetermined under the provisions of the section as herein amended: Provided further, That such claim is now on file with the Civil Service Commission or is executed within 6 months from the enactment of this act.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for an additional appropriation of $150,000,000 for the Works Progress Administration, as recommended by the President, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from Gordon B. Jackson, of Brooklyn, N. Y., relative to his ideas and designs for aircraft to promote safety in the air, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from Potenciana Casuga, of San Fernando, La Union, P. I., praying that a pension be granted her as the widow of a former soldier, Jose B. Nisperos, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GEORGE presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Georgia praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. HOLMAN (for himself and Mr. McNARY) presented memorials, signed by over 14,000 citizens of the State of Oregon, remonstrating against the shipment of arms and war materials to Japan for use in operations against China, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. REED presented petitions of 19 citizens of Ellsworth County, 19 citizens of Kiowa County, 116 citizens of Wilson County, 94 citizens of Riley County, 49 citizens of Reno County, 37 citizens of Rush County, 394 citizens of Montgomery County, 80 citizens of Elk County, 53 citizens of Geary County, 88 citizens of Grant County, 53 citizens of Marion County, 440 citizens of McPherson County, 141 citizens of Stafford County, 51 citizens of Stevens County, 78 citizens of Sherman County, 68 citizens of Trego County, 282 citizens of Shawnee County, 123 citizens of Morris County, 105 citizens of Nemaha and Brown Counties, 29 citizens of Morton County, 545 citizens of Osborne and Smith Counties, 78 citizens of Mitchell County, 193 citizens of Ottawa County, 85 citizens of Norton County, 92 citizens of Wyandotte County, 26 citizens of Crawford County, 23 citizens of Woodson County, 74 citizens of Wabaunsee County, 91 citizens of Ness County, 824 citizens of Rice County, 135 citizens of Republic County, 79 citizens of Russell County, 75 citizens of Osage County, 59 citizens of Rawlins County, 29 citizens of Pawnee County, 81 citizens of Pratt County, 63 citizens of Phillips County, 78 citizens of Barber County, 124 citizens of Butler County, 121 citizens of Bourbon County, 19 citizens of Chase County, 70 citizens of Clay County, 132 citizens of Clark County, 74 citizens of Cherokee County, 26 citizens of Cowley County, 34 citizens of Cloud County, 38 citizens of Cheyenne County, 691 citizens of Crawford County, 105 citizens of Douglas County, 85 citizens of Dickinson County, 1,101 citizens of Sedgwick County, 118 citizens of Johnson County, 104 citizens of Linn County, 320 citizens of Lyon County, 311 citizens of Jackson County, 55 citizens of Jewell County, 127 citizens of Hodgeman County, 59 citizens of Harvey County, 116 citizens of Jefferson County, and 143 citizens of Ford County, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. KING presented a resolution of the Hawaii Equal Rights Commission, favoring amendment of the so-called Ellender sugar bill (S. 69) so as to eliminate therefrom any and all discriminatory provisions, existing or potential, against the Territory of Hawaii, its people or industries, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution of the Hawaii Equal Rights Commission, favoring an increase in the appropriation for the Hawaiian Agricultural Experiment Station from $55,000 to $80,000, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. NYE presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of North Dakota praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

House Concurrent Resolution 132

Concurrent resolution relating to an amendment to the enabling act of February 22, 1889

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring therein):

Whereas a considerable portion of the lands, granted by the enabling act, approved February 22, 1889, to the State of North Dakota for educational purposes, and lying in the southwestern part of the State, are suitable primarily only for grazing purposes; and

Whereas such grazing lands are not now, and probably never will be, worth the minimum price of $10 per acre, fixed as the minimum price for the sale of lands so granted and, therefore, cannot be sold and disposed of by the State for the benefit of the permanent school funds; and

Whereas by the terms and conditions of section 11 of said act, as amended by act of Congress, approved June 25, 1938, such grazing lands may be leased in quantities not exceeding one section to any one person or company for terms not longer than 10 years; and

Whereas experience has shown that it is impracticable to lease said grazing lands upon such terms, thereby depriving said permanent school funds of any applicable benefit from said lands; and

Whereas there are now in existence several cooperative grazing associations, the members of which are bona fide residents of the State of North Dakota, engaged in the principal occupation of the raising of livestock, who would lease said grazing lands in large quantities from the State, if such leases could lawfully be made: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to further amend section 11 of the enabling act, approved February 22, 1889, to provide that such portions of the lands, granted by said act to the State of North Dakota for educational purposes, as are suitable primarily only for grazing purposes, may be sold only to the United States Government at a price not less than $1 per acre; and further providing that such grazing lands may be leased to bona fide cooperative grazing associations in quantities not exceeding 20 sections to any one such cooperative grazing association.

ASSOCIATED FARMERS OF CALIFORNIA

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I have received a telegram from the Associated Farmers of California. I am not familiar with the facts therein set forth; but because I believe in the sacred American right of self-defense, and because I believe every man is entitled to his day in court and his right to be heard upon any charges that may be made against him, I ask unanimous consent that the telegram may be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The telegram referred to is as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., April 4, 1939.

Hon. HIRAM W. JOHNSON,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.:

This supplements previous wire. On March 31 a number of serious charges were made concerning the Associated Farmers of California in a dispatch sent out from Washington by Bruce Catton, N. E. A. Service Washington correspondent. This disptach gives as its source a Senate Civil Liberties Committee report to be filed with the Senate immediately. These charges cannot go unanswered.

The Associated Farmers have been given no hearing by the La Follette committee and no opportunity to present their side of the case. Indeed, they have not even been advised of any charges, or what conclusions have been reached concerning them by the La Follette committee, except in the dispatch above mentioned, which expressly states that "no part of the report has yet been disclosed."

Decency and fair dealing, to say nothing of the basic principle of American law expressly guaranteeing a fair trial, should dictate that the Associated Farmers have an opportunity to prove or disprove the charges mentioned in the dispatch, if, as, and when made.

So that Congress and the public may be advised, we herewith set forth our position, which we respectfully request be read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. We shall take up the charges as made and meet them.

First, it is charged that the Associated Farmers of California is a front organization for railroads, public utilities, and big business interests, and dominated by them. We reply and can prove that the Associated Farmers is in fact an association of California farmers, some 30,000 in number, all of whom pay regular dues, beginning at $1 per year, into the association's funds. It is not dominated by the groups mentioned; on the contrary, the directors and officers are elected by the local farmer memberships in each county.

Second, it is charged that we operate to break up labor organizations and prevent labor organizations from taking hold among the agricultural workers of the west coast. We reply that the Associated Farmers of California do not oppose organized labor. Contrary to the statement made in the dispatch, we have no objection to organization of rural workers. We do object, and strongly, to domination of agricultural workers by certain metropolitan union leaders, such as Harry Bridges. We do object to attempts to control the food supply of the State by such men. We do oppose sabotage and destruction of crops by anyone supposedly acting in the name of organized labor. We believe that the serious problems confronting agriculture in California can and should be worked out within the existing fabric of the Government, and we therefore oppose those who seek to cripple and destroy our present economic and social structure. The Associated Farmers do this at the behest of no group and act solely on their own convictions.

Third, it is charged that we cooperate with sheriffs' offices, county prosecutors, and State officials. We frankly admit that the Associated Farmers do cooperate with the sheriffs' offices and the other authorities duly elected and vested with the power to enforce the law. This is in accordance with the democratic tradition and our duty as citizens. If there has been any denial of civil liberties by these officials, they are accountable under the law.

Fourth, the charge is made that huge private arsenals are maintained, including a sizable warehouse of submachine guns and sawed-off shotguns, for use in case of labor trouble. Our answer is that this is pure fabrication. The Associated Farmers has never spent $1 for or acquired from any source any guns, ammunition, tear gas, or other weapons.

Undoubtedly, mistakes have been made by members of the Associated Farmers. Men who see their crops destroyed before their eyes, gasoline poured on lettuce, fruit rot on trees, deliveries to market halted on the public highways of the State by lawless men acting in the name of labor do not always act reasonably. We point out, however, that farmers under such circumstances have usually been subjected to great provocation. We seek to correct our mistakes. We want to solve the agricultual problems of the State on a basis that is fair for all. These problems cannot be solved on a name-calling basis such as has been initiated by the personnel of the La Follette committee. They can be solved only by an objective consideration of the problems and around the council table.

Duplicate to Senator SHERIDAN DOWNEY requesting he cooperate with you.

HAROLD E. POMEROY,
Executive Secretary, Associated Farmers of California, Inc.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 917. An act authorizing the Library of Congress to acquire by purchase, or otherwise, the whole, or any part, of the papers of Charles Cotesworth Pinckney and Thomas Pinckney, including therewith a group of documents relating to the Constitutional Convention of 1787, now in the possession of Harry Stone, of New York City;

RECIPROCAL TAXATION OF FEDERAL AND STATE OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3790) relating to the taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I understand that the amendment now before the Senate is the amendment relative to the taxation of the salaries of Federal judges.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I assume that this bill will not require very long discussion today. I wish to say to Senators that at the conclusion of the consideration of the bill now before the Senate I hope the Senate may go into executive session to dispose of the nomination of Mr. Douglas to the Supreme Court; and that after the nomination is disposed of we may then have the calendar called for the consideration of unobjected-to bills.

I simply wish to serve notice that that will be the program.

Mr CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. I understand that the amendment has been submitted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment has been stated, as the Chair understands.

Mr. CONNALLY. I rise, because I desire slightly to modify the amendment. I now offer it with the modification which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the Chair to understand that the Senator from Texas is offering an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; the Senator from Texas on yesterday offered his own amendment. He is now seeking to modify it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Texas is not now pending. Without objection, the amendment yesterday offered by the Senator from Texas will be modified in accordance with his suggestion. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, unless there is objection of some kind to the amendment I offered yesterday, I ask that it be put to a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. GEORGE (and other Senators). Let it be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, after line 10, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 3. Section 22 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: "In the case of judges of courts of the United States who took office on or before June 6, 1932, the compensation received as such shall be included in gross income."

On page 6, after line 3, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 210. In the case of the judges of the Supreme Court, and of the inferior courts of the United States created under article III of the Constitution, who took office on or before June 6, 1932, the compensation received as such shall not be subject to income tax under the Revenue Act of 1938 or any prior revenue act.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield for a question?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan whether the effect of the amendment designated as section 3, amending section 22 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code, is to abolish an express immunity therein contained.

Mr. BROWN. Yes; the Senator is correct in his statement. The effect of the amendment is that all Federal judges, whether appointed before or after 1932, will be subjected to Federal income tax.

Adverting for a moment to section 210, the second paragraph of the amendment, it provides in substance that no tax shall be levied upon such judges prior to January 1, 1938; but that exception does not apply to judges appointed since 1932.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. As to judges appointed since 1932, is it the intention of the Senator to have them taxed retroactively on salaries from the time of their appointment to the present time?

Mr. BROWN. I will say to the Senator that they are now subject to Federal income taxation. They have been taxed since 1932. It has been done through amendments to appropriation bills by revenue acts, which have provided in effect that the compensation of Federal judges appointed since 1932 is the sum of the salary paid minus the tax.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the Senator yield for one further question?

Mr. BROWN. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Should the bill be amended as proposed, and then become a law, does the Senator believe that its effect would be to waive the immunity on salaries of all Federal judges after a certain date?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. What is that date?

Mr. BROWN. January 1, 1939, with respect to judges appointed prior to 1932. Do I make that clear to the Senator?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is clear.

Mr. BROWN. And the bill grants no immunity as to judges who have been heretofore taxed, judges who were appointed since 1932. They will be taxed just as they were prior to the time the bill, if enacted, becomes law.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, just one further question, if the Senator will yield for that purpose. Is it true that House bill 3790 deals particularly with express immunities from taxation, rather than with the implied immunities concerning which the Supreme Court recently rendered a decision?

Mr. BROWN. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that this bill does both. In the first place, it deals with the implied immunities which arose from the so-called immunity rule growing out of the case of McCulloch against Maryland, the Maryland Bank case, decided over 100 years ago. As amended, it also deals with the express immunity granted by the third article of the Constitution, which states, in substance, that the salaries of Federal judges shall not be diminished during their term office, so the bill covers both the implied immunity as applied to all Federal officials, Senators and Representatives, and members of the Cabinet, and so forth, and the express immunity which it is claimed was granted by article III of the Constitution, relative to Federal judges.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, one further question: Does the Senator from Michigan understand that if House bill 3790 should not be enacted and become the law there would still be a question to be determined by the courts respecting express immunities?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Namely, because the decisions heretofore did not determine the question relating to express immunities, but determined only the question with respect to implied immunities?

Mr. BROWN. I think I shall have to make a brief statement in order to answer the question of the Senator from Vermont.

Since the question has arisen, I think the Senate ought to know that this bill will give the Supreme Court an opportunity to overrule the case of Evans against Gore, which quite definitely held, I think about 1919, that a Federal judge's salary was not subject to a Federal income tax. I will say further to the Senator that the question may possibly be reached in a case now pending before the Supreme Court of the United States, the so-called Woodrough case, which involves a judge whose salary is in this situation:

He was appointed a district judge prior to 1932. After 1932 he was elevated to the circuit court of appeals. He is now contending that because of that peculiar situation his salary, as a judge of the circuit court of appeals, should be immune because he was a judge prior to 1932. That case is before the Court.

I understand there are about 34 judges of district and circuit courts of the United States who are contending that they are immune from taxation despite the arrangement which the Congress has made through its appropriation bills to which I have referred. This amendment will give the Court an opportunity once and for all to determine the entire question, and I do not think it can be determined in the thirty-odd cases which are now before the courts.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to make the observation that in voting for these amendments and in voting for the bill I do not desire to have the Court conclude that it was my intention in any degree to afford a presumption of constitutionality to the amendments or to the bill itself. I want it distinctly understood that I think it is expedient for the welfare of the country to have the bill passed and have the Court, if necessary, pass upon its constitutionality, but I want that done as a matter of law, and I want it done without any strength being gained from the fact that the Congress has enacted these amendments or this proposal into law.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator from Vermont for himself may certainly make that reservation; but there is no question, under the accepted practice here and in the courts, that the fact that we pass the bill will lend to it a presumption of constitutionality.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further observation?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I venture to say that perhaps that question of presumption is affected by the rule of majority. I say "perhaps" it is. But I have observed that courts before this have regarded an act of Congress as not creating a presumption when there was expressed in the debates which led up to the vote a reservation of any intention to create such a presumption. I think in recent cases the Court has given respect to such a doubt which arose in the debate in Congress and has treated the enactment of the legislation as the only practical way of submitting to the Court the question of constitutionality.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I question very much in my own mind the constitutionality of the section relating to judges. I expect to support the bill, but I join the Senator from Vermont in saying that at least so far as my own vote is concerned I do not commit myself as accepting the view that this removal of the express immunity is valid under the Constitution.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, if there are no further questions, I do not intend to discuss the constitutionality of the pending amendment further, but if any Senator desires to discuss it, I am ready to endeavor to answer the arguments.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I should not want the expressions of the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Nebraska to be any indication at all that I accept their point of view. If the bill shall pass and go to the Supreme Court, I want it to go, so far as I am concerned, with all the presumptions of constitutionality in its favor it could possibly have, in order that the Supreme Court may in the ordinary course, with such presumption of constitutionality in its favor, pass upon the bill, and overrule the decision in Evans against Gore, which case I think was erroneously decided.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, in connection with the matter of the right of the Federal Government to tax the salaries of its own judges, it seems to me there is still another important question involved in the bill, namely, the question of whether or not the States under this so-called reciprocal principle will have the right to tax the salaries of Federal judges.

It is perfectly apparent that if the Federal Government has no power to tax Federal judges' salaries, the States cannot tax them. Yet it is proposed in the pending bill that we carry out the principle of mutuality, by which the Federal Government will tax the salaries of all State officers, and the States, under section 3 of the bill, will have a similar right to tax the salaries of all Federal officers within their jurisdiction.

If we are to carry out any such theory in good faith, we ought to include Federal judges; and I have an amendment pending to section 3, page 2, to make it clear that the United States Government does consent to the States taxing the salaries of Federal judges. One of the purposes of the amendment is to make it possible for the Supreme Court to reexamine and to repass upon the question which was raised in the case of Evans against Gore, because it seems to me that, if we are to adopt this system, we ought to go the whole way; we ought to act in good faith toward the States. If we are to demand that their officials pay taxes to the Federal Government, then we ought to be willing for the States to tax the salaries of Federal officials.

It will be recalled that the decision in the case of Evans against Gore was based upon the theory that under that article of the Constitution which provides that the salary of a judge shall not be diminished it cannot be diminished even by a tax. I have never thought that decision to be sound; but the Court rendered the decision, which had the force of law. My reason for saying that I never believed it was a sound decision is that I do not believe that the levying on a judge of a nondiscriminatory tax which applies to all other individuals with respect to the same amount of income which they receive from similar sources is an invasion of that protection which the Constitution gives, that a judge's salary shall not be diminished.

If the original judgment in Evans against Gore shall stand, neither the Federal Government, so far as salaries paid prior to 1932 are concerned, nor a State, ever can levy any tax upon the salaries of Federal judges, because if the Federal Government cannot tax them because of the provision of the Constitution, it is also a protection to them as against State taxation.

In its recent opinions the Supreme Court has departed from what I supposed all have understood to be the rule as to the immunity of Federal officers from State taxation, and the immunity of State officers from Federal taxation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will modify his statement that we have all been in agreement. As in the case of the Senator from Texas, we do not agree with the decision, but the decision was made, and as loyal citizens we abide by the decision.

Mr. CONNALLY. In the interest of accuracy of statement I recognize the wisdom of the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska. What the Senator from Texas probably should have said was that we have all generally accepted that theory. So far as the Senator from Texas is concerned, he has always thought that the Supreme Court, away back in the case of McCulloch against Maryland had clearly laid down the policy that neither sovereignty could tax the instrumentalities of the other sovereignty. When the Supreme Court about 2 months ago in the Gerhardt case laid down a rule drawing a distinction between essential State officers and nonessential State officers, I thought that was a sound opinion. I think it perfectly sound because the nonessential officer evidently was not in the contemplation of the Constitution makers. But in the case which was decided only a few days ago, the Supreme Court wipes out all barriers whatever to Federal taxation of State officials.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I agree with the Senator's criticism of what was there done; but it was a situation which the Court could not very well avoid, because the question that was presented to them in the Gerhardt case was whether or not the employee was engaged in an essential or nonessential governmental activity.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true.

Mr. BROWN. And the Court did not have before them the question which they later had before them in the O'Keefe case, as to the soundness of the immunity rule as applied to Federal and State employees.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator; but I still think that the Court could have very properly followed the Gerhardt case and held that the Home Owners' Loan officer was not an essential governmental employee. But that is beside the question. No matter what the occasion, the Supreme Court held that the Federal Government could tax the salary of every State officer, and that means a judge, that means a Governor, that means a member of a legislature.

My contention is that if we are going to carry out the theory of mutuality we should not say to the States, "We will tax your Governor, we will tax your legislators, we will tax your judges, but you shall not tax our judges."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator. I think his position is correct. However, I wish to ask if the Senator really thinks the amendment is necessary?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. It cannot do any harm.

Mr. CONNALLY. It cannot do any harm. I think it is necessary because the language of the bill on page 2, line 13, is as follows: "personal service as an officer or employee of the United States." It might be held that a judge was not an officer of the United States. The courts have held that a Senator is not an officer of the United States, that a Representative is not an officer of the United States. So some judge with a fine-spun theory might hold that a judge was not an officer of the United States. However, without an express declaration I am afraid the court would not reexamine the case of Evans against Gore, and I want the Supreme Court to reexamine that case.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Is not that question now before the Court to be determined?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; I do not think so, I shall say to the Senator. I shall say why I do not think it is. The case of Evans against Gore was decided in 1919, and then we did not undertake to tax judges for some years. In 1932, however, we put an amendment in the revenue bill providing that all judges thereafter appointed should pay the tax. The issue which is before the Court today is in the case of a judge who was in office at the time the Evans against Gore decision was in force, and therefore was held not to be taxable. He was promoted to circuit-court judge after 1932. Having been appointed to that position, the Internal Revenue Department has undertaken to collect a tax on his salary as circuit-court judge, to which position he was appointed after the law became effective. But he contends that because he was a judge before 1932 the mantle of immunity covers him, even though he was appointed to another judicial position after 1932. I doubt very much whether the Court will go into the fundamental question as to whether the tax is a reduction of salary. If it is a diminution of his salary, no State can tax him, notwithstanding our saying that the States may do so.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. In the particular case of Judge Woodrough, I suppose it is conceded by the Government that if he had not been appointed to the circuit court of appeals and still retained his office as a district judge, his salary would not have been taxable under the law of Congress.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Because he was appointed before that law was passed.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. I have an open mind on the subject, but in view of the fact that he was appointed circuit judge after the law was passed, I do not believe the fact that he had been a district judge before and was then immune from taxation has anything to do with the subsequent appointment, admittedly made after that law was passed.

Mr. CONNALLY. I say to the Senator that I thoroughly agree with him, because when he was appointed circuit judge he was appointed to a new office.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, that is so; and the fact that he had been district judge before had nothing to do with the case.

Mr. CONNALLY. He was appointed by the President to a new office. He was confirmed by the Senate to a new position. Of course, his status then was entirely different from that which he occupied prior to that time.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I do not know on what theory the case was presented, but it was presented persuasively enough so that the lower court upheld Judge Woodrough's contention, and the Government thought there was sufficient doubt about the question to take it to the Supreme Court.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I am informed by the counsel for the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation that the lower court agreed with the contention that because Judge Woodrough had been a district judge he was still a judge. I cannot understand that reasoning, but that was the basis of the court's decision. The court did not go into the question of whether or not the immunity rule as stated in the Constitution originally, and as upheld in Evans against Gore, applied. That question was not before the Court.

Mr. CONNALLY. No.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to say to the Senator while I am on my feet that I am in complete agreement with what he says to the effect that every Federal judge should be subject to State income taxation, and I am perfectly willing to accept the Senator's amendment to make it certain that Federal judges may be so taxed by the State authorities.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to say very briefly, if the Senator will permit me, that I am not in agreement, however, with his statement that there is the same reciprocal immunity existing as between State and Federal officials, and that such immunity is just as strong and just as powerful with respect to State officials as it is with respect to Federal officials.

I take the view—and I think it has been the view of the courts through all the years upon this proposition that the Federal Constitution is supreme; that it is the law of Maryland, or of Texas, or of Michigan, just as it is the law of the United States. I take the view that Congress may grant immunity to its officials, to certain of its employees, and that such immunity need not be a reciprocal immunity. The State of Texas has two very able representatives in the Senate and 21 Representatives in the House of Representatives, but the State of Michigan has no representative in the legislature of Texas, and what Texas does by way of taxation of Federal officials affects me. I have no control over that. I am perfectly willing that Federal officials should be subjected to income taxation on the part of the government of the State of Texas, but I think we have the right to grant or withhold immunity, and I do not think it necessarily needs to be reciprocal.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me to reply first to the Senator from Michigan, and then I shall yield to him?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, with some of the statements of the Senator from Michigan I heartily agree. But when he says that the Federal Constitution is supreme the statement ought to be subject to the limitation that it is supreme within the particular province of the Federal Government, and that when it comes to State powers, in matters properly within the jurisdiction of a State, such powers are just as supreme as are the Federal powers within the Federal sphere. Otherwise there could be no dual system. If whatever the Congress does or whatever the Federal Government does overrides the action of the States, then we no longer have a dual system, but a Federal system, an entirely federated centralized Government. I know that the powers of the States through the process of economic change have been gradually diminished, but I cannot agree with the theory that anything the Federal Government may do is superior to and overrides the authority of the States.

The Senator may be correct in his statement that the Federal Government could withhold from the States the right to tax Federal salaries, but in doing so he is clinging onto a fragment of the policy which the bill denounces. The bill denounces the idea that these sovereignties are independent of each other, and it is only upon that theory that we can withhold the right of the States to tax Federal salaries. Upon what other theory can we maintain that position? Only upon the doctrine of might—only upon the doctrine of force.

Mr. BROWN. I disagree with the Senator that it is based on the doctrine of might or force. It is based on the compact that was made between the States and the Federal Government at the time the Constitution was adopted. I think the Senator expresses the situation perfectly when he says that the Federal Government is supreme in that sphere of powers which were granted to the Federal Government, one of which was the taxing power. The immunity rule did not arise out of any action on the part of the Congress of the United States. It did not arise out of any legislation enacted by Congress. It arose out of judicial construction of the Constitution itself. The first time the rule was announced in McCulloch against Maryland, and in all the important constitutional cases since that time, the Court has been careful to point out that the Federal Government's power was supreme in the matters over which the Constitution gave the Federal Government control, and one of those powers is the power of taxation.

The Senator suggests that by so stating I deny the very basis of the bill. I want it to be understood that I consider the immunity granted the State officers a matter of grace on the part of the Federal Government; that we are granting this power on the part of the State to tax Federal officials because we think that it should be so, not that we must do so.

I think the Court has quite definitely and repeatedly said that the power to grant immunity is a power which rests in the Federal Government, within reasonable limitations. The Senator knows that there is nothing now in the legislation which Congress has passed in 150 years which exempts Federal property from taxation by the State governments. There is no specific exemption of a post office. There is no specific exemption of a fort. There is no specific exemption of a naval landing field. However, by reason of the immunity rule which was announced, as well as the plain common sense of the thing, such instrumentalities ought not to be taxed.

There are other activities and instrumentalities which I think should be investigated, so that the immunity rule might be definitely established. To what does it apply and to what does it not apply? I think that is a matter which should be the subject of congressional investigation, because the Supreme Court has done things to the immunity rule in the cases decided in 1939.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Michigan, as well as to the Senator from Texas. I think this debate is exceedingly interesting, but it is directed to a constitutional question which may take us days to settle. It is all on a question not before the Senate. The pending amendment, upon which I think we were just about to vote, is an amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan. The amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is not pending.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is lying on the table. It will come up in a moment.

Mr. NORRIS. That does not make it pending. May we not dispose of the pending amendment and then proceed?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas will not annoy the Senator from Nebraska much longer.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Michigan had the floor. Did the Senator from Michigan conclude?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Michigan, I will state that there is really no substantial difference as to some phases between the view of the Senator from Michigan and my own. However, I wish to suggest that the fact that the States have never undertaken to tax Federal post offices, courthouses, Army posts, and Federal property within the States all goes back to the supposed immunity of each of the governments from taxation by the other. However, that immunity has been largely wiped out by the decision of the Supreme Court as to officers.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Then, the Senator does not accept the position taken by the Senator from Michigan that it is an act of grace on the part of the Federal Government which permits the States now to tax the salaries of Federal judges and officers?

Mr. CONNALLY. Not under the Supreme Court decision. I think it is a matter of right. If we are to carry out in good faith the philosophy announced in the case decided by the Supreme Court a few days ago, then the States ought to have, and we ought graciously to acknowledge that they possess, the power to tax every Federal officer or judge within their jurisdiction.

Mr. MINTON. The only thing that prevented them from doing it up to a few days ago was the implied immunity in Collector against Day and Dobbins against Commissioner.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly.

Mr. MINTON. The implied immunity has now been wiped out?

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly.

Mr. MINTON. So it is not a matter of grace. It is a matter of right, because there is no longer any constitutional inhibition in the opinion of the Supreme Court.

Mr. CONNALLY. I agree with the expressed view.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, may I say a word to the Senator from Indiana? Both Mr. Justice Stone and Mr. Justice Frankfurter in the O'Keefe case expressly stated that the question whether or not the Congress might clothe its employees or its officials with immunity was a question for another day. Of course, the Court did not pass upon the question in that case, because the question was not before the Court. However, if we are to maintain our faith, if we are to carry out in good faith the new philosophy announced by the Supreme Court, we ought to accord to the States as to our officers the same right which we demand as to their officers.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. If a State were discriminating against Federal officers, the Federal Government might withhold the immunity.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, the decision of the Supreme Court is based upon the theory of a nondiscriminatory tax; and if a State should levy a higher rate upon Federal officers than upon similar officers of the State or upon private individuals, I am sure the Court would strike down the act as being beyond the power of the State.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. What concerns me about the Senator's amendment is that I am in favor of permitting the taxation of the salaries of Federal judges; but if the amendment is inserted at the point suggested, and a similar insertion is not made in line 11, does not that imply an exemption of State judges?

Mr. BROWN. The Senator is correct in his statement. The amendment should be included in both places, if necessary.

Mr. TAFT. There is also another fact. If the amendment of the Senator is adopted, it seems to me to exempt Senators and Representatives, because the Senator himself has said that the word "officer" is not construed to include judges. Probably it will not include Senators and Representatives.

Mr. BROWN. I am sure that is not the intention of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I cannot at the moment put my finger on the decision which holds that a Member of Congress is not a Federal officer.

Mr. MINTON. It is the Newberry case, is it not?

Mr. CONNALLY. When the income-tax was under consideration in the House of Representatives, and it was charged over the country that Members of Congress had been exempted, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] delivered a very exhaustive and learned discourse upon whether or not the word "officer" included Members of Congress. We exempted Federal officers, but he held that the word "officer" did not include Senators and Representatives. The Government took that view of the matter, and Members of Congress have been taxed ever since the law went into effect.

Mr. TAFT. The amendment should include Senators and Representatives as well as judges.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am willing that the States should tax them. I am dealing now only with judges.

Mr. TAFT. I am asking whether or not the effect of the Senator's amendment, by admitting that "officer" does not include judges, is necessarily to exempt Senators and Representatives.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that the theory of the decision was that we were elected by the people of the States, and that we were not selected by the Federal Government itself. There are some fine-spun distinctions between a Federal officer, selected by the Federal Government, and one in the status of a Senator or Representative. Of course the Senator from Ohio will observe that I have already stated that if we are to tax the salaries of State officers, every Federal salary, including those of Senators and Representatives, should be taxed. If we tax members of the legislature of a State, the State ought to have authority to tax the Members of the National Legislature.

Mr. President, I believe that is all I care to say. I wish to make it clear that we intend that the States shall have the right to tax Federal judges, so that the Supreme Court will be required to reexamine the fundamental question whether or not a nondiscriminatory tax is in fact a diminution of salary under the constitutional provision.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the Senator's amendment. I think it might clarify the situation. I agree with the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio, that the same language should go into section 1, and I hope the Senator from Texas will modify his amendment to that effect.

Mr. CONNALLY. As I have said Representatives and Senators are now taxed by the Federal Government and should be taxed by the States as Federal officers.

Mr. BROWN. I, too, am interested in judges. I do not agree with the construction placed upon the bill by the Senator from Ohio with regard to Senators and Representatives, because as a matter of fact they have been taxed for a great many years under similar language, and that practice has whatever sanction time has given to it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to say that he is supporting this measure, not because we have the right to pass it as a matter of right, but on some theory of grace. Will the Senator make that point clear? I am having a difficult time to put myself in a frame of mind to vote for the bill at all, not on a constitutional ground, but even if we have the power I do not think it is a wise policy to exercise that power.

Mr. BROWN. I hope the Senator will vote for the bill.

As I stated to the Senator yesterday, the bill arises because of the recent decision in the Gerhardt and O'Keefe cases. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] first introduced a bill to prevent retroactive taxation of salaries of State officers. This bill covers that need among others. It seemed to the committee that it was necessary to define the immunity rule with respect to Federal employees and State employees, because the rule has never been defined. There is now no legislation upon the subject. The taxation which is imposed under the Gerhardt and the O'Keefe cases arose out of a situation in which no one thought that any such persons were subject to the income-tax laws of the respective Governments, State and Federal. My committee, which investigated the subject and reported to the Finance Committee, believed that State and Federal officials should be subject to the income-tax laws. We so advised the Finance Committee, and the bill was reported.

The Senator refers to what I said as to the power of the States to tax Federal officers being a matter of grace. The immunity rule as developed in McCulloch against Maryland and sustained by various cases since that time, including the recently decided cases this year, clearly recognize the supreme power of the Federal Government in matters of taxation; but they leave undecided the question of whether or not the superior Federal authority could clothe its officials with immunity without granting a reciprocal immunity to the States. In the matter of granting to the States the right to tax Federal officials, a different situation arises. That power is conferred, at least in this bill, as a matter of reciprocity and as a matter of grace to the States. I think we could deny that right. I think that, within reasonable limits, we could tax State officials and deny to the States the right to tax Federal officials. Let me apply the statement I have just made to a practical situation. I think we could tax the Governor of the State of New York through the income tax; and I think we could deny to the State of New York the right to tax a Senator of the United States. I think that illustration makes the issue clear.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, am I correct in assuming that the decision of the Supreme Court rendered a few days ago determined the proposition that a tax upon a State official as well as a tax upon a Federal official in neither case tended to burden or impair sovereignty, and, therefore, it was legitimate to assess a tax on the salaries of such officers? The Court went no further than that.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that they placed a limitation upon that proposition. They said, "We are not deciding the question as to whether or not the Congress might clothe employees and officers of the United States with immunity." I do not want Congress to grant such immunity, and that is evidenced by the fact that I am advocating this bill; but that power still remains in the Congress. The Court expressly stated that they were not in the case referred to deciding the proposition, although repeatedly heretofore thay have held that Congress could grant immunity to its instrumentalities.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; they did not decide that question. The only question they decided was the question which I stated a moment ago, that is that the laying of a tax upon salaries did not tend to impair or burden or interfere with the sovereignty whose officer was taxed.

Mr. BROWN. That such action did not impair sovereignty to any appreciable degree. I do not think that modification is necessary.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me there?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I may say to the Senator from Idaho that, as I recall the decision, the court did not repudiate the theory that neither sovereignty could interfere with the other, but it did hold that a nondiscriminatory tax on the salary of an officer was not a burden on the exercise by the sovereignty of its power. That is what was held.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. As I have said, the court did not in any way modify the decision of Chief Justice Marshall in the case of McCulloch against Maryland. The only proposition decided by that case was that there could not be an interference with one sovereignty by another. The court did not undertake to modify that rule at all. They simply said that a tax on a salary is not an interference with the sovereignty of the Government whose officer may have his salary taxed. Therefore, there is no modification of the principle laid down in McCulloch against Maryland.

Mr. BROWN. I will say to the Senator that the immunity rule does not rest alone on McCulloch against Maryland. Collector against Day was another case.

Mr. BORAH. That was the other side of McCulloch against Maryland.

Mr. BROWN. I understand that, but that was a case which also laid down the immunity rule; it laid down the proposition that the Federal Government could not tax a State judge. The Supreme Court has reversed that rule by their decision in the O'Keefe case.

Mr. BORAH. They did reverse the case of Collector against Day in part.

Mr. BROWN. But I will say to the Senator that everyone assumed after the case of Collector against Day that the rule in that case was a part of the immunity rule and that State judges were immune from Federal taxation by reason of it. That part of the immunity rule has not only been modified, but has been abrogated without legislative action.

Mr. BORAH. I assume that since the decision of a few days ago we have a right to pass this bill, but I am assuming it on the theory that the Supreme Court settled the salary question both with reference to the National and State sovereignty. I do not assume that the Court has modified its original holding in any respect whatever, except as to the Day case and two or three other cases which were salary cases. Therefore, we have a right to pass the bill.

Mr. BROWN. There is no question about that.

Mr. BORAH. But whether it is wise to do so or not is another question. I do not believe it is wise. Let each sovereignty tax its own officials. Let us preserve with jealousy the integrity of the two sovereign ties.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may we have a vote now on the amendment which is pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. I offer the amendment as modified which is now on the desk. I understand the Senator from Michigan is willing to accept it as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, as modified, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 13, after the word "of", it is proposed to insert "or as a judge or officer of any court of."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. I offer a further amendment. After the word "service", in line 13, I move to insert the words "as a United States Senator or Member of the House of Representatives, or."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have not the amendment in writing. I will withhold it for a few moments; the Senate can meanwhile go on with some other amendment, and we can revert to my amendment later.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I think it would be better to act on the amendments as they are proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Texas kindly state his amendment again?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I thought I would withhold the amendment for a few moments and return to it later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, in the amendment which was offered and adopted yesterday, known as sections 208 and 209, my attention has been called to a situation which it seems to me requires a slight amendment. The amendment which was adopted yesterday makes an exception relating to employees of a corporation a majority of whose stock is owned by or on behalf of the United States. The counsel of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has called our attention to the fact that in a few instances the R. F. C. own a majority of the total stock of certain banks. Therefore, the word "voting" should be inserted before the word "stock" in line 6 of section 208, and the word "voting" should be inserted before the word "stock" in the second line from the bottom of the page.

Mr. AUSTIN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. I observe that section 207 seems to be the last section in the bill as printed. Is the Senator from Michigan referring to House bill 3790?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Michigan is referring to an amendment which was adopted to House bill 3790 yesterday. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment which was agreed to yesterday will be reconsidered, and the amendment now offered by the Senator from Michigan to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 208 before the word "stock" and in section 209 before the word "stock", in the line next to the last, to insert the same word, it is proposed to insert the word "voting", so that sections 208 and 209 will read:

SEC. 208. No collection of any tax (including interest, additions to tax, and penalties) imposed by any State or local taxing authority on the compensation, received before January 1, 1939, for personal service as an officer or employee of the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof (except a corporate agency or instrumentality the majority of the voting stock of which is not owned by or on behalf of the United States) shall be made after the date of the enactment of this act.

SEC. 209. This title shall not apply with respect to any officer or employee of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, after the Secretary of the Treasury has determined and proclaimed that it is the policy of such State to collect from any individual any tax, interest, additions to tax, or penalties, on account of compensation received by such individual prior to January 1, 1939, for personal service as an officer or employee of the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof. In making such determination the Secretary of the Treasury shall disregard the taxation of officers and employees of any corporate agency or instrumentality the majority of the voting stock of which is not owned by or on behalf of the United States.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President——

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I am sending to the Senator from Vermont a copy of the amendment so that he may understand it. I will inquire if the Senator was present when I made a short statement concerning the amendment?

Mr. AUSTIN. I was present, but, not knowing what it was to which the Senator referred, I did not understand what he said.

Mr. BROWN. The amendment is necessary because the Reconstruction Finance Corporation holds a majority of all stock—that is, preferred and common—in certain banks. Such banks are now excepted from the provisions of this proposed act. We want to make certain that the employees of such banking institutions will pay income taxes. Therefore it is proposed to insert the word "voting" before the word "stock," which will eliminate the R. F. C. stock in the consideration of what is a majority of the stock involved.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, these amendments are to me very confusing because of the form in which they are set forth.

Section 208 starts out with the words—

No collection of any tax (including interest, additions to tax, and penalties) imposed by any State or local taxing authority—

And so forth; and concludes with the words—

shall be made after the date of the enactment of this act.

That normally would mean an immunity—an exemption from taxation. I do not see that his proposal clearly accomplishes the objective of which the Senator speaks.

Mr. BROWN. The section 208, I will say to the Senator from Vermont, refers to taxes levied prior to January 1, 1939. That is the retroactive feature of the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that considerably clarifies the matter. If the effect of section 208 is to prevent the collection, and to make firm an immunity before January 1, 1939, of the persons and corporations named in the section, then I have no objection to it. Is that its purpose?

Mr. BROWN. That is the purpose; but the Senator recognizes that we do not want to exempt bank employees and bank officials, who have been taxed for many years, and that is the reason for the exception that is contained within the parentheses in section 208, before the word "shall." Those persons should not be declared to be tax exempt. They are employees of national banks.

Mr. AUSTIN. Are there institutions and corporations in which there are employees of two masters; namely, the employees of the private institution called the bank in one illustration, and employees of the Federal institution to which the Senator referred? Is that the situation?

Mr. BROWN. That is the distinction which the sentence contained within the parentheses seeks to bring out. The employees of corporations like the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the stock of which is entirely held by the United States, are not to be taxed prior to January 1, 1939; but national banks have been declared by the Congress and by the courts to be instrumentalities of the United States. We do not want to exempt their employees from taxes that were levied prior to January 1, 1939, and this amendment clears up that situation.

Mr. AUSTIN. I must confess that I think the language is very unfortunate.

Mr. BROWN. I will say that while I might claim some credit for the idea, the language is that of the expert draftsmen for the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation and the legislative counsel of the Senate and the House. I think it legally accurate and necessary.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am entirely in agreement with the objective of the Senator from Michigan, but I confess that this language is not clear to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 13, after the word "service", it is proposed to insert the following:

as a United States Senator or Member of the House of Representatives, or.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire as to the effect of the last proposal. Does it add anything to the bill?

Mr. BROWN. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that I think the bill as originally drafted includes judges, Representatives in Congress, United States Senators, and all officers and employees of the Government of the United States. The Senator from Texas calls attention to the fact, I believe, that it was once held that a Senator of the United States was not an officer of the United States within the meaning of a certain criminal statute; and he wants to make sure that a tax is to be levied upon all Members of Congress and upon all Federal judges. My attitude is that I am willing to accept any amendment which makes certain the objective we all seek.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which was presented by me on March 23.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill a new section, to read as follows:

SEC. —. That effective on the thirtieth day after the day of enactment of this act section 3412 (c) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code is amended to read as follows:

"(2) The term 'gasoline' means (A) all products commonly or commercially known or sold as gasoline (including casinghead and natural gasoline), benzol, benzene, or naphtha, regardless of their classifications or uses; and (B) any other liquid of a kind prepared, advertised, offered for sale, or sold for use as, or used as, a fuel for the propulsion of motor vehicles, motorboats, or airplanes; except that it does not include any of the foregoing mixed with 10 percent or more of anhydrous ethyl alcohol produced from annual agricultural crops grown in the continental United States and so denatured as to exempt it from the tax imposed by law upon distilled spirits, does not include any of the foregoing (other than products commonly or commercially known or sold as gasoline) sold for use otherwise than as a fuel for the propulsion of motor vehicles, motorboats, or airplanes, and otherwise than in the manufacture or production of such fuel, and does not include kerosene, gas oil, or fuel oil."

Mr. GURNEY obtained the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts withhold that suggestion for one moment?

Mr. LODGE. I withhold it.

Mr. HARRISON. I appeal to the Senator from South Dakota not to insist on his amendment in the case of this bill. I assure the Senator that in some form or other a revenue bill will be before the Senate during the present session of Congress. The Finance Committee has not had this matter before it for consideration at all, and the amendment deals altogether with the reciprocal-tax question.

I hope the Senator will not insist on the amendment in connection with this bill.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I am inclined to agree to the Senator's request, in the belief that a revenue measure will come to the Senate from the House at a later date.

I desire to state now that, in my opinion, the proposal embodied in the amendment is just as important to agriculturists all over the United States as are the measures for the relief of cotton that have been before the Senate during the past few days. Owing to the importance of the amendment to the people of my section, and likewise the people of all other sections, I do not want the Senate to think this is my particular idea. It has the backing of many other Senators and Representatives who have already introduced similar proposed legislation.

So, on the request of the Senator from Mississippi, I will let the amendment go over until some future date.

Mr. HARRISON. I assure the Senator that some form of a revenue bill will be before the Senate. We must extend the nuisance taxes, and we must do something with reference to corporate-structure taxation which terminates at the end of the year. Those matters will be before us, and the Senator then will have an opportunity to offer his amendment. I hope he will not complicate the situation by offering it to this bill, for it would provoke a long discussion.

Mr. GURNEY. I thank the Senator very much, and I accede to his request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment being withdrawn, does the Senator from Massachusetts withdraw his suggestion of the absence of a quorum?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, under the circumstances, I suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that he have his amendment referred to the Finance Committee, so that under the friendly leadership of the Senator from Mississippi it may be considered by the committee.

Mr. GURNEY. That is a very appropriate request. I shall be glad to have the amendment referred to the Finance Committee, so that full information regarding it may be given to the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I had expected the Senator from Michigan in charge of the bill to speak at some length concerning the bill and to properly address himself to its implications and unconstitutional features. I understand that he will pretermit any extended discussion but, of course, answer any questions submitted.

I had expected to discuss some features of the pending bill and to point out what I conceive to be some of its unwise, if not unsound, provisions. I had also intended to point out the dangerous movements, political and otherwise, toward the centralization of governmental authority in the National Government; but I know that the committee is anxious to secure action upon the measure at the earliest possible moment, and for that reason I shall not carry out my purpose, but at a later date will discuss the matters which I have in mind. May I state, however, that I have some doubts concerning the soundness of the majority view in the so-called O'Keefe case, which is relied upon in support of the bill under consideration.

Undoubtedly the O'Keefe case runs counter to principles which have been recognized for nearly a century, especially when such principles as in part determine the nature of our Government and the reciprocal obligations of each sovereignty toward the other. I suggest that Senators give heed to the dissenting opinion in the O'Keefe case, which states, in effect, that where the power to tax exists legislatures may exert it to destroy, to discourage, to protect, or exclusively for the purpose of raising revenue.

In my opinion, the bill under consideration strikes down decisions of the court which have been important guides in determining the policy of the Federal Government and landmarks which were necessary for the preservation of the States.

I might add that I am not so much concerned with the effect of this decision on the taxpayers as I am with its possible and indeed probable effect on the essential nature of our Government. We are told that a bill will follow this measure which will subject State securities to Federal taxation. I might add that there is an impairment of sovereignty if one government may so imperil the prerogatives of another as to interfere with the means of raising revenue.

I fear this bill, as I have indicated, will be regarded as a precedent for further assaults upon sovereign States, and for the further aggrandizement of the Federal Government. I am not so much interested in tax exemptions, but I do plead for maintenance of constitutional government and preservation of the States against the sweeping tides of this new federalism.

As stated, there is a powerful movement seeking to concentrate more and more authority in the Federal Government and to weaken the States and reduce them to mere administrative districts.

There is occasion for concern when the doctrine of implied immunity is destroyed, and this concern is deepened when there has been, as stated by Mr. Justice Frankfurter, "a reconstruction in the membership of the Court." I shall, when I discuss the questions involved, advert to some of the implications arising from the decision in the O'Keefe case and in the statement just quoted.

In conclusion, may I say that I understand that the committee of which the able Senator from Michigan is chairman, and which has investigated the sources of revenue, and particularly the question of the authority of the Federal Government to tax the salaries of State employees, as well as the bonds and securities of States and their political subdivisions, and also the basis for reciprocity taxation between the States and the Federal Government, will within a few days submit to the Senate a report setting forth in detail the studies made and the conclusions reached, and also a bill which will provide for the taxation of State securities.

I shall await the report before discussing the questions above referred to, and which it was my intention to discuss in the Senate today.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on the bill, I desire to say that partly because of the special study in the Special Senate Committee on Immunity from Taxation which I gave to the bill and to the other subject which is not part of the bill—namely, immunity from taxation of the income from securities of both Federal and State governments—I believe that the bill will present for determination an issue which is yet undetermined with respect to the power of taxation of salaries; and, in a word, I think it is well expressed in the conclusion of the special committee which made a report to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. Mr. Stam was the author of that excellent report; and his conclusion was this with respect to what is yet undecided:

> However, under the Supreme Court decisions it does not appear that the Constitution will permit the Congress to tax the salaries of State judges, legislators, and other officers performing functions necessary to the existence of the State or political subdivisions, although such salaries are taxable under the existing law.

I understand that to be a special issue created by the enactment of the proposed legislation and the attempt to apply it, and in voting for it I am merely doing so on grounds of expediency, one of which is to prevent the great discrimination and injustice which would occur if this bill, or one similar, did not pass, in respect of the classification created by the decisions of the Court, of employees into different groups, leaving some of them taxed and some immune, and the whole matter in great confusion.

Moreover, I vote on the ground of expediency for this further reason, that if we do not provide against the collection of taxes for all the years within the statute of limitations, those who are now in a group that is discriminated against would be exposed to retroactive levy and collection of taxes covering a number of years, which would be an extremely heavy hardship upon them.

For these reasons I want the bill to pass, but I want it distinctly understood that I am not voting for the bill in order to give it a presumption of validity under the Constitution.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I indicated a few moments ago that, in view of the fact that a report would be submitted within a few days which would recommend broadening the authority of the Federal Government to tax States and their political subdivisions, I would not delay the passage of the bill under consideration by discussing the general question of reciprocal taxation between the Federal Government and the States, and particularly the constitutional questions involved.

May I add that I agree with the views expressed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] a few moments ago concerning the McCulloch case, to which reference has been made. Undoubtedly the O'Keefe case is revolutionary. It overrules doctrines which have been accepted for nearly 100 years. Moreover, it is not free from obiter dicta, which may tend to confuse the issues involved and lead to erroneous conclusions as to the constitutional questions involved.

In my opinion, our dual form of government is being subjected to dangerous assaults which will inevitably modify its form, imperil the sovereignty of the States, and interfere with the liberties of citizens. I cannot help but believe that my party is swerving from the safe and sound constitutional path marked by the founders of the Republic. Many of our citizens are urging the extension of Federal authority into fields which are exclusively under the jurisdiction of the States and their political subdivisions. There is a powerful current which bears individuals and States away from safe moorings, from constitutional government into perilous waters. The sovereignty of the States is being destroyed and State socialism is looming in the distance. Many believe we are headed for increased socialistic activities and the constantly decreasing authority of the States.

When the Senator from Michigan presents his report I shall avail myself of the opportunity to discuss the questions which he will raise and the proposed legislation which his committee will support.

I shall consider the opinion of Mr. Justice Marshall in the McCulloch case as well as subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court dealing with the relations of the States to the Federal Government. For the present I content myself by stating that there are provisions in the bill with which I do not agree and which undoubtedly will be employed to justify legislation which will further undermine the integrity of sovereign States.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I desire to state that the committee to which reference has been made by the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Utah expects to have a report upon the question of taxation by the Federal Government of State and municipal bonds within the next 2 or 3 weeks. Of course, I expect that at that time I shall submit a report in writing in behalf of the committee, and undoubtedly there will be a report expressing views somewhat contrary to mine, probably submitted by the Senator from Vermont. At that time I hope we may have an opportunity to have a full discussion of the constitutional questions involved.

I may say that I myself have been ready with a speech on these constitutional questions for 3 weeks, and I hope I will have an opportunity to present it to the Senate. But the decision by the Supreme Court in the O'Keefe case a week ago yesterday eliminated any necessity for a constitutional discussion of the salary question. I think we will still have an opportunity to discuss the bond taxation proposition.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when it comes to carrying out the implications of the O'Keefe case the Senator will find that there will be a great deal of discussion.

Mr. BROWN. I am glad to have the Senator from Idaho admit that there are implications in the O'Keefe case favorable to our views on the bond taxation proposition.

I may say that the Senator from Idaho has been the great advocate and the great leader in bringing to the American people the views which have prevailed in the Congress and in the Supreme Court upon the question of the nontaxability of State and municipal bonds by the Federal taxing power. I say to him that I well know that he has earnestly advocated the taxation by the Federal Government of its own obligations, but has consistently maintained that there is no power on the part of the Federal Government to tax State obligations.

I went into this matter a year or more ago believing much as the Senator did. Since that time I have been convinced the other way, and I look forward with interest to a discussion on the floor of the Senate of that most intricate and close legal question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Returning to the pending bill, will it not really give the Supreme Court the opportunity, if it sees fit to take it, to go back to the principles announced in the case of McCulloch against Maryland one-hundred-and-thirty-odd years ago?

Mr. BROWN. They can go into the immunity rule, which stemmed from McCulloch against Maryland. But I say to the Senator from Tennessee that the pending bill will not give the Supreme Court an opportunity to decide the question of the right of the Federal Government to tax State and municipal bonds. That must come by reason of some new legislation, which I hope will soon come out of the other House, where it must originate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was not speaking of Federal bonds; I was merely speaking of the right to tax the salaries of employees of the States and of the Nation.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, how does the Senator from Tennessee expect the Supreme Court to get back to the principles of McCulloch against Maryland when one of the judges recently announced that John Marshall, instead of being the great jurist he had been considered for many years, was merely an orator?

Mr. McKELLAR. We are not suggesting anything. We are merely giving them an opportunity to decide what is the law.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I assume that under the decision of the Supreme Court rendered a week ago yesterday the pending bill is within the principles laid down. I have no reason to doubt its validity in the light of that decision. But I think it is unwise legislation. It will furnish about enough taxes to pay the gasoline bills for a portion of the automobiles which skirt the town on social occasions, for which the Government pays.

Mr. President, I believe that Federal judges and other Federal officials should pay taxes, but I believe the Federal Government should levy the taxes. I believe that State officials, judges and all others, should pay taxes, but I believe that the States should levy the taxes.

The amount of money which will be derived as a result of the enactment of this bill will be practically nil; yet we are placing the two sovereignties in a position where they will be constantly affected by the action of one another with references to taxes upon their officials. We are placing the two sovereignties in the position where they will not be recognized in their sovereign integrity, but as mere taxable entities of the Federal Government; and that is not what they are, and never were intended to be.

When John Marshall decided the case of McCullough against Maryland he did not find anything in the Constitution of the United States which stated that the States could not tax the instrumentalities of the Federal Government, but he said it was inherent in the very nature of a federal government that it must be so; that if the two sovereignties were to exist they must exist free from each other's interference, free from embarrassment; and therefore, in the very nature of things, while it was not written in the Constitution, it must necessarily be true. If Marshall had disregarded the governmental question and treated the matter solely as a tax question, the tax would have been valid. We ought never to lose sight of that fact.

That is just as true now; and, in my opinion, we ought, as a matter of policy, to adhere to it even though the Supreme Court has in this particular instance undoubtedly given validity to legislation like the pending bill.

I shall vote against the bill if there is a yea-and-nay vote, and if it is not a yea-and-nay vote I shall vote against it in my mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to consider executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Are there further reports of committees? If not, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

CUSTOMS SERVICE—FLORENCE CLARKE LYNCH

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Florence Clarke Lynch, of New York, to be appraiser of merchandise.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have this nomination go over until tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Wiley Blount Rutledge, Jr., of Iowa, to be an associate justice of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish to state, with reference to the nomination just confirmed, that if there had been a yea-and-nay vote I would have voted in the negative.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the postoffice nominations are confirmed en bloc.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICE, SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the nomination passed over.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William O. Douglas, of Connecticut, to be Associate Justice, Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, when the Senate adjourned yesterday I was speaking on the question of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Douglas to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. I wish to continue the discussion now.

The New York Herald Tribune on March 16, 1939, on page 1, said that Mr. Douglas had "labeled as 'phony' and bitterly attacked" the amendments to the statute proposed by the stock exchanges.

Not only did Mr. Douglas issue a prepared statement bitterly attacking the proposed amendments to the statute, but as the New York Times reported on March 16, 1939, Mr. Douglas "added sharp oral criticism." This was so completely contrary to Mr. Douglas' long-continued policy that Wall Street "saw red." It was reported in many financial and metropolitan newspapers. For example, on March 19, 1939, Burton Crane, a reporter of the New York Times who had come to Washington during the deliberations of the stock exchanges of the country on March 13 and 14 to report on what they were doing, wrote an article in the New York Times which was published on March 19, 1939. In the article he had the following to say:

WALL STREET WAXES WROTH

For some months exchange members have been chafing at the thoroughgoing nature of the Martin cooperation with the S. E. C.

Mr. Martin, of course, was the new president of the Wall Street Stock Exchange.

When the Tuesday report went in, many in the street thought it practically S. E. C. propaganda. It seemed to accord perfectly—save in its allusion to the rule on "insiders"—with the S. E. C.'s philosophy of the past. Thus the Douglas attack, more bitter on the Wall Street New Deal than ever on the Old Guard, raised flaring anger. The financial district has "seen red" often in the past, but probably never has it been in such a fighting rage since the collapse of the gold corner, when mobs of would-be lynchers roamed the streets looking for Jay Gould and Jim Fisk.

Mr. President, the writer in the New York Times says that the criticism of the New York Stock Exchange made by Mr. Douglas on the 15th of March was the cause of more bitter feeling than anything which had taken place in Wall Street for many years; that it made the Wall Streeters "see red."

Mr. Crane's report intimates that Wall Street apparently assumed that Mr. Douglas' outburst of March 15 was occasioned by one of his major difficulties in getting the Supreme Court nomination. He had been attacked as being too close to Wall Street. Mr. Crane wrote in the New York Times on March 19, 1939:

If the tone of comment means anything, the manner of the Douglas reply has wrecked the painfully built structure of cooperation between S. E. C. and stock exchange. Perhaps that looks like a gain to the Commission's Chairman, for it was that cooperation which had produced hints that he had lost his liberalism. That ghost, at least, is laid.

Yesterday I quoted from an article published in the magazine the Nation, which stated that Mr. Douglas was too close to Wall Street and had been collaborating with Wall Street, and the writer of the article objected to Mr. Douglas' appointment to the Supreme Court on that ground.

Is it fair to say that Mr. Douglas' attack, the time it was made, and its tone were occasioned or influenced by the fact that his intimacy with Wall Street was likely to lose him the place on the Supreme Court? The answer is furnished by his close friend, Mr. Arthur Krock, of the New York Times. It is well known that Mr. Krock has been one of the leading supporters of Mr. Douglas for elevation to the Supreme Court. It is obvious that the explanation offered by Mr. Krock is one which would fairly reflect what was motivating Mr. Douglas and would be sympathetic to him. Mr. Krock's explanation was published while Wall Street was still wondering about the tremendous change in Mr. Douglas' attitude toward the New York Stock Exchange, which occurred on March 15, 1939.

Mr. Krock's article appears in section IV of the Sunday issue of the New York Times, March 26, 1939, at page 3 of that section, and is headed "Revision of S. E. C. Laws Asked at Fatal Hour."

In other words, the reporter for the New York Times thinks that the Wall Street Stock Exchange asked for its amendments to the law at an inopportune time, the request coming just when Mr. Douglas was a candidate for appointment to the Supreme Court and had been accused of being too close to Wall Street.

The article is headed "Revision of S. E. C. Laws Asked at Fatal Hour."

The article then mentions the interest of the administration in the Stock Exchange Act and other factors which would not have a bearing on the question of the timeliness of the presentation of the proposals by the stock exchange for amendment of the act. The article must have been very interesting to the brokers and bankers in Wall Street. It presented to them a picture of a race between two candidates for the Supreme Court vacancy, one being Mr. Douglas, a man satisfactory to Wall Street, and the other a man who is pictured as a radical, and unsatisfactory to Wall Street. As a matter of fact, the newspapers themselves, during the period before the sending in of the nomination, indicated that there were other candidates under consideration, and it was not simply a race between the two persons mentioned in this article. Some of the language from the article may be quoted.

> A more unfortunate time could not have been chosen by the exchanges to seek what they sought. * * * Mr. Douglas, to the great satisfaction of the business and financial communities, had been cooperative and pragmatic in dealing with his charges [meaning the stock exchanges] and had publicly referred to himself as a conservative. * * *

The article goes on to say that supporters of another candidate—

> At this time * * * were casting doubt on Mr. Douglas' loyalty to fundamental New Dealism, disputing his claim to being a "liberal" and asserting he had been a pawn of Wall Street. * * * This was the hour chosen to submit the proposals to Mr. Douglas.

That is, the amendments to the law governing the stock exchanges.

> It was hardly a period for impersonal, nonpolitical consideration.

That sentence by the reporter is rather significant, it seems to me. He says that this time, when the President was considering an appointment to the Supreme Court, on the 15th of March, was hardly a period for impersonal nonpolitical consideration. Senators can judge for themselves just what is meant by that. I shall try to explain what I think it means.

> This correspondent happens to believe that Mr. Douglas was wholly sincere in disapproving the proposals, though the use of the word "phony" and of certain other expressions suggested a wish to prove his loyalty to the acts he is administering and a firm resolve to do nothing that might be represented as canceling any part of the President's pet reform.
> If Mr. Douglas had approved all or any of the proposals, this writer believes he would have said as much, though he would have left them on the table for a while. What would have been the result? The [his opponent's] lobby would have made excellent use of the situation, particularly at the White House. * * * For all these reasons, and without disparagement of the wisdom of some amendments or the good faith of Chairman Douglas, the timing and psychology of the incident were obviously ill-conceived.

Why was this "hardly a period for impersonal, nonpolitical consideration"? Why is any time not a period for "impersonal, nonpolitical consideration" in the functioning of a regulatory official on public matters? If Mr. Krock is correct in his statement, then the conclusion follows that, in the face of the tug of war going on for the designation to the Supreme Court post, the consideration to be given to anything submitted to Mr. Douglas in his official capacity would be determined by personal and political motives. Any other conclusion is impossible if Mr. Krock's fundamental analysis is sound. If Mr. Douglas had not been under consideration for this important post, would Mr. Douglas' consideration of this matter have been impersonal and nonpolitical; and, if "impersonal" and "nonpolitical," would his decision have been different? Certainly the difference between impersonal and nonpolitical consideration on the one hand and personal, political consideration on the other hand cannot be determined merely by the fact that in the one case Mr. Douglas' response came within 24 hours, whereas in the other it would have come after "a while," meaning in the one case within 24 hours after the stock exchange had sent in its proposed amendment, whereas in the other case it would come after "a while."

The reporter said that if it had not been for the political situation, Mr. Douglas probably would not have answered or made any comment on the proposed amendments until after "a while."

Does not Mr. Krock, Mr. Douglas' good friend, seem to suggest something more deep-seated than a slight difference in time when he sets up the sharp antithesis between "impersonal, nonpolitical consideration" on the one hand, and personal and political consideration on the other hand?

Is not the effect of Mr. Krock's analysis substantially as follows:

(1) The stock exchange should have waited until Mr. Douglas' nomination was actually submitted before sending in the proposed amendments.

(2) If that had been done, Mr. Douglas' answer might have been different, as is indicated by the interview given to Mr. Krock on March 29. If that be so, what an indictment. Later I shall refer to that interview.

Does it not follow also from Mr. Krock's article that a regulating commissioner, normally impersonal and nonpolitical, might be expected to assume on commission matters a personal and political attitude when he is being considered for such a high office as that of Justice of the Supreme Court? But if a person, under such circumstances, adopts an attitude animated solely by personal and political motives, irrespective of the merits of the problem, which for this purpose need not be dwelt on at the moment, does not that constitute the gravest warning as to the fundamental and basic lack of that temperament, that approach, without which one has no right to aspire to such high judicial office? Since when has opportunism been the qualification for the highest judicial office?

That personal and political considerations, rather than the merits of the problem, moved Mr. Douglas, as is suggested by Mr. Krock in his March 26 article, is confirmed by Mr. Douglas himself in his interview on March 28, to which I shall shortly come.

Other friends of Mr. Douglas have made clear how shrewd was his understanding of the fact that if he made a vigorous attack on the New York Stock Exchange on March 15, this would help to obtain for him the nomination to the United States Supreme Court. His name had been pushed by his friends for 30 days, and as yet unsuccessfully, when the great opportunity came to Mr. Douglas on March 15 to attack the stock exchanges. Something had to be done to get the prize. He made the attack on the 15th. Did this help to procure for him the appointment? The answer is given by his good friends in their article in the Merry-Go-Round column published throughout the country.

Before I read that article I wish to refer to another article. I am sorry not more Members are interested in this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator wish to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. FRAZIER. When a man 40 years of age is being considered for an appointment to the Supreme Court for life, an appointment good for at least another 30 years, it seems to me important that the facts of the case should be brought out.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in order that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	LaFollette	Radcliffe
Andrews	Downey	Lee	Reed
Ashurst	Ellender	Lodge	Reynolds
Austin	Frazier	Logan	Russell
Bankhead	George	Lucas	Schwartz
Barbour	Gerry	Lundeen	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Gillette	McCarran	Sheppard
Bilbo	Glass	McKellar	Shipstead
Bone	Green	McNary	Smathers
Borah	Guffey	Maloney	Smith
Brown	Gurney	Mead	Stewart
Bulow	Harrison	Miller	Taft
Burke	Hatch	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Hayden	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Herring	Neely	Townsend
Caraway	Hill	Norris	Tydings
Chavez	Holman	Nye	Vandenberg
Clark, Mo.	Hughes	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Overton	Wheeler
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper	White
Davis	King	Pittman	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, when the quorum call was made, I was talking about the statement Mr. Douglas had sent to the New York Stock Exchange on March 15, criticizing the exchange very severely for the amendments they had offered to the exchange laws. One of the newspaper writers, in commenting on the statement, said that it was the worst tirade against the Wall Street Stock Exchange that had been made for many years. Another writer said it was an improper time for the stock exchange to have made the request for a change in their laws. He said it was an inopportune time because the Chairman of the S. E. C. could not make a nonpolitical, impersonal statement at that time, intimating he could not do so because he was a candidate for appointment to the Supreme Court.

Mr. President, I have a copy of News Week of March 27. There is an article in it on the Douglas nomination. I desire to read just a paragraph of it. The writer of this article in News Week states that the tirade of Mr. Douglas on the New York Stock Exchange on March 15 was O. K.'d by the White House before it was sent to New York.

> The fact that Douglas' statement had the prior approval of the White House lends credence to widely held views that its chief purpose was political—to serve notice that the short-sales concession did not mean the New Deal was retreating, and possibly to build up Douglas for the Supreme Court.

That is what this article states.

Mr. President, is it possible that conditions have gotten to such a state that in order for a man to be appointed to a position on the Supreme Court, the highest law-making body of the land, he must play politics? This article seems to indicate it. The little paragraph that I read says that the chief purpose of the statement was, perhaps—

> To serve notice that the short-sales concession did not mean that the New Deal was retreating—

Referring to the short-sales concession that the S. E. C. had made about 2 weeks before the 15th of March, early in the month of March. It was a ruling that the stock exchange had asked for to make short selling easier.

Mr. President, that concession was to make short selling easier, and Mr. Douglas had agreed to it at that time. In my opinion, short selling is a crime at any time. It is contrary to the best interests of the people who own the properties that are being sold. It forces down the prices, and that is the object of short selling; and this concession that the S. E. C. had made under Mr. Douglas a couple of weeks before this time was to make short selling easier. The article goes on to say that it was probably politics, and I am frank to think there was more politics played in it than we at the present time know anything about.

On March 20, 1939, Mr. Douglas' name was sent to the Senate. That was just 5 days after his tirade on the New York Stock Exchange. I have already stated that some of the liberal magazines like the Nation had criticized the appointment of Mr. Douglas, or his consideration for appointment, on the ground that he was too close to Wall Street interests—that he was playing with them. One article referred to him as "the tool of Wall Street." So on March 20, 1939, Mr. Douglas' name was sent to the Senate for the Supreme Court post, 5 days after the day on which Mr. Douglas made such good use of his opportunity to "roast" the New York Stock Exchange.

In ascertaining whether Mr. Douglas' use of that opportunity was a genuine expression of his own viewpoint, it is not necessary to rely simply on the testimony of his newspaper friends. Mr. Douglas' activities subsequent to the sending in of his name on March 20, 1939, tell the same story.

Even before the nomination actually went in assurances had been going to Wall Street that its bitterness against Mr. Douglas for his novel attitude toward Wall Street ought to be tempered by the possibility or probability that he really was much friendlier to Wall Street than his action of March 15, 1939, might indicate. Though his candidacy for the Supreme Court was sympathetically viewed in Wall Street prior to the March 15 incident, that sympathy seemed to have disappeared at the time when his name was sent to the Senate on March 20, 1939. The following is a quotation from an article in the New York Times on March 21, 1939, in its financial section:

> HAIL AND FAREWELL
> In view of the coolness which recently has arisen between Mr. Douglas and Wall Street, there were no public expressions of spontaneous good will noticeable in the financial district yesterday upon news of his nomination for the Supreme Court. Today may be another story, for some gentlemen who were busy with other matters yesterday may comment in a friendly way on Mr. Douglas' appointment. Two weeks ago there would have been an instant and favorable response to the news. The difference is not that Mr. Douglas had ever been less hard a taskmaster but that what was felt to have been an undeserved rebuff was addressed by him last week to as well-intentioned a group of men as ever had left New York for Washington since this administration took office.

A group of men had come down here representing the New York Stock Exchange and other stock exchanges throughout the Nation to ask the S. E. C. for some amendments to the regulations, and this writer says Mr. Douglas had rebuffed them. Another writer went on to say that the New York Stock Exchange "saw red," and that after receiving that report of March 15 they were in the most angry mood that they had been in for years.

Thereafter, however, word was carried to Wall Street showing that it should feel quite differently about Mr. Douglas.

For example, Burton Crane, of the New York Times, who had previously reported the bitterness in Wall Street, wrote an article which appeared in the financial section of the New York Times on Sunday, March 26, 1939, after the nomination had been favorably reported by the subcommittee. The article begins as follows:

> Even before William O. Douglas, Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, had been nominated by President Roosevelt for a place on the Bench of the Supreme Court of the United States, his colleagues on the Commission passed the opinion to the financial community here that his denunciation of proposals made by a group of representatives of the securities exchanges of the country need not be taken too seriously.

That was on March 26, right after the nomination had come to the Senate.

Finally, on March 29, 1939, Mr. Douglas presented to Wall Street a greater appeasement than he had ever offered that financial group before. He was about to leave the S. E. C.

for the Supreme Court. On March 28, 1939, when it looked as if it would be the last day on which he could with propriety, discuss S. E. C. and Wall Street affairs, he gave an interview to his friend, Mr. Krock, of the New York Times, and this interview was published the next day. This is one of the most remarkable interviews in the history of the S. E. C., if not indeed, in the history of liberal government. Insofar as the prestige of his name and experience as head of the S. E. C. and as a man elevated to the highest tribunal in the land could do something for Wall Street, Mr. Douglas did it. The interview was rather quietly written, and its full meaning does not appear in the article itself, except to those who know other facts which were known to the important men in Wall Street when they read that article.

The first thing Mr. Douglas did in this interview for the benefit of the most powerful financial institutions in our financial capital was to take sides with the big Wall Street banks and trust companies against the S. E. C., even against himself of an earlier date, against the measures desired by the administration itself. The administration's purposes have been to increase the jurisdiction, the power, and the functions of the S. E. C., and to increase the fields over which it shall have power as a regulating authority. For example, an effort has been made since 1937 to put under the jurisdiction of the S. E. C. the activities of the big financial institutions, primarily those in New York, in the so-called trust-indenture business. The bills for this purpose were introduced in the Senate by the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], both in the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress and in the first session of the present Congress. In the previous Congress the bill was known as Senate bill 2344, and in the present Congress the bill introduced for the purpose is Senate bill 477.

The bills were rather lengthy. The present bill contains 62 pages, as I remember. By the way, it was considered for some time by the subcommittee, of which I happened to be a member. Members of the big banking institutions of Wall Street, Chicago, and over the country appeared, and most of them protested in the first place. The bill was changed to some extent, and they agreed, or partially agreed, or at least some of them agreed, that it would be all right and workable, and this morning Senate bill 477 was reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency for the calendar, for discussion and consideration by the Senate.

The purpose of the bill seems to be a worthy one, to curb very serious abuses in this branch of high finance.

Committees of both the Senate and House of Representatives have held hearings on these bills. The Senate Banking and Currency Committee conducted hearings on Senate bill 2344 in June 1937 and on the pending bill in February of this year.

In the 1937 hearings Mr. Douglas, as Chairman of the S. E. C., made a lengthy statement which took up the better part of two sessions; in fact, it took all of two sessions to hear Mr. Douglas last June on the bill pending at that time. The sessions began in the morning and ran until 1 o'clock, then began again at half past two and ran until 5, and Mr. Douglas was on the stand all the time in favor of the bill then pending.

He stated that $40,000,000,000 of securities national distributed are outstanding under trust indentures of the type that are to be subjected to regulation under the Barkley bill. He urged the importance of protecting the purchasers of such bonds by putting this subject under the jurisdiction of the S. E. C. In great detail he set forth the various powers and functions which would be added to the activities of the S. E. C. by the Barkley bill. That bill would have conferred upon the S. E. C. a new large supervisory power over big financial institutions. Anyone who reads Mr. Douglas' statement in the hearings before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee on June 9, 1937, cannot fail to notice how broad and extensive is the additional power that bill would confer on the S. E. C., and the additional functions and supervisory authority the Barkley bill would confer on that body.

When the bill was reintroduced in the Senate early this year, also by the Senator from Kentucky, hearings were conducted before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. Again it was made clear that the bill would confer large additional jurisdiction on the S. E. C.

Under date of May 24, 1937, the President urged the Barkley bill upon the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee. That letter is to be found at page 15 of the hearings of the committee. In addition the S. E. C. and Mr. Douglas himself urged the bill.

Another member of the Commission, Mr. Eicher, came before the committee and stated in the beginning of his statement that he was pinch hitting for Mr. Douglas. He made a very strong statement in favor of the Barkley bill. But these bills have had the most determined opposition from the big banks and trust companies in Wall Street, and from the Investment Bankers Association, as well as other Wall Street groups.

In the interview which Mr. Douglas gave to Mr. Krock on March 28, 1939, the interview which they then evidently thought was his final interview as Chairman of the S. E. C., his last opportunity to express his views on S. E. C. and Wall Street matters from the vantage point of Commission Chairman, Mr. Douglas said that no further functions or jurisdiction should be conferred on the S. E. C. for at least a long time to come. The following is quoted from the interview as written by Mr. Krock and published in the New York Times of March 29, 1939, at page 22 of that issue:

WASHINGTON, March 28.—By the end of this week William O. Douglas will have been overwhelmingly, perhaps unanimously, confirmed by the Senate to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. He will then depart forever from the Chairman's office at the Securities and Exchange Commission. But having been so suddenly lifted from the bull ring to the stratosphere of public service the smell of blood and sand is still strong in his nostrils. Today he discussed the Commission and its problems as though they were to remain as much a part of his life as they were a couple of weeks ago.

Listen to this:

In Mr. Douglas' opinion the activities of the S. E. C. have reached their practical peak.

I want the Senator from Kentucky to listen to this. I am reading an interview with the Chairman of the S. E. C., Mr. Douglas, as quoted in the New York Times on March 29 by Arthur Krock.

In Mr. Douglas' opinion the activities of the S. E. C. have reached their practical peak. He thinks its scope is now as wide and deep as it effectively can be.

What does this mean? Is he advocating the enactment of the bill of the Senator from Kentucky? Oh, no; he is not. He says they have gone as far as they want to go. The Senator's bill goes into the waste basket.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not understand that that article is a direct quotation from anything Mr. Douglas said on the subject. It may be an inference drawn by the correspondent.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. Krock has been one of his chief "boosters" in the New York Times.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; he is a good friend; but even if Mr. Krock is correct in the assumption that Mr. Douglas believed that the peak of the work of the S. E. C. in the matter of laying down fundamental regulations for the conduct of the stock exchange had been accomplished, and that from now on it would be largely a matter of detail and routine work, passing upon applications as they might arise, it seems to me there is nothing in the inference or in the conclusion that is inconsistent with the possible facts. One of the first duties of the S. E. C. was to start the process of regulation, to carry out the law in laying down the fundamental rules upon which the stock exchange should be conducted. After they had done that it resolved itself largely into routine, detailed matters as individual cases or situations arise.

Frankly, I do not see that Mr. Krock's comment upon the present attitude of Mr. Douglas is an indication that Mr. Douglas has in any way lessened his solicitude or has retraced his steps or has recanted his attitude with respect to the regulation of the stock exchange and the enforcement of the Securities Act which Congress passed. But even if it might be so interpreted, certainly Mr. Krock, as I understand, makes no effort to quote anything Mr. Douglas said to indicate any change in his views on the subject.

Mr. FRAZIER. As I have stated, Mr. Krock has been a correspondent for the New York Times for a long time and has been a very close friend and supporter of Mr. Douglas. This is his statement, written on March 28, in an interview of March 27, apparently. I will not take the time to read it all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Did the article say anything about the reason why Mr. Douglas was willing to step out of the S. E. C. now that he thought its fundamental work had been started and the foundation had been laid?

Mr. FRAZIER. No; he was stepping out of the S. E. C. because he was getting a better job.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that, and I do not know of anyone who would not do the same thing; but in what connection was Mr. Krock using the implication—I have not read the article——

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not think the Senator was listening when I read the first part of it. Let me read it again:

[From the Nation]

AS CHAIRMAN DOUGLAS SEES THE FUTURE OF THE S. E. C.

WASHINGTON, March 28.—By the end of this week William O. Douglas will have been overwhelmingly, perhaps unanimously, confirmed by the Senate to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. He will then depart forever from the Chairman's office at the Securities and Exchange Commission. But having been so suddenly lifted from the bull ring to the stratosphere of public service the smell of blood and sand is still strong in his nostrils. Today he discussed the Commission and its problems as though they were to remain as much a part of his life as they were a couple of weeks ago.

Then he says of Mr. Douglas' opinion:

In Mr. Douglas' opinion, the activities of the S. E. C. have reached their practical peak. He thinks its scope is now as wide and deep as it effectively can be.

This whole article seems to be an appeasement to the New York Stock Exchange. Of course, as the Senator knows, they were opposed to the Senator's bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not know the importance of trying to appease the New York Stock Exchange in reference to the appointment of Mr. Douglas to the Supreme Court. But I imagine the same thing might have been said in the early stages about the Interstate Commerce Commission, or the Federal Trade Commission, that after it had cleared new ground, had plowed new territory, had built highways in new regulatory forests, if I may use a combination of metaphors, then, the work of the Commission having been outlined in the foundation, in the prime hearing in which it was compelled to engage, it was naturally assumed that its peak of operations had been reached, that it was no longer necessary to build new highways in new forests of regulations, no longer necessary to lay a foundation, because Congress had done that when the law was passed and the Commission was created.

The fact that Mr. Douglas has assumed to carry to the Supreme Court his interest in the S. E. C. and its problems seems to me to indicate that he has not altogether forgotten the service that is being rendered by this Commission, or the opportunities for it to render a continued service and reach a peak of operation which may not have been attained heretofore.

Mr. FRAZIER. Of course, the Senator is entitled to his own opinion in the matter, but it seems to me that some politics has been played, this having come just a couple of weeks after the tirade against the stock exchange, on March 15, 5 days before he received his appointment to the Supreme Court.

I do not know whether the Senator was in the Chamber when I read the article which stated that the tirade on the New York Stock Exchange had prior approval of the White House before it was sent to New York. So it looks to me as though there was some politics.

Mr. BARKLEY. The mere fact that I may or may not have been listening to the article when it was read may shed no light on whether the article had prior White House approval. Many articles are said to have White House approval which the White House has never seen.

Mr. FRAZIER. In speaking to newspaper reporters a few days ago I referred to that article. One of them said, "That is correct. We were told at the White House that there would be very important news the next day about the S. E. C." On the next day came the tirade against Wall Street.

The article in the New York Times continues:

After the utilities' integration has been completed, some years hence, the Chairman thinks there will be room to substitute another task of equal size. But the aggregate scope of the S. E. C. should not, he believes, be expanded.

That article was written as the result of Mr. Krock's interview with Mr. Douglas.

Thus Mr. Douglas, as his parting shot, proposed to throw into the wastebasket the bills, such as the one introduced by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], which had been urged by the President and by the S. E. C., and earlier by Mr. Douglas himself, for the correction of gross abuses in Wall Street, a correction which would be effected by adding substantially to the functions and activities of the S. E. C.

Mr. President, I wish to say that this morning in the committee I voted to report one of the bills favorably, because I thought from what I knew of it—I admit I did not understand all of it—that it was an improvement over the present plan.

The President, the S. E. C., leading committees of the Senate and House have devoted a great amount of time to those bills. The need for them was demonstrated by inquiries instituted by the S. E. C. in the period before Mr. Douglas was a member of that body. He inherited the problem when he became Chairman of the S. E. C. But in the interview published on March 29, 1939, he was ready, without consulting with Congress, without consulting with the members of the committees whose time he had taken in urging the passage of such bills, to make, at the expense of the public interest, a sacrifice of the time and labor devoted to this legislation by the Senate and the House, by the President, and by the S. E. C. Who authorized Mr. Douglas to make, at the expense of Congress and of the S. E. C. and of the public, such a gesture of good will to Wall Street? It was more than a gesture of good will. It was a good-will offering—a boon and a bonus to big financial institutions in Wall Street, which had been fighting the Barkley bill for 2 years.

The parting interview which Mr. Douglas gave on March 28, 1939, was more than enough to offset his anti-Wall Street statement of 2 weeks earlier. In this interview Mr. Douglas did not rest content with offering an olive branch to the big Wall Street banks, to the Investment Bankers Association, and to similar organizations of high finance. He went further in making up for his March 15, 1939, rejection of the stock-exchange proposals to amend the stock-exchange statute. In this interview he proposed that there should be amendments to the Stock Exchange Act. That might have seemed like making full correction of his "indiscretion" of March 15, 1939. But he did a great deal more. It seemed that he was ready to fill the Wall Street cup to overflowing. He proposed also that there should be amendments to the Securities Act of 1933—something for which the stock exchanges had not asked on the fatal day when Mr. Douglas took occasion to denounce proposals for statutory amendments.

What were Mr. Douglas' reasons for proposing amendments to these two statutes? The following appears in the interview as reported by Mr. Krock, published in the New York Times of March 29, 1939:

The Chairman went on to say he thought that at some later time an eminent drafting committee, representing all legitimate interests, should undertake to consolidate and perfect the Securities Act and the Securities and Exchange Act, which are the legal charters of the S. E. C. They were, he pointed out, written separately and somewhat to meet two different situations. Necessarily therefore duplications, ambiguities, and probably some extra and unintended exactions on honest business are to be found.

This statement deserves analysis. Mr. Douglas tried to justify the taking away of safeguards now in these important statutes on the ground that they had been written separately and involved duplications. It is surprising that after several years on the S. E. C. Mr. Douglas never learned that the same people drew both statutes, that the second of the statutes was drawn with a complete understanding of the first. That particular explanation advanced by Mr. Douglas was very weak, in my opinion.

Other reasons he advances are that the statutes suffer from ambiguities and that they are interfering with honest business. This has been the perennial cry of Wall Street interests against these statutes ever since the passage of the Securities Act of 1933. In fact it was the same line of argument which Mr. Douglas himself, at the end of 1933, in a learned article put forward, recommending that the Securities Act be amended.

In the Yale Law Journal of December 1933 appears an article, The Federal Securities Act of 1933, by William O. Douglas. I quote from the article:

> As Berle has said, the Securities Act, though probably one of the most spectacular types of legislation, is of secondary importance in a comprehensive program of social control over finance. Some, however, have believed, apparently in all sincerity, that the great drop in security values in the last 5 years was the result of failure to tell the "truth" about securities.

Perhaps it was the failure to tell the truth about securities which caused the drop in the price of stock and bonds during the crisis of 1929. I do not know about that. In my opinion there was not enough truth told about securities. That was the reason for the boom just before 1929.

I continue to read from the Yale Law Journal:

> And others have thought that with the Securities Act it would be possible to prevent a recurrence of the scandals which have brought many financiers into disrepute in recent years. As a matter of fact, there are but few of the transactions investigated by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency which the Securities Act would have controlled. There is nothing in the act which would control the speculative craze of the American public or which would eliminate wholly unsound capital structures. There is nothing in the act which would prevent a tyrannical management from playing wide and loose with scattered minorities or which would prevent a new pyramiding of holding companies violative of the public interest and all canons of sound finance. All the act pretends to do is to require the "truth about securities" at the time of issue and to impose a penalty for failure to tell the truth. Once it is told the matter is left to the investor.

That article in 1933 was referred to by some of the newspapers as Mr. Douglas' learned article about the Securities Act. He secured some changes. It is also said in an article in the Nation, which I think I quoted yesterday, that the recommendations which Mr. Douglas made in 1933 were in direct line with the statements made by the Wall Street interests in 1933. The Nation drew the conclusion that it did not know whether he was a real progressive or whether he should be called a "Wall Streeter."

Mr. President, what Mr. Douglas proposed, in fact, was that the act be emasculated, and emasculated it was the following year as a result of the pressure from Wall Street publicists, who found great comfort in Mr. Douglas' joining in that very movement. Now he revives the same old cry to emasculate further the Securities Act which he was already successful in putting under the knife in 1934. And he wants also to apply the knife to the Stock Exchange Act, as he has already done to the act which preceded it.

Wall Street could hardly have asked more from any past, present, or future member or chairman of the S. E. C. This is appeasement with a vengeance.

I have quoted from the interview in the New York Times of March 29, after the writer thought Mr. Douglas' nomination would be approved by the United States Senate on the 28th.

This is giving Wall Street far more than it could have dreamed of asking. To be sure, Mr. Douglas, who had only 2 weeks earlier rejected proposed amendments, recommended in his interview that any amendments to these two statutes be postponed for the time being. Wall Street will be ready to wait for a time, now that it has received the blessing and benediction of Mr. Douglas and his weighty recommendations, all with a view to cutting up statutes from which Wall Street has been striving to escape ever since those statutes were enacted.

I desire to call particular attention to Mr. Douglas' statement in December 1938, that the axis he had established between the S. E. C. and the New York Stock Exchange "has withstood its first shock perfectly." The shock to which he was referring was the refusal of the so-called reform administration of the New York Stock Exchange to take any action in the Whitney case, and the consequent resignation of the public member of the exchange's governing board, President Robert M. Hutchins, of the University of Chicago. I read his letter of resignation yesterday. How did the axis withstand this shock? By Mr. Douglas' complete and abject capitulation to the New York Stock Exchange. Instead of himself doing anything about it, he, in effect, said: "You, the stock exchange, have shut the door. Very well; we will shut the door also, and join you in closing our eyes to this offensive situation" to which President Hutchins, at any rate, was unable to close his eyes. When Mr. Douglas said that "the axis has withstood its first shock perfectly," did he mean that something had happened which threatened to pull the two members of the axis apart, by reason of the fact that the loyalties and objectives of the two members of the axis were in conflict? Or did he mean that both members of the axis joined in permitting something to be done or participated in something which was against the public interest? The latter interpretation is not likely. If the former, then whose loyalties prevailed—the loyalties served by the stock exchange, or those served by the S. E. C.? If the S. E. C. yielded to the stock exchange, then, according to Hutchins, it was yielding on an issue that was contrary to public interest and the good name of the exchange. If, on the other hand, the stock exchange yielded to the S. E. C., then we must assume that it was the S. E. C. that did not wish to do anything about a situation in which the public interest was so vitally concerned.

This was an issue so grave that Dr. Hutchins, the distinguished president of the University of Chicago, was compelled to resign as a representative of the public on the board of control or board of supervisors of the stock exchange. He could not obtain the action which in his opinion was mandatory if the public interest was to be served. Why could not Mr. Douglas be as zealous with respect to the public interest as was Dr. Hutchins?

If Mr. Douglas felt that the S. E. C. did not have any further jurisdiction, then he should have indicated that fact. Language could readily have been employed to make it clear. Why did he have to side with the New York Stock Exchange? Why was it incumbent on Mr. Douglas to say that, for the S. E. C., the case was closed? Was it not even less appropriate for him to say that, for the exchange, it is closed?

That was his statement in an interview at that time, just after Dr. Hutchins had resigned. The least that can be said is that Mr. Douglas' zeal for complete inquiry is less than that of Dr. Hutchins, a representative of the public interest on the board. Dr. Hutchins had the courage of his convictions and did what he believed was right, and when the rest of the board refused to adopt his motion, Dr. Hutchins told them he would resign, and he resigned the next day.

Prior to May 1938 it was already known that important officials and other persons in the New York Stock Exchange had been guilty of serious impropriety in concealing the Richard Whitney embezzlements. This matter was brought up yesterday. Some questions were asked, and I wish to go a little further into it. The so-called reform management of the New York Stock Exchange took over control of that stock market in May 1938. The reform management took no action, either by way of discipline, reprimand, or otherwise, against the officials and other persons who were guilty of the concealment. Indeed, a number of those persons continued in office subsequent to May 1938.

Yesterday the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] raised the issue that in his opinion it was Mr. Martin who caused the resignation of Mr. Whitney; but, according to the records which I find, that proves not to be the case. I shall point out the facts.

Mr. Douglas made no attack on the new management of the exchange for its failure to take action. Mr. Douglas was not then a candidate for the United States Supreme Court.

That fact may have been significant. I do not know whether it was or not. At any rate, he made no attack on the Wall Street interests for not backing Dr. Hutchins in going ahead with the investigation of the Whitney case, and said the matter was closed so far as he was concerned. However, as I say, he was not then a candidate for the Supreme Court.

In the period between May and November 1938 the serious impropriety of the course of the leading stock exchange officials and others who had concealed the Whitney embezzlements was emphasized more and more by disclosures in the investigation into the Whitney affair. The management of the New York Stock Exchange took no action by way of discipline, or otherwise.

During this entire period Mr. Douglas made no attack upon the stock exchange management. Instead, he highly praised it as a reform group and gave it his support and backing.

He was not then a candidate for the United States Supreme Court.

In November 1938 the S. E. C. issued its report condemning the leading exchange figures guilty of the concealment of the Whitney embezzlements. Mr. Douglas made no mention of the failure of the new management of the exchange to discipline, reprimand, or take any action with respect to the persons guilty of those improprieties. Instead, at the end of the condemnation report Mr. Douglas made it clear that the new management of the exchange was of very different caliber, and in effect praised it highly. That was the effect of the S. E. C. report of the investigation of the charges against Mr. Whitney.

Mr. Douglas was not then a candidate for the Supreme Court.

Toward the end of December 1938 President Robert M. Hutchins, of the University of Chicago, a so-called public member of the Board of Governors of the New York Stock Exchange, resigned because of the refusal of the management of the New York Stock Exchange to take some action looking to disciplining, reprimanding, or taking other corrective steps against the persons guilty of the concealment of the Whitney embezzlements. I have an article on the Whitney embezzlements which is only a dozen pages or so in length. I can read it if desired. It gives the full history of the case. Mr. Douglas did not attack the management of the exchange for voting against Dr. Hutchins' proposal, and thus in effect forcing his resignation from the governing body of the exchange.

I am not personally acquainted with Dr. Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago, but he is very highly spoken of. Newspaper articles connected him and Mr. Douglas as very close friends a year or two ago. Instead, Mr. Douglas made it clear that his intimate association with the New York Stock Exchange management was going to continue unbroken and unaffected.

Mr. Douglas was not then a candidate for the United States Supreme Court.

On March 15, 1939, Mr. Douglas delivered a vigorous attack on proposals submitted to the S. E. C. by the so-called reform management of the New York Stock Exchange and by other exchanges for two amendments of the stock exchange statute.

Mr. Douglas had at that time been an active candidate for the United States Supreme Court for 30 days, and his candidacy had not yet proved acceptable to the President for submission to the Senate. Meantime Mr. Douglas had been criticized for his unduly close association with the New York Stock Exchange and for his failure to deal appropriately with the stock exchange.

On March 28, 1939, Mr. Douglas was no longer a candidate for nomination to the Supreme Court. His nomination had been sent in to the Senate on March 20, and both the subcommittee and the full Judiciary Committee had unanimously reported their favorable recommendation. The press announced that the Senate would confirm the nomination on that day. The interview Mr. Douglas granted on that day was not going to be published until the following day, when, it was thought, he would already have been confirmed by the Senate.

Those are the plain facts, as seems to be apparent from the newspaper articles I have read.

At this time the Investment Bankers Association and other powerful Wall Street groups had been aroused by the report that a subcommittee of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee was favorably recommending the Barkley bill for regulation of the corporate bond indenture activities of big banks and trust companies, such regulation to be conducted by the S. E. C. This bill had been recommended by the President, by the S. E. C., and, in largely the same form, by Mr. Douglas, the latter having made his recommendation in 1937. Mr. Douglas in 1937 urged the very great importance of passing some such bill as an absolute necessity for the protection of investors.

Mr. Douglas in his interview of March 28, published in the New York Times of March 29, 1939, did not attack the Wall Street group and its vigorous opposition to this bill. On the contrary, without specifically mentioning this bill, he in effect said, by means of a general recommendation against any legislation charging the S. E. C. with additional activities, that no such legislation should be passed. In other words, he took sides with the powerful Wall Street groups against the S. E. C. and against the President, and against the very regulatory authority and statutory proposals which he himself had urged upon congressional committees 2 years earlier as essential for the protection of investors.

I have before me the hearing in which Mr. Douglas testified. There are only 62 pages of it, and I do not know but that I would be justified in reading them. He praised the so-called Barkley bill to the skies at that time, and said that it was necessary in order to protect the investors in bonds throughout the Nation. I think something is necessary to protect them, for there have been great losses under the old system of buying and promoting the sale of bonds, appointing certain men to look after them, and so forth. The bill was reported this morning, and I hope it will be passed.

Did the single case of Mr. Douglas' attack on Wall Street, already noted, have anything to do with his desire to get to the Supreme Court? Light is thrown on this question by articles recently published by good friends of his who urged his nomination to the Supreme Court. One of them is Arthur Krock, of the New York Times, who, in its March 26, 1939, issue, explained that the proposals of the stock exchanges attacked by Mr. Douglas on March 15, 1939, should not have been submitted to him at that particular juncture. Mr. Krock explained that Mr. Douglas had then been attacked as not being a liberal; that he had to prove his liberalism; and that it was not a time when he could consider the proposals in a nonpolitical, impersonal way.

Columnist friends of Mr. Douglas subsequently published an article, which appeared in the Washington Times-Herald of April 3, 1939, in which they said that "one decisive influence in making up his—the President's—mind to name Douglas was the S. E. C. chairman's sizzling retort to the Wall Street moguls," that is to say, the attack Douglas delivered against their proposals on March 15, 1939.

It should be repeated that both Mr. Krock and the other columnists just mentioned have been close to Mr. Douglas for some years, were backing him for the Supreme Court long before he was nominated, and may therefore be presumed to know the real facts about what he had in mind when he made the attack on the exchange, the reason he made the attack, and the successful effect it had for himself.

Mr. President, those are my sentiments on this situation. Other Members of the Senate, of course, who have heard my remarks can draw their own conclusions; that is their privilege; but it appears to me that, after what apparently seem to be the facts have been brought out, the name of Mr. Douglas should be sent back to the committee and a full investigation should be made to ascertain whether or not Mr. Douglas is lined up with the stock exchange of Wall Street; whether he is a pawn, as has been said by one of the newspaper writers, of Wall Street interests; whether he is hooked up particularly with great bankers and other business interests and trust companies; and whether or not he played politics in that charge against the New York Stock Exchange on the 15th of March—5 days before he received the nomination.

I have here a clipping from a newspaper for which I have no particular admiration, but the name of the writer of the article is signed, and I am told that he is a very efficient and trustworthy correspondent. The clipping is from the Chicago Tribune, under a Washington, D. C., date line of March 18. It is entitled "S. E. C. Suppresses Charge Against Own Official—Involves L. A. Pettit and Victor Emanuel—By John Fisher."

I am sorry again that the Chamber is so well emptied, for this is rather an important statement, in my opinion. If it is not true, it should be investigated by the committee that considered Mr. Douglas' appointment, to ascertain its falsity.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 18.—The Securities and Exchange Commission has "mysteriously" dropped collusion charges against one of its officials, it was learned today. The other person involved is an influential New Deal utilities magnate. The official in the Public Utilities Division of the S. E. C. was tried secretly by the Commission last October and November, but the transcript of the hearing and the report of the examining committee have been carefully suppressed.

The S. E. C. official involved, L. A. Pettit, has been retained and four subordinates in his own department who testified against him have been removed from the scene of friction. Two resigned and the two others were transferred to other divisions.

Mr. President, it is the same old situation of bureau control; when any employee has the courage to complain against something which he thinks is absolutely wrong—when an act has been committed by some of his superiors and he has the nerve and courage to express the conviction that he believes the act is wrong and should be investigated—after investigation the man against whom the charges are made is whitewashed, while the man who has the courage to make the charges is dismissed from office for his good work. A strange situation.

I wish to read a little more from this article:

FEAR PUBLIC KNOWLEDGE

S. E. C. officials are jittery—

This was on the 18th of March—

S. E. C. officials are jittery lest the facts be made public. William O. Douglas, Chairman of the S. E. C. and reportedly the No. 1 candidate for appointment by President Roosevelt to the United States Supreme Court, will neither discuss nor comment upon the case, his office reported today. Furthermore, he will say nothing on whether the official has been definitely cleared of the charges against him.

An aide to Douglas said that "the S. E. C. still considers that its laundry is in its own back yard"— inferring that it is not a matter of public importance.

That is probably the case—

Oh, no, Mr. President; of course it is not a matter of public importance when a member of an important governmental regulatory body such as the S. E. C. tries to induce and encourage those who are making an investigation of a company in which a friend of the member is interested, to make a favorable report so that his friend may get an advantage. Of course it is not a matter of public interest that when some one has the courage of his convictions to complain against such a man, the laundry is washed in the back yard and nobody knows anything about it. Yes; the back yard is a good place for their laundry; at least they do not dare to bring it out into the light of day; and I do not believe, either, that the Senate of the United States dares to send this nomination back to the committee with instructions to investigate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire whether the Senator has any information whether Mr. Pettit is still retained in the S. E. C.?

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, yes; the article sets forth that Mr. Pettit was retained in his job. I have not finished with the story as yet; there is more to it. The most interesting part is yet to come, I will say to the Senator from Utah.

The charges involved Pettit, who is assistant to C. Roy Smith, director of the S. E. C.'s public utilities division, and Victor Emanuel, New York financier, who is president of the Standard Power & Light Corporation, chairman of the Standard Gas & Electric Corporation, and president of the Aviation & Transportation Corporation, old Cord concern. All are Chicago companies.

TESTIFIES FOR PETTIT

Emanuel came from New York to testify on behalf of Pettit and opened his remarks by expressing astonishment that he, a good new dealer, was being questioned in view of his activity in President Roosevelt's 1932 campaign and the vast amount of money he raised. A report to Congress on Democratic contributions shows that Emanuel personally gave $8,500—to the cause in 1932. There were three instalments—$1,000 on May 23, $5,000 on October 10, and $2,500 on October 22.

Just a small sum—

If that was not enough to whitewash one of his friends, I do not know how much it would take; and his friend was whitewashed, Mr. President. At least that is the supposition, and we cannot find the facts of the case. They have not been given out.

Testimony before the S. E. C. during its investment trust investigation last summer also revealed that Emanuel accomplished through the S. E. C. what he unsuccessfully tried to attain prior to the S. E. C.'s creation—control of the Standard Gas & Electric Corporation.

The contribution gained Mr. Emanuel some more. Besides clearing his friend, who was trying to do something for him, he got control of this big corporation in Chicago.

Pettit, who was brought into the S. E. C. through Emanuel's influence, was accused of trying to gain favorable action by financial analysts in his department on a petition in 1937 of Northern States Power Co. of Minnesota, a subsidiary of Standard Gas.

The Senator from Minnesota is not in the Chamber at the moment. The Northern States Power Co. operates in my part of the country. I am quite familiar with it.

For reclassification of its preferred stock, a procedure which would have benefited Emanuel.

That is what Mr. Pettit was trying to bring about. He was trying to induce the people who were making the analysis and doing the investigating to favor his friend Emanuel. They would not do it and told about it, and the investigation took place.

Emanuel admitted that he had recommended Pettit for a job with the S. E. C. when Ward Perrott, who was director of personnel for the S. E. C. when the Public Utility Division was set up in 1935, asked a partner of Emanuel & Co., investment bankers of New York, where he could get some good men for the Utility Division.

Of course, they would go to the public utilities to get a good man for the Utility Division, and Mr. Emanuel was kind enough to recommend his friend Pettit for the job; and Mr. Pettit was appointed and apparently has made good for Mr. Emanuel. Mr. Emanuel, of course, deserved to be able to name the appointee, because he had contributed the paltry sum of $8,500 to Roosevelt's campaign in 1932. They undoubtedly want some more money for the campaign next year, and they are laying the foundations to get it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; I am glad to yield.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, the information which the Senator is now giving us comes from the Chicago Tribune.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes, it does; under date of March 18. There has been plenty of time in which to contradict it.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator any evidence corroborating the Tribune statement?

Mr. FRAZIER. This is the only thing I have. I talked to a reporter of the newspaper, and he spoke in the highest terms of the man who had written the article. In my opinion, the statement would not have stood for that length of time unless there had been more truth than fiction in it.

Mr. NORRIS. The information I was trying to get was whether the statements made in the article are corroborated by any evidence except the Chicago Tribune itself.

Mr. FRAZIER. I have not tried to look it up otherwise.

Mr. NORRIS. The weakness of the statements, as I see the matter, comes from that fact. A charge made by the Chicago Tribune would not be even prima facie evidence of its truth.

Mr. FRAZIER. I stated in the beginning, before I read the article, that I held no brief for the Chicago Tribune. I think the only time they ever mentioned my name in their newspaper was one time when I went down to speak in Chicago at a labor meeting, and a group met me at the station when I got off the train. I was surprised to see so many persons. There were about a hundred persons there, and they had a little band and marched up to their hall, and I was quite delighted with my reception. I think it was the Chicago Tribune which printed an article making some comment on the matter and saying—that was years ago, when I was in office in North Dakota—that only a handful of the thousands of labor men in Chicago met the Governor of North Dakota at the station, and the affair was a fizzle. I read the article at the meeting and said I had been met by the largest number of city people that had ever met me at any railroad station in my life when I went anywhere to speak. Generally I could not get a corporal's guard of city people to listen to me.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, did the Senator give the name of the person who wrote the article?

Mr. FRAZIER. It is by John Fisher, of the Chicago Tribune Press Service.

Here is another article from the Chicago Tribune. This is also by Mr. Fisher, under date of March 20. The headlines are:

EMANUEL WINS HIGH JOBS WITH NEW DEAL'S AID—HEADS FIRMS UNDER S. E. C. JURISDICTION

(By John Fisher)

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 20.—The meteoric rise of Victor Emanuel, New Deal financier, to prominence in American corporate affairs in recent years can be traced directly to his having the right contacts.

This newspaper revealed in a news story last Sunday how Emanuel, of New York and England, was involved in a secret investigation last fall by the Securities and Exchange Commission on charges of collusion between him and L. A. Pettit, Jr., assistant in the S. E. C.'s Public Utility Division.

Close contacts between the two were admitted but Emanuel pointed out how he had aided President Roosevelt's campaign in 1932, contributing $8,500 personally. The S. E. C. higher-ups subsequently hushed the charges.

And so forth, the same as the other story.

Mr. President, I have taken more time than I intended to take. I did not become interested in this nomination at all until my attention was called to the subject by these newspaper articles, and I then looked into it. I have a great deal more material, and could take a great deal more time. I could occupy the rest of the afternoon. In fact, I received a message from some labor representatives asking me to take up the entire afternoon. They said they would agree to get more help tomorrow. I do not know whether or not they can do so. I do not know how many are interested. Very few of the Members of the Senate seem to be interested, and I do not know that it is worth while for me to take up any more time.

But, Mr. President, in my opinion this is an important situation. We are considering confirming the nomination of a young man to the Supreme Court of the United States. He is 40 or 41 years of age, as I understand. He probably will have about 30 years of service on the Supreme bench. As I stated yesterday, so far as I have been able to find, he has not taken any interest in progressive measures affecting the common people, such as labor measures, agricultural measures, or the rights of the common people in general.

These newspaper articles indicate that while the name of Mr. Douglas was being considered, and he was being criticized by some of the liberal magazines for not being as liberal as he was supposed to be, and it was stated that he was lined up with Wall Street, on the 15th of March, 5 days before his nomination came in, he had an opportunity to speak, and he took the opportunity, and made a red-hot criticism of Wall Street interests, and "riled" them very much. The reporter said two or three times that the Wall Street interests "saw red"; and 5 days later his nomination came to the Senate. Some of the newspapers, of course, said that Mr. Douglas had proved his right to be a liberal by criticizing Wall Street. His nomination came to the Senate; and on the morning of the 28th of last month the newspapers said that the nomination was going to be confirmed that day by the Senate, probably unanimously. For some reason or other the majority leader moved an adjournment without the Senate having an executive session. The Senate adjourned early that afternoon, as I recall, about half past 2, or some such matter; I do not know why; but, anyway, the Senate adjourned without having an executive session, and Mr. Douglas' name did not come up, and the interview was printed in the New York Times on the next day, March 29. In that interview Mr. Douglas practically repudiated all he had ever said in criticism of the New York Stock Exchange, and made a good fellow of himself, and even indirectly took at least a sort of a left-handed "swat" at the S. E. C., which he was about to leave, and said, in substance, that they did not need to branch out any more; that they did not need new legislation; that they were at the peak of their usefulness, and so forth.

Now, Mr. President, another case comes up, according to the Chicago Tribune, of a good supporter of the present administration contributing money, a man who had gotten a friend appointed, and this friend was trying, through a crooked deal, apparently, according to this report, at least, to get something for the friend who had so kindly gotten him appointed. An investigation was started, and all that resulted from the investigation, apparently, was that the two men who had the courage to complain about what they thought this man was doing that was wrong were dismissed for their courage and their faithfulness to the American citizens in protecting the rights of the people who were paying their salaries. They were dismissed from their positions, and two more were transferred to some other division, "removed from the point of friction," the article said. There evidently was some friction.

Mr. President, I say again that before the Senate confirms the nomination of a man for the United States Supreme Court, for service for possibly 30 years on the highest tribunal in this Nation, or in the world, so far as that goes, it seems to me there should be some investigation of what I will call these newspaper charges, because that is all I have had time to develop. But I assure my colleagues that there is much more that could be presented if I were given time. I could take just as long tomorrow on new matter which has not been touched as yet as I have taken today, if I were given the time to have it looked up.

I think that under the circumstances the nomination of Mr. Douglas should be sent back to the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate with instructions to the committee to investigate a little further some of these charges, to convince themselves whether or not Mr. Douglas is really working with Wall Street and has been friendly to Wall Street, as the newspapers have said, all these months, or whether or not this man Pettit got a square investigation, whether he was whitewashed or not, whether or not politics was played in the report on Wall Street on the 15th of March.

Mr. President, the progressive, thinking people of the Nation would like to know what the facts are, and I think they are entitled to know. But they cannot find out the facts unless a further investigation is made by a committee of the United States Senate.

I spoke of the fact that Mr. Douglas was not willing to go along with the president of the Chicago University, who had accepted a position representing the public interest on the governing board of the stock exchange of New York, and when he found, through some investigation conducted there, that the Whitney case had not been thoroughly taken care of, he resigned. I have an article on the Whitney case here.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. FRAZIER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HATCH. Does the Senator happen to know the attitude of the president of the Chicago University as to Mr. Douglas' nomination to the Supreme Court?

Mr. FRAZIER. According to the newspaper reports again, he was a close friend of Mr. Douglas, and I take it he heartily endorses him, but I do not know.

Mr. HATCH. For the information of the Senator, my information is that he was heartily in favor of the nomination, and is in favor of its confirmation.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator has indicated that he objects to the confirmation because Judge Douglas has made no record in matters pertaining to labor and agriculture.

Mr. FRAZIER. And civil liberty.

Mr. NEELY. Yes; and civil liberty. Let me invite the attention of the able Senator from North Dakota to the fact that because of the efforts of Judge Douglas the following was written into the chapter of the bankruptcy law which pertains to corporate reorganization:

> The judge may, for cause shown, permit a labor union or employees' association, representative of employees of the debtor, to be heard on the economic soundness of the plan affecting the interests of the employees.

I am reliably informed that the language which Judge Douglas proposed was even more favorable to labor than that just quoted, which the Congress approved.

It is earnestly submitted that Judge Douglas' action in this case alone proves that he is not only friendly to labor, but that he has been on the alert to protect the interests of those who toil.

In response to the Senator's objection to the nominee on the ground that he has made no record relative to agriculture, let me state that in the course of a conversation with Mr. Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, this afternoon, he informed me that he personally favors the confirmation of Judge Douglas' nomination, and that in his opinion the confirmation is generally favored by the American farmers.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, of course the amendment the Senator has read with regard to the Bankruptcy Act sounds very good. As I understand, Mr. Douglas specialized in bankruptcy law while he was holding the chair of law in Yale University and undoubtedly was very familiar with bankruptcy legislation.

So far as the recommendation of Mr. O'Neal goes—perhaps I had better not say what I had thought of saying, but I do not think Mr. O'Neal is much of a representative of the farmers. Anything Secretary Wallace wants, Mr. O'Neal is for a thousand percent, and has been all during the present administration.

Mr. President, I do not think there is any use of my taking any more time. Those who have been kind enough to listen to my remarks certainly have gotten my viewpoint. I personally should like very much to see the nomination go back to the committee for reconsideration; but, as has been before stated, the subcommittee and the full committee reported the nomination unanimously. Apparently there was no objection raised in the committee. I do not know how far the committee went in attempting to get any facts, or what they did. At any rate, it seems to me that the nomination should go back to the committee for further investigation.

I appreciate the kind attention of Senators in listening to what I have had to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

Mr. MALONEY obtained the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	La Follette	Radcliffe
Andrews	Downey	Lee	Reed
Ashurst	Ellender	Lodge	Reynolds
Austin	Frazier	Logan	Russell
Bankhead	George	Lucas	Schwartz
Barbour	Gerry	Lundeen	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Gillette	McCarran	Sheppard
Bilbo	Glass	McKellar	Shipstead
Bone	Green	McNary	Smathers
Borah	Guffey	Maloney	Smith
Brown	Gurney	Mead	Stewart
Bulow	Harrison	Miller	Taft
Burke	Hatch	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Hayden	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Herring	Neely	Townsend
Caraway	Hill	Norris	Tydings

Clark, Mo.	Hughes	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Overton	Wheeler
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper	White
Davis	King	Pittman	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I shall not unduly detain the Senate, and under ordinary circumstances I should not now be speaking in behalf of Mr. Douglas. So much has been said and written about him in most of the newspapers and periodicals of the country during the past several years, and more particularly during the past month, that I think the Members of the Senate and the people of the country are adequately informed concerning the man, his brilliance, his courage, and his integrity. But for the RECORD I shall make a statement in order that at some time in the future those who might have occasion to look back upon the debate in the Senate will find therein some answer to the charges, inferences, and inferential accusations of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER].

I am certain, as are other Members of the Senate, that the Senator from North Dakota is inspired by high motives, but Mr. President, I cannot help but feel that someone somewhere has preyed upon his sincerity and devotion to the cause of good government. The Senator said yesterday—and I referred to it at the time, and wish again today to remind the Senate of his statement—that he might be wrong in everything that he said, and, without intending to be unkind, I should like to say that, in my opinion, he is wrong with respect to almost everything he has said.

Mr. President, in contradiction of the repeated statement of the Senator from North Dakota that Mr. Douglas was a candidate for this high office, please let me say that he was at no time a candidate for the office.

The subcommittee appointed by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary served notice to the country, as well as to the Congress, that committee meetings would be held and an opportunity would be granted to anyone who wished to make a statement to appear before the committee. Not a single voice in the entire Nation was raised against Mr. Douglas; and during the time between the first mention of the possibility of his appointment by the President until this day, insofar as I have been able to observe, there has not been a real criticism of the appointment.

Mr. President, I believe that Washington is the best advised and best informed city in the world. It has the good fortune to have in it the outstanding newspapermen of the world, and if there was something wrong they would have found it out by now. But, quite to the contrary, these men of unusual ability and training have combed the life of Chairman Douglas of the Securities and Exchange Commission from the day of his birth; and we find, as a result, perhaps as romantic a tale as has been told since the Civil War.

It seems to me the appointment is an inspiration to the young men of the land, showing that the log-cabin days are not over, and that a man can rise to the heights by his own brilliance and courage and honesty and faithfulness of purpose. The life of William O. Douglas affords to someone with a gift of oratory the subject for a splendid speech.

Mr. President, much has already been said concerning the life of Mr. Douglas. I have no desire greatly to enlarge upon that subject. Even if I had the desire I do not have sufficient gift of language to do justice to the outstanding character whom we are now discussing.

The Senator from North Dakota in commenting at length upon the nomination of Mr. Douglas, and reading from various periodicals, and seeming in other instances to quote from them, for himself only expressed the fear that Mr. Douglas was not sufficiently concerned with civil liberties, with the plight of labor and problems of labor, and with agriculture. It so happens that the nominee is from my State. It also happens that he is an intimate and dear friend of mine. I know that there is no one within or without the Senate who has a greater concern for the civil liberties of this Nation than has Mr. Douglas. When he goes upon the Supreme Court bench, as I am confident he will, if he makes mistakes with respect to labor legislation or labor laws—and I doubt that he will—Senators may be certain that such mistakes, if they happen, will be on the side of labor, because of the compelling sympathy for labor that has been aroused in him as a result of his own life of hardship and toil.

Mr. President, I shall not delay action upon the nomination for very long, but I should like to take sufficient time to tell the Senate again the story, in the limited language which I possess, of a young man who had the reins of responsibility handed to him when he was a mere child, how he accepted responsibility, and how he has driven safely and sanely and courageously down the road during all the following years. In my humble opinion there is no more beautiful or inspiring story in all the history of the Nation than that of this man, who, unlike some other men, denied himself the rich opportunity of material reward during late years, and clung steadfastly to a career which he carved out for himself in early days by devoting his abilities, his energy, and his life to the public service and the common good. He has been here since the beginning of the difficult days, Mr. President, accepting whatever positions came to him, and contributing a full measure of devotion and energy to the responsibilities delegated to him as a result of those positions.

I know this speech is not necessary; but the Senator from North Dakota, without intention, let me say again, with sincerity of purpose, by inference made certain charges which cannot be ignored. He seemed disturbed by the fact that Mr. Douglas and the New York Stock Exchange have worked closely together.

One of the outstanding achievements of the Roosevelt administration has been the demonstration by the Securities and Exchange Commission that it can obtain the cooperation of business. This is a significant achievement. It is by far preferable to a condition of constant turmoil and battle.

Such cooperation does not entail "selling the public down the river," as the Senator from North Dakota, I think, in a careless moment, suggested yesterday. Nor does it entail abdication by an agency such as the Securities and Exchange Commission. Rather it means that the agency instead of wasting its energies on an impossible fight to compel obedience to the law, carries business with it along the road laid down by Congress. This accomplishment is a quality of great administration, and is the notable achievement which has gained for William O. Douglas his great and well-deserved reputation.

We all know that once the business community accepts the letter and spirit of the law, there results a situation far preferable to the chaos which follows when business constantly fights the law. The great accomplishment of the Securities and Exchange Commission is that it has demonstrated that Government and business can pull together. If we had more pulling together of that kind, we should now be further along in our whole program.

So it is that the entire public, whatever its political views, has recognized the Securities and Exchange Commission under Mr. Douglas' chairmanship as the most successful agency of this administration. Without yielding an ounce of authority, or relaxing the vigor of its administration, it has succeeded in bringing about the cooperation of business in enforcing the laws of the country.

The Senator from North Dakota also said, or implied, that Mr. Douglas took one public position on March 15, 1939, with regard to amendments to the Securities Act and the Securities and Exchange Act, and subsequently reversed himself. Personally I am much concerned with that charge, Mr. President, because I was a Member of the Congress and a member of the committee which prepared the original Securities Act, and I have attempted as best I could to live with it and to watch it. I have been vitally concerned with it since the very beginning in 1933.

When I read the statement of the Securities and Exchange Commission of March 15, 1939, on the suggestions for amendment of the Securities Act and the Securities and Exchange Act made by the so-called Hancock committee, one thing deeply impressed me. It was the fact that while the Securities and Exchange Commission had been willing to cooperate in enforcing the law, it would not in any form or manner whatever be a party to emasculating the law.

The Hancock report, as I have read it, would admit back into the market so-called "good" pools. In 1934 the Senate rejected arguments advanced to it by representatives of the New York Stock Exchange that "good" pools should be permitted. They, along with all other pools, were outlawed. The position taken on March 15 by the Securities and Exchange Commission reaffirmed the soundness of the position of the Congress in 1934.

As I read the record, and as I am sure is the fact, the Securities and Exchange Commission has not altered one iota the position which it took on March 15. In that connection, it is interesting to note a letter released to the press on March 20, 1939, from George C. Mathews, Acting Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, to Mr. Martin, president of the New York Stock Exchange. In that letter Mr. Mathews, speaking for the Commission, stated:

> You know our views on section 9 (a) (2) and on certain other matters recently suggested.

Section 9 (a) (2) is the manipulation section, which the Hancock committee report sought to weaken. Mr. Mathews, speaking for the Commission in place of Chairman Douglas, reaffirmed the Commission's attitude on that point. There is, therefore, no retreat, no change in position, no alteration of views whatever. However, Mr. Mathews went on to say—and I quote again:

> But, apart from those, I assure you that any suggestions which you may have to offer, touching the possible improvement of the act or the possible modification of regulations issued thereunder, will have the prompt consideration of the Commission. The round table seems to us to afford the best method of pursuing any such suggestions.

This position seems absolutely above reproach. Is any public agency justified in taking the position that it has reached the point of perfection? Can anyone possibly criticize any such agency for saying to a stock exchange or to any business that it will be glad to consider any suggestions touching the improvement of the statute or the improvement of its regulations? It seems eminently fair and reasonable and consistent with its public duties and responsibilities for any such agency at all times to take exactly that position.

So by March 20, 1939, the position of the Securities and Exchange Commission with respect to the proposals of the Hancock committee had not changed one iota.

What subsequently happened? The article by Mr. Krock under a Washington date line, March 28, is absolutely devoid of any statement inconsistent with the position of the Securities and Exchange Commission with respect to the Hancock committee report. In that article Mr. Douglas is said to believe that any agency such as the Securities and Exchange Commission should not be allowed to become too big and to cover too much ground. Will any Senator deny that bigness itself creates a grave problem? Let me say at this point that that situation has been pointed out in the past by no less a personality and great figure than the present Chief Justice of the United States.

In the article referred to Mr. Douglas is quoted as saying that the first responsibility of an independent public agency such as the S. E. C. is to Congress. Will any Senator deny the soundness of that conclusion? The only reference to amending the statutes is contained in the following paragraph from Mr. Krock's article:

> The Chairman went on to say he thought that at some later time an eminent drafting committee, representing all legitimate interests, should undertake to consolidate and perfect the Securities Act and the Securities Exchange Act, which are the legal charters of the Securities and Exchange Commission. They were, he pointed out, written separately and somewhat to meet two different situations. Necessarily therefore duplications, ambiguities, and probably some extra and unintended exactions on honest business are to be found. But the quest for recovery is affected now by any tampering with laws in the category of these two acts, he said, and revisions can well await a more propitious time.

As I read that statement, it merely means that at some future time the various statutes administered by the Securities and Exchange Commission can be consolidated in the interests of efficiency, and that certain ambiguities can be eliminated. It would be most surprising to anyone acquainted with legislation to think this was not so; but that certainly is a far cry from substantive changes of the character covered by the Hancock committee. No innuendo, no inference would justify any conclusion from Mr. Krock's column that any of the suggestions in the Hancock committee report should at some time be adopted.

The words used by Mr. Krock, "ambiguities and duplications," certainly do not mean, and cannot by any stretch of the imagination be interpreted to mean, the reintroduction into the market of pools. One thing is very clear from Mr. Krock's article, and that is that Mr. Douglas does not feel that the Congress is to concern itself with highly technical and relatively unimportant suggestions designed to improve and polish the securities and exchange statutes. If, as Mr. Douglas suggests, $15,000,000,000 worth of securities have been successfully registered under the Securities and Exchange Act, that statute is not impairing the capital market.

I wish to speak briefly, if I may, Mr. President, on the profession by the Senator from North Dakota of some anxiety because Commissioner Douglas failed to denounce the Hancock report until it was presented to him. This charge seems to me at best to be ridiculous.

As I understand the press reports, the Hancock committee report was not delivered to the S. E. C. until the afternoon of March 14. As I also understand the press reports, the S. E. C. was not represented in that conference. As a matter of fact, it would have been highly improper if it had been so represented. However that may be, the report was not actually received until March 14. How could anyone comment publicly upon an unseen report?

To be sure, there were in the days preceding March 14 various so-called "dope" stories in the press prophesying what that report would contain; but, in fairness to the members of the Hancock committee, would it have been just to denounce those views in advance of their adoption by the committee? How could anyone tell what the committee would report? Perhaps those newspaper articles were inspired. Perhaps they were "trial balloons." I do not know. Nor do I know how anyone else could have known. After all, this is, and will continue to be, a free country.

People have a right to talk on any subject. What would we think of one of the independent agencies of the Government if it tried to prevent representatives of business meeting to discuss problems of such agency? What would we think of any public official who had a taboo list of topics which could not be discussed? I say that the S. E. C. could be justly criticized if it had at any time attempted to choke off free public discussion of these important problems. However, having received the report of the committee, it was under the strong public duty of speaking out. If the S. E. C. had delayed a few days to consider the Hancock report, it might well have created the public impression that there were matters in the report for negotiation and discussion. I say that, in the public interest, it owed a duty to speak clearly and promptly on the matter of stock-market pools; and Chairman Douglas did speak. If the Commission had not done so, or if the chairman had not done so, it would have been guilty of misleading the public as to the reasonableness of those proposals. That it could not have spoken earlier is evidenced by the fact that it did not receive the report until March 14.

Mr. President, another one of the matters to which the able and conscientious senior Senator from North Dakota referred is the Whitney case. As I recall, the Senator from North Dakota said, or inferred, that Mr. Douglas failed to take action on the Whitney case after the New York Stock Exchange refused to discipline the members involved. There are several factors relating to this charge which should be noted.

In the first place, as I read the public record, it was the S. E. C. which broke this case within 12 or 14 hours after its ascertainment of the facts. That was on March 8, 1938.

In the second place, it was the vigorous prosecution by the S. E. C. which resulted in the entire disclosure of all the unsavory facts relating to that episode. Public hearings were conducted by the S. E. C. during the spring of 1938, and a penetrating report on that subject was written and made public. For fairness and for thoroughness that report, in my opinion, is one of the outstanding public documents of our period.

In the third place, I understand, from the public record, that the whole matter was referred to the stock exchange for appropriate action. I also understand that the stock exchange subsequently failed to take any action. On that point I think certain facts are extremely pertinent. One may ask why the S. E. C. did not take direct action. I understand it was not done for the very simple reason that, aside from Richard Whitney, who was in prison, none of the other persons involved had violated any provisions of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 or the rules and regulations thereunder.

I am sure there must have been many other cases which the S. E. C. for similar reasons has referred to the stock exchanges. What else is there that the S. E. C. can do under such circumstances? It denounced the conduct of various persons in its public report. Is it to keep on denouncing them continuously, or is the Government really anxious to create good feeling with business?

Furthermore, what would we think of an agency that attempted to take action which it had no vestige of authority to take? Is the S. E. C., or any other agency, because it thinks someone has engaged in improper conduct, authorized or justified, under this free Government, in taking extralegal action? Mr. President, such a thing is unthinkable. If the S. E. C. had attempted to do more than it did, it would have been guilty of usurping powers which the Congress had not bestowed upon it, and it could quite properly have been haled before the Congress. Unless an agency such as the S. E. C. should stick rigorously to its legal powers, we would have in this country the worst form of oppression imaginable. Certainly it cannot be said that, on the basis of its outstanding public record, the S. E. C. has failed to take any action which it could properly and legally take. Any other conclusion is defamatory in nature.

Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota expressed much worry about the attitude of Mr. Douglas on the subject of labor. I have previously said this afternoon that I enjoy and am extremely proud of the intimate friendship of Mr. Douglas. I suppose, although I have not been here very long, that there is not a Member of the Congress who has any question about my attitude concerning labor.

I cannot recall that I have yet voted against a labor proposal since I have been a Member of Congress, and more particularly as a Member of the House I labored to the best of the humble and feeble abilities I possess in the early days of the present administration to secure the enactment of laws concerned with the plight of labor and designed to improve and having the effect of improving the conditions of labor. I was distressed, because of this friendship, to hear the Senator from North Dakota say this afternoon, without calling the name, that some one connected with labor was anxious that the confirmation of this nomination be delayed.

I presume it is only natural, Mr. President, that a man engaged in so responsible and rigid a regulation of the affairs of business as is the Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission at some place along the line, sticking to the task that is his, should tread upon the toes or trespass upon the liberties of some individual.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I inquire of the able Senator from Connecticut if it is not a fact that no objection to the confirmation of Mr. Douglas' nomination has been voiced by any labor organization or any representative of a labor union?

Mr. MALONEY. I thank the Senator for asking the question. Of course, he knows, as the country knows, that not only did any representative of labor fail to make a protest, but there was not a single one of the 131,000,000 people of the country who appeared to express a word of protest against the nomination of Mr. Douglas.

Mr. NEELY. And is it not a fact that neither the Congress of Industrial Organizations nor the American Federation of Labor has to this hour objected to the confirmation of Mr. Douglas' nomination?

Mr. MALONEY. That is entirely true, so far as I am aware. But, Mr. President, I should like to go beyond that and say that I cannot help but feel that those sincere members of the C. I. O. and the conscientious members of the American Federation of Labor who are anxious to advance the cause of labor and who are anxious to see labor accorded a full measure of justice applaud the nomination of Mr. Douglas, and they must be grateful to the President for the unusual selection he has made to the Supreme Court.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. I do not think what I am about to say is any qualification of the Senator's statement. However, I was a member of the Judiciary Committee, as the Senators knows, and had the pleasure of moving that the nomination of Mr. Douglas be reported favorably to the Senate. The only communication that came to the commitee, so far as I am advised, was from some distinguished gentleman or extinguished gentleman—I do not know which—who said that the Justices of the Supreme Court ought to be prohibitionists.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. Douglas could not qualify under such a restriction.

Mr. KING. The gentleman in question, however, had no objection to Mr. Douglas.

Mr. ASHURST. That is correct.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I have no desire to burn incense to myself on this occasion, but if I have ever been accused of radicalism back in my State it is on the ground that I am an extremist in my labor views. I know the attitude of Chairman Douglas. He is not an extremist. He has had the benefit of much more extensive training than I have had. He is a deep student of the law, and he has that rare patience that comes to men who have known the bitter struggles of life.

I should like to say again, because at the moment labor is a part of the discussion, that if mistakes are made on matters concerning labor, and Mr. Douglas is among those in error, in my opinion the mistakes he makes will be on the side of labor; and I will state that that is where I myself should like to see the mistakes made.

Mr. Douglas' professional and public life have centered upon his chosen task of cleaning up and improving our financial system. Consequently, he has had few occasions upon which to express his views about labor; but on those few occasions he has spoken and acted so as to leave no doubt that he is aware of labor's problems, and is sympathetic to its proper aspirations.

As Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission he has won the loyalty and devotion of all the employees of that agency because of his absolute fairness, and his sympathy with their problems. Recently he issued a statement on a career service for the S. E. C. which shows not only the qualities of a great administrator but also a sympathetic understanding of the problems of employees, whatever their rank.

The first job that Mr. Douglas did as an official of this administration was as director of the Protective Committee Study of the Securities and Exchange Commission. In this connection Mr. Douglas insisted upon labor's right to be heard in connection with the reorganization of the businesses in which they were employed.

In part I of the report prepared by Mr. Douglas and transmitted by the S. E. C. to Congress as a result of this study, the following recommendation for participation of employees in reorganization proceedings was made (p. 901):

> 5. While control of the (reorganization) proceedings should lie in the hands of bona fide security holders and their direct representatives, participation in the proceedings should not be denied other interests. Thus, management should be accorded ample opportunity to be heard. By the same token, representatives of the employees of a corporation should have a right to be heard on matters connected with proposed plans of reorganization which affect their interests.

Mr. President, in connection with the Chandler bill, to which the able and distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] made reference in a brief colloquy during the discussion of the Senator from North Dakota, an amendment of the reorganization provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, Mr. Douglas gave concrete expression to his conviction that employees have a right equally with management and stockholders to be heard concerning the reorganization of companies which have been built up in part as a result of their labor. As originally suggested by Mr. Douglas and introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative CHANDLER, the bill provided (H. R. 6439, 75th Cong., 1st sess., subsec. h (8)):

> Labor unions and employees' associations, representative of employees of the debtor, shall have the right to be heard on the economic soundness of any plan or plans and any provisions thereof affecting the interests of employees.

That is the quotation previously referred to by the Senator from West Virginia, and I think the Senator said that that in itself was to him satisfactory proof of the great interest of this distinguished nominee for the office of Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

At the hearings before the Judiciary Committee of the House Mr. Douglas strongly urged his views in this respect. He said in part—hearing before the Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, on House bill 6439 as reintroduced and reported as House bill 8043, June 3, 1937, pages 188–189:

> This, in our judgment, is a proper recognition of the fact that the interests of management should not be neglected; that it should be accorded ample opportunity to participate in the proceedings and to express its views. At the same time, they should not run the whole show. Now, the Chandler bill makes a very significant advance by broadening the concept of interested persons to include representatives of employees of the debtor. The bill provides (and I might say that this is the recommendation to Congress of the Securities and Exchange Commission, that is, we take full responsibility for that) that labor unions and employees' associations, representatives of employees of the debtor, shall have the right to be heard on the economic soundness of the plans and any provisions thereof affecting the interests of the employees. Now, in many reorganizations in the past courts have been sensitive to the interests and requirements of labor. In other instances such factors have not been adequately considered. The Chandler bill in this respect makes a modest beginning by permitting labor to express its point of view on the plan through their representatives.

In the course of these hearings Mr. Douglas defended his position on this point with sincerity and ability in the face of rigorous examination by Mr. MICHENER, Representative from Michigan. As finally enacted into law, the Chandler bill did not go as far as Mr. Douglas urged. It did not give labor unions or employees' associations an absolute right to be heard concerning reorganization plans, but permitted the judge, for cause shown, to allow them to be heard on the economic soundness of a plan affecting the interests of the employees. The provision, section 206, is as follows:

> The judge may, for cause shown, permit a labor union or employees' association, representative of employees of the debtor, to be heard on the economic soundness of the plan affecting the interests of the employees.

In a speech before the National Association of Credit Men on June 23, 1937, Mr. Douglas explained at greater length the reason for his advocacy of the labor provision in the Chandler Act. He stated:

Labor unions and employees' associations, representative of employees, also are given the right to be heard on the economic soundness of plans and on provisions thereof affecting the interests of labor. The advisability of this provision is clear. Just as the management has an interest in the enterprise which the reorganization plan may vitally affect, so labor is concerned with the soundness of plans. Their jobs, their livelihood, depend upon a sound capital structure and a healthy business structure.

I should like parenthetically to say, in the middle of this statement by Mr. Douglas, that if that is not an expression of sound American principle, if it is not the kind of doctrine we need, if it is not the sort of policy advocated by the careful, thinking people of this generation, then I do not understand what is.

Their jobs, their livelihood, depend upon a sound capital structure and a healthy business structure. They often receive the direct impact of default, for that often means labor displacement. The employees are likely to be primarily concerned with the economic soundness and feasibility of the plan, so that the current reorganization will not be the forerunner of another disastrous collapse. Consequently, it is highly desirable that the court and the trustee have the benefit of the suggestions and criticism of representatives of employees with respect to the reorganization plan. And it is only simple justice that these groups, which are vitally affected by the collapse of business and which are essentially concerned with the stability of business, should have an opportunity to express their opinion on the economic soundness of plans and other aspects which affect their interests.

Mr. President, for the comfort that I know it will give the Members of the Senate, who seem to be so attentively listening and who are so impatiently giving me this much time, let me say that I shall not be much longer, but while on the subject of the possible interests of this nominee I do want to refer briefly to the problem and the plight of the interests of labor.

I desire to read—and I am sorry the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] is not in the Chamber at the moment—from a speech which Mr. Douglas delivered before the Bond Club of New York. It was a famous speech. It was delivered before a group of men engaged in the banking business—representatives of Wall Street. There was no applause for the speech there, although it received widespread and loud acclaim throughout the country. I shall read just a portion of that very interesting speech, which I presume is one of a very great many reasons why the President of the United States was attracted to this brilliant and available man, who, I am certain, never lifted a finger, or encouraged the lifting of a finger, to bring about this highest honor that can come to a member of the legal profession.

I read from that speech:

The labor problem which I mentioned is one of the pressing contemporary conditions which cannot be imperiously treated. Management has a place in our economic sun; but so does labor; so does the investor; and so does the consumer. The real owners of these industrial empires have a growing feeling of distrust and lack of confidence in a management which treats imperiously, unfairly, or selfishly the contemporary demands of labor; they have an increasing recognition of the fact that mid-Victorian attitudes are neither wise nor expedient on the one hand nor fair and equitable on the other; they have a growing resistance to any course which will sacrifice and not protect the human values at stake. Ways must be found to make management responsive to the desires and demands of the real owners of the business. To allow management to continue to place itself above or to pay no heed to the interests of labor, investors, and consumers is to invite disaster. Remote control by an inside few of these fundamental economic and human matters is fatal. There can be in our form of corporate and industrial organization no royalism which can long dictate or control these basic matters.

While the Senator from North Dakota is a champion of labor, I doubt that in all his courageous and interesting and untiring career he ever uttered words that more clearly or effectively or eloquently expressed an interest in labor than those found in this one of a great many utterances of the Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission. It was deeply disappointing to me that the Senator from North Dakota, who seems to have been engaged in intensive research during the past few days, had not been able to find this address and others like it, at least one more of which I am going to read in a few moments.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President——

Mr. MALONEY. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. Will the Senator please state when that speech was delivered?

Mr. MALONEY. This speech, and I should like to say again that this was a much-talked-about speech, was delivered before the Bond Club of New York on the 24th of March 1937, at a time when Mr. Douglas was greatly concerned in attempting to purify and correct the abuses in the financial system which contributed so much to the downfall of the business empire, and created the chaos from which we are trying so hard to extricate ourselves.

Mr. NEELY. And, of course, long before anyone ever suggested that Mr. Douglas should be made a member of the Supreme Court.

Mr. MALONEY. Let me say in answer to the Senator from West Virginia, because I know Mr. Douglas to be a self-effacing, modest, and retiring man, that despite the ambitions that must have been in his breast, at that time a place on the Supreme Court was farther away from his mind than it was from mine, and I am not a member of the legal profession.

I should like to read a very small part of a speech which was delivered at the University of Chicago, of which the much-talked-of Dr. Hutchins is president, and I say "much-talked-of" in connection with the address of the Senator from North Dakota. I should like to add to the earlier suggestion made by a Senator on the floor that it is my understanding that among those who are most appreciative of the contribution Mr. Douglas can make to the Supreme Court is Dr. Hutchins.

I read briefly a comment from the speech to which I have made reference:

High finance has the following characteristics. In the first place it is nothing but a game—a game played for large stakes. Those stakes are other people's money or control over other people's money. Under the aegis of high finance, business becomes pieces of paper—mere conglomerations of stocks, bonds, notes, debentures. Transportation, manufacture, distribution, investment become not vital processes in economic society but channels of money which can be diverted and appropriated by those in control. The farmer with his raw materials, the laborer whose blood and sweat have gone into the steel and the cement, the investor and the consumer who are dependent on the enterprise, become either secondary rather than primary, or inconsequential rather than paramount. Business becomes not service at a profit, but preserves for exploitation. The basic social and economic values in free enterprise disappear. For such reasons one of the chief characteristics of such finance has been its inhumanity. Its ruthlessness has precluded consideration of human values. Its predatory nature has excluded regard for all social values.

Mr. President, I wish briefly to refer to a study directed by Chairman Douglas.

At the conclusion of a study of protective and reorganization committees which Douglas conducted for the S. E. C., he made certain recommendations which were transmitted to Congress by the S. E. C., and which demonstrate not only his legal ability and statesmanship, but also his opposition to the abuses of high finance. He recommended a complete overhauling of the machinery of corporate reorganization by which the powerful financial interests have managed to perpetuate themselves in control at the expense of labor and investors. He condemned those investment bankers who, with their skill and prestige, inflict further losses upon investors whom they had induced to place their money in enterprises which subsequently foundered. He advocated that investment bankers be disqualified from serving on protective committees or otherwise occupying controlling positions in the reorganization process. He urged that an independent trustee be appointed by the court to guide the reorganization of corporations in the interest of all who had a genuine stake; and he had the courage and wisdom to vigorously criticize members of his own profession for their conduct in reorganizations.

He criticized lawyers who serve conflicting interests; for the first time he showed that, instead of their being mere tools to carry out the wishes of the great financial interests, they were frequently the generals who conceived and executed ways and means of enriching the financial powers at the expense of investors and labor. Not only did he call attention to this abuse by lawyers, but he also advocated legislation which would deprive lawyers affiliated with a company's management and its bankers of some of the juiciest plums cherished by the legal profession. He proposed—and Congress enacted into law—a prohibition upon lawyers who were affiliated with the old management or its bankers from being trustees for bankrupt estates or attorneys for the trustees.

Let me briefly refer to the public record of Chairman Douglas' activities in connection with the regulation of the New York Stock Exchange by the S. E. C.

On November 23, 1937, 2 months after he became Chairman, Mr. Douglas, on behalf of the full Commission, issued a statement demanding that stock exchanges reorganize their methods of government in the public interest. He said in part:

> Operating as private-membership associations, exchanges have always administered their affairs in much the same manner as private clubs. For a business so vested with the public interest, this traditional method has been archaic. The task of conducting the affairs of large exchanges (especially the New York Stock Exchange) has become too engrossing for those who must also run their own businesses. And it may also be that there would be greater public confidence in exchanges * * * which recognized that their management should not be in the hands of professional traders but in fact, as well as nominally, in charge of those who have a clearer public responsibility.

The effect of the Commission's demand for stock-exchange reorganization was so strong that almost immediately a substantial portion of the membership of the New York Stock Exchange began a movement for a reform administration.

Under pressure from the Commission a committee headed by Carle C. Conway was formed to formulate a reorganization plan. On January 27, 1938, that committee delivered to the New York Stock Exchange and to the Commission a report recommending sweeping changes in the government of the exchange. This report substituted a paid president and a businesslike governing organization for the old loose committee system of government. It was recognized as an accomplishment of the Commission and as tangible result of the insistence of Mr. Douglas upon meaningful stock exchange reform.

On May 20, 1938, following the adoption of the Conway committee's recommendations by the New York Stock Exchange, Mr. Douglas publicly stated his philosophy of stock-exchange regulation as follows:

> My philosophy was and is that the national securities exchanges should be so organized as to be able to take on the job of policing their members so that it would be unnecessary for the Government to interfere with that business, and that they should demonstrate by action that they were so organized. Now that is something more than cooperation. That is letting the exchanges take the leadership with government playing a residual role. Government would keep the shotgun, so to speak, behind the door, loaded, well oiled, cleaned, ready for use, but with the hope it would never have to be used.

In accordance with that expressed philosophy there were instituted a series of round-table conferences between representatives of the S. E. C. and representatives of the New York Stock Exchange for the purpose of working out the details of regulation embodied in the Conway committee proposals. These conferences have continued up to the present time as part of the Commission's regulatory procedure.

Meanwhile there was taking place a series of events that have become known as "the Whitney case." These began on the morning of March 8, 1938, when Charles R. Gay, then president of the New York Stock Exchange, announced that the firm of Richard Whitney & Co. had been suspended for insolvency. Virtually simultaneously the S. E. C. began its investigation of Richard Whitney and his affairs. On March 17, 1938, Richard Whitney was expelled from the New York Stock Exchange; on April 11 Richard Whitney was sentenced to an indeterminate term of 5 to 10 years in Sing Sing prison on two separate indictments.

It should be noted that the reorganization of the New York Stock Exchange which took place at the insistence of the Commission and of Mr. Douglas was, in effect, a rejection by the exchange membership of the old guard management and the old guard philosophy so long dominated by Richard Whitney and his associates.

The activities of the S. E. C. in general and of Mr. Douglas in particular have been carefully followed in the press by Mr. John T. Flynn, long noted as an outstanding critic of Wall Street. I shall quote from an article by Mr. Flynn appearing in the Scripps-Howard newspapers on March 23, 1939, commenting on the nomination of Mr. Douglas to the Supreme Court. I feel a little guilty in making reference to what one particular newspaperman has said in connection with the nomination of Mr. Douglas, because the entire newspaper profession, and particularly the outstanding newspapermen of Washington, have seemed to rejoice more than any other group over this nomination. They have been close to Mr. Douglas. They are the men who ferret out the weaknesses of men, and are hesitant, because of their training, to applaud until they have an understanding, and because they have a reputation at stake. But I have selected Mr. Flynn because he is recognized by many as an outstanding foe of Wall Street, and possibly to reply through this medium to the Senator from North Dakota. I quote now from Mr. Flynn:

> It is entirely possible that throughout his whole term of office President Roosevelt has made no appointment which will redound more to his fame than the appointment of William O. Douglas to the Supreme Court. * * * There is no man at the bar to whom the President could more safely commit his fame in the future than Douglas. Intellectual and public integrity like Douglas' is often mistaken for radicalism. Men who denounce dishonest bankers and predatory brokers are often called socialists. Of course, radicals do not care anything about making bankers and brokers honest. They wish to sweep them out of existence. * * * Reactionary judges who wink at the depredations of great corporations and bankers may be looked upon as "conservatives" by some, but the true conservative will be the man like Douglas who can see beneath the surface the corrosive and destructive energy in dishonesty in high places.

I should like to say, in conclusion, that it would please me very much, if the publication of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD were not so expensive, to print therein some of the eulogies which have come from every part of the Nation concerning this nomination. The liberal press, the reform press, the reactionary press, the conservative press, the columnists of every type, writers of every kind, bar associations, organizations of one sort and another, have joined in the almost unanimous acclaim and applause of this admirable and wise selection. I cannot make these things a part of the RECORD; but because this appointment has attracted so much attention at this particular time, when there is a need for an appeasement of business—and who will deny that to be so?—the people are familiar with these articles, these stories.

With the richly romantic life of this young man, who was handed the reins of responsibility in childhood—as a result of a lifetime of tireless energy, usefulness, courage, and brilliance—he now approaches the zenith of his profession, a place on the Supreme Court. I am hopeful that there will be a roll call on the nomination.

I thank the Senate for being so patient and kind with me.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, after the very brilliant speech of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] it is unnecessary, I am sure, for any other Member of this body to add anything to what has been said about Chairman Douglas. However, I cannot permit the occasion to pass without adding a word, because I suspect that there is no Member of this body, or of the House of Representatives, with the possible exception of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who has had more opportunity than I to work with Mr. Douglas and to know personally the high qualifications which he will carry to the Supreme Court.

Mr. President, when it came from the House a year ago there was committed to my care by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary the so-called Chandler bill, revising the bankruptcy law, and containing the provisions to which the Senator from Connecticut has alluded with respect to the reorganization of corporations. The Securities and Exchange Commission had done much work in connection with this revision. Chairman Douglas came to the subcommittee over which I had the honor of presiding. He has likewise served as a member of the Temporary National Economic Committee, representing the Securities and Exchange Commission on that body. I can say without any reservation, with respect to his work on both these committees, that he has displayed the courage, the vision, and the understanding which go to make a real statesman and a real judge.

I should have no hesitation in submitting to Mr. Douglas the issue in any question in which I might be involved, knowing full well, as I would, that he would bring to the settlement and determination of that issue a just mind and a courageous nature which would take him to the very heart of the problem. I cannot help feeling that the criticism which was voiced here today has sprung out of an utter misunderstanding of the situation.

Mr. President, I have had the honor to vote on numerous nominations in the Senate, but in no instance have I voted with greater certainty that the Senate is doing the right thing than in the case of the nomination of Mr. Douglas to be a member of the Supreme Court. I shall vote to confirm the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of William O. Douglas to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARKLEY (when Mr. TYDINGS' name was called). The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is unavoidably detained. I am authorized to say that if he were present he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BYRNES (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], and let my vote stand.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] are necessarily absent from the Senate. If present, both Senators would vote "yea."

I also announce that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], who is necessarily detained, would, if present, vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] are detained in Government departments. I am advised that if present and voting these Senators would vote "yea."

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK] are unavoidably detained. I have been requested to announce that if present and voting these Senators would vote "yea."

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is detained in a meeting of the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] is absent because of a death in his family.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are unavoidably detained.

Mr. MCKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed the Senator from Delaware has not voted.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware, which I transfer to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HILL. My colleague the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is detained from the floor on official business. I am authorized to say that if present he would vote "yea."

Mr. BARKLEY. The senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is absent on important public business. I am authorized to say that if present he would vote "yea."

Mr. OVERTON. The junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] is absent, attending a committee meeting. I am authorized to say that if present he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 62, nays 4, as follows:

YEAS—62

Adams	Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Colo.	Overton
Andrews	Connally	King	Pittman

So the nomination of William O. Douglas, of Connecticut, to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States was confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Douglas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

HARRY E. KALODNER

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that before taking up the Douglas nomination today the Senate completed the Calendar of Executive Business for today, with the exception of one nomination, which was passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With the exception of one nomination which went over.

Mr. BARKLEY. While we are in executive session let me say that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who had made a motion to reconsider the confirmation of the nomination of Judge Kalodner, has advised me that he does not desire to press his motion. He has advised the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] to the same effect. It is desirable to have that nomination disposed of. I do not see the Senator from Utah in the Chamber, but I am satisfied that that is his wish.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the motion to reconsider will be withdrawn.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] objected to a nomination from New York. I do not know about the Pennsylvania nomination. Is it still on the calendar?

Mr. BARKLEY. The nomination of Judge Kalodner was confirmed last Friday. The Senator from Utah made a motion to reconsider it.

Mr. HARRISON. The present discussion applies to the Pennsylvania matter?

Mr. BARKLEY. It applies only to the motion to reconsider the Kalodner nomination. The Senator from Utah has indicated to me, and also to the Senator from Pennsylvania, that he does not desire to press the motion.

On the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the nomination of Florence Clark Lynch, of New York, to be appraiser of merchandise in the Customs Service, which nomination is on today's Executive Calendar, was passed over. The Senator from Utah is not present in the Chamber at the moment. I think we should not attempt to pass upon the matter in his absence.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ASHURST. Am I correct in understanding that the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to reconsider the nomination of Judge Kalodner has been withdrawn?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. ASHURST. The nomination having been confirmed last Friday, it would seem appropriate for the Senate to notify the President of the confirmation of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

Mr. HARRISON. The name of the Pennsylvania nominee is Kalodner, is it not?

Mr. GUFFEY. That is correct; Harry E. Kalodner, to be United States district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed legislative session.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate:

S. 1174. An act for the relief of Alex St. Louis and Dr. J. P. Lake; and

S. J. Res. 46. Joint resolution authorizing appropriation for expenses of a representative of the United States and of his assistants, and for one-half of the joint expenses of this Government and the Government of Mexico, in giving effect to the agreement of November 9–12, 1938, between the two Governments providing for the settlement of American claims for damages resulting from expropriations of agrarian properties since August 30, 1927.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 917. An act authorizing the Library of Congress to acquire by purchase, or otherwise, the whole, or any part, of the papers of Charles Cotesworth Pinckney and Thomas Pinckney, including therewith a group of documents relating to the Constitutional Convention of 1787, now in the possession of Harry Stone, of New York City;

S. 1019. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to pay certain expenses incident to the training, attendance, and participation of the equestrian and modern pentathlon teams in the Twelfth Olympic Games; and

S. 1363. An act to repeal subsection (4) of subsection (c) of section 101 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE NEAR FRIAR POINT, MISS., AND HELENA, ARK.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 964) creating the Arkansas-Mississippi Bridge Commission; defining the authority, power, and duties of said commission; and authorizing said commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Friar Point, Miss., and Helena, Ark.; and for other purposes.

Mrs. CARAWAY. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mrs. CARAWAY, Mr. OVERTON, and Mr. VANDENBERG conferees on the part of the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. If there is no further business, I move that the Senate adjourn until Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, April 6, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, APRIL 4, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord and Master of us all, who cometh with eternity in His heart, we exult that desolation or chaos cannot overwhelm Thee. Without the weapons of carnal strife, fire or blood, Thou wilt lift Thy cross: "I, if I be lifted above the earth, will draw all men unto Me." We thank Thee that Thine arms embrace the whole world and Thy love is as vast as the firmament; nothing unpierced by human thought can cause Thy failure. The angelic hosts make bare Thy sovereignty, and from the lips of little children issue the proclamation of Thy royalty. The shrine of Deity, soiled and despoiled of its sanctity, Thou wilt cleanse and fill with the radiance of Thy holiness; this we pray with a greater passion of entreaty.

Oh, these temples of our souls, these restless hearts and fevered brains, cause them to awaken and live and go forth conquering and to conquer, enduring humiliation with poverty, with jealousy, and with the shadow of shame; even may death find us faithful to the last. Unto the Lord of glory be eternal praises. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1514. An act providing in the interest of the general welfare for an appropriate reduction of the burdensome oversupply of American cotton and for further encouragement of soil conservation and soil improvement by making payments in kind in cotton, and for other purposes;

S. J. Res. 90. Joint resolution to amend the joint resolution approved June 16, 1938, entitled "Joint resolution to create a Temporary National Economic Committee"; and

S. J. Res. 108. Joint resolution amending the joint resolution providing for the construction and maintenance of a National Gallery of Art, approved March 24, 1937.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 3577. An act to amend the Canal Zone Code.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, on the 9th of March I secured permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address by a distinguished former Governor of Colorado. I find it runs over the regular limit a little; it amounts to three and one-half pages. This being so, I again ask unanimous consent to have it inserted, notwithstanding the overrun.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address delivered last night by Colonel Fechner in reference to the activities of the C. C. C.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein an editorial from Collier's magazine.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address which I delivered last night over a national hook-up.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement made by Colonel Harrington, the Director of the W. P. A.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

VACATION IN WISCONSIN

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the request of the gentleman to speak for 1 minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, Washington, the National Capital, is not always inviting even with its red-brick slums and streets embattled with ancient scroll-saw architecture amid a Greek and Roman scene of marble magnificence equaled in modern times nowhere in the world. Yet we forget this paradox of granite and marble glory of today over against the faded fustian of yesterday when spring comes and cherry blossoms are in bloom, when poetry and song fill the soul and sordid care begins to fade, when in the great scheme of nature new life begins.

It is in this time that we think of the summer vacation. It is now that the glad song of spring has a far-off echo in the souls of millions of people who welcome the day when they may fill the gas tank and start on the trip to a world of light and laughter and a vacation filled with unadulterated joy along the highways of Wisconsin. So I speak for Wisconsin.

From the State line, notably where the Rock River, famed in Indian legend and history, breaks into Illinois, to the Apostle Islands in Lake Superior, with the ancient mission churches and the burial places where lies Basil Struck by Thunder, God's tremendous panorama is stretched. East or west, as one may go, the same intriguing beauty presents itself. Bucolic may be its scenery and rugged grandeur may be lacking, but it is restful without being oppressive with its overwhelming magnitude. Each hilltop brings a new picture, each valley a new fullness of beauty. Corot and Tryon and Landseer never painted anything to equal it. On a soft summer day, with fields glistening in green and with silver threaded streams cutting across the rolling lands, the soul of the traveler is filled to bursting with unspoken song.

"The cattle on a thousand hills," the sheep grazing among the pasture stumps, the barns and homes tell a story without words of a once happy and hopeful people now disturbed by economic bewilderment. Wooded dells and shaded glens into which the roadway winds bring a perfume which no mortal may imitate and cool the traveler whose head still whirls from a surfeit of such scenic sweetness each turn of the motor wheel has revealed.

Sapphire and emerald gems, set among trees or rocks, with sandy shores or long reaches of marshy pools within which lurk thousands of fish so delicate in flavor that had they been carried to Rome in the days of Lucullus would have urged him to trade a pillar of the Temple of Jupiter for such a feast, are on every hand.

This tumultuous riot of entrancement lasts all the way. There is no end. Cherry blossoms in June, apple blossoms, too, the smell of the pine and hemlock and tamarack, the odor of the wintergreen, even the acrid smoke of the campfire thrills with new and intoxicating delight.

Where may one within the bounds of America get so much for so little? Not abroad can one have it so comfortably or be so satisfied. Ancient churches there may be, but here are the "groves" which were "God's first temple." Here the sky is as glorious as at Amalfi; here the clouds of a summer day are as marvelous in futurist pictures as the gallery of the Louvre, and are shown without the sepulchral air of the art gallery.

No forensic genius can paint in words, no skilled artist with the brush may place on canvas the shore that nature holds in Wisconsin. Each horizon is a world; each world complete. It invites you. [Applause.]

TRADE RELATIONS WITH GERMANY

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a brief statement made by the Secretary of State regarding trade relations with Germany since the World War, and a press release of April 3.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] asked that this Government enter into reciprocal-trade agreements with Germany. I wish to raise my voice in protest against any such arrangement with Germany. In the first place, Germany has had very unfriendly and unfavorable trade relations with us for the past several years. It is well known that Germany has dumped her goods in this country, and has sent, to mention one commodity alone, leather, into this country, improperly marked, and has deprived our workers of employment. As we all know, Hitler has marched into other countries, taking their lands without bloodshed, it is true, but taking them nevertheless. We know further that cotton, the commodity of which the gentleman from Mississippi spoke, is a commodity used for making war materials. It may be only a question of time until Germany uses force in the taking of other people's lands. We do not wish to send this cotton to be made into war materials to be used against other peoples—we hope not—it will not be used to fight the United States; but we must make sure this is not done. Certainly we cannot have reciprocal-trade agreements with a nation that so lightly breaks its pledges and that seizes the land of others and that is trying to seize the trade of other countries in the same ruthless way.

The following is information received from the State Department.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
DIVISION OF TRADE AGREEMENTS,
April 4, 1939.

UNITED STATES TRADE RELATIONS WITH GERMANY

In August 1938 in reply to an inquiry as to whether the Secretary had any comment to make on an address made before the American Chamber of Commerce in Berlin by Dr. Brinkman, State Secretary in the German Economics Ministry, on the subject of trade arrangements with the United States, the Secretary replied that this Government would naturally be most happy to find a basis for increasing our trade with Germany, and that a great deal of study has been given to this matter during the past few years. However, he continued, the system upon which Germany operates is based upon bilateralism and barter, and this runs diametrically contrary to the principles upon which we are making trade agreements.

A basic obstacle which has stood in the way of a trade agreement between the two countries may be explained by reference to the action taken by the German Government with respect to the most-favored-nation clauses of the treaty of friendship, commerce, and consular rights between the two countries. Apparently the German Government itself realized that its policy of bilateral balancing agreements with other countries, which had the effect of diverting trade away from the United States and toward such other countries, was in conflict with these clauses of the treaty.

This treaty, embodying in article VII a pledge of reciprocal unconditional most-favored-nation treatment, was signed by the United States and Germany on December 8, 1923, and entered into force on October 14, 1925, the date of the exchange of ratifications. On October 13, 1934, Germany gave notice of its intention to modify article VII of the treaty. After negotiations during which it was found impracticable for the two governments to reach an understanding on modification, an agreement was signed between the United States and Germany on June 3, 1935, terminating the second, third, fourth, sixth, and seventh paragraphs of article VII. These paragraphs, which constitute the part of article VII which the German Government wished to modify, embodied a pledge of reciprocal unconditional most-favored-nation treatment, that is, equality of treatment, with respect to commerce between the two countries. The agreement signed on June 3, 1935, was proclaimed by the President on October 25, 1935, after ratification by the two Governments. Its effect is to continue in force indefinitely all parts of the treaty of 1923, except the paragraphs mentioned.

The Trade Agreements Act stipulates that the duties proclaimed in connection with any trade agreement—

Shall apply to articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of all foreign countries whether imported directly or indirectly: Provided, That the President may suspend the application to articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of any country because of its discriminatory treatment of American commerce or because of other acts or policies which in his opinion tend to defeat the purposes set forth in—

The act.

While it is the desire and policy of the United States to maintain equality of treatment in respect of imports from all countries, the necessary protection of American commerce may require this Government to withhold equality of treatment from countries that fail to give such treatment in return.

The policies followed by Germany in the regulation of its foreign trade have resulted in severe discrimination against the trade of the United States. For this reason, Germany, in accordance with the provisions of the Trade Agreements Act, has been found by the President to be ineligible to enjoy the extension of the concessions granted by the United States to other countries in the absence of the contractual obligation upon the United States which was contained in the treaty of 1923. When this contractual obligation ceased as a result of the termination of the most-favored-nation provisions of the treaty with respect to commerce, and when it was found that Germany continued to practice discrimination against American trade, the United States Government, in accordance with its policy, terminated the extension to Germany of the concessions granted in its trade agreements.

There is attached a copy of the statement which the Secretary made on April 3, 1939, with respect to trade relations between the United States and Germany.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
April 3, 1939.

At his press conference today the Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, made the following statement:

"This Government's trade policy sustains a large volume of trade with many countries willing, like ourselves, to trade in world markets on principles of equality. This trade is mutually beneficial. By carrying this policy forward, the United States is serving its own best interest and is keeping in existence trading arrangements on a world-wide basis. This is the one system whereby the world secured prosperity in past decades. Under it small nations can trade with all as equals. This Government has maintained a standing invitation to every other nation of the world without a single exception to join in this trade program based on a principle of equality and mutually profitable trade.

"Any obstacles which German trade faces in the United States as compared with any and every other country are entirely the result of German policy and practices. They are not the result of any special American laws dealing with German trade. Under American laws and regulations, Germany is free to trade with the United States under the same set of conditions as can any other country of the world. The large trade the United States is now carrying on with other countries is going smoothly and with remarkable absence of dispute.

"The German authorities, however, seem to be able to trade only on their own terms as they dictate them and by their own methods as they shape them.

"During the past few years Germany has diverted from the United States much trade that had grown up because private business interests in both countries found it profitable. Both peoples found that such trade contributed to their economic welfare. Diversion and reduction of this trade was made solely to serve German purposes. The result was broad and decisive discrimination against American exports. American exports trying to enter Germany must face elaborate controls imposed by the German Government and must compete with trade based on special barter agreements which Germany has set up. American trade cannot satisfactorily fit itself into the crevices of German need left by the barter agreements that Germany has already executed with other countries. It does not have to, nor would its interest be served by doing so.

"By exchanging goods and services countries supply each other's deficiencies. Each draws upon the others for goods which it does not produce or produces at high comparative cost. This is the very essence and nature of international trade. A certain amount of similar interchange can and does, of course, take place under the so-called barter agreements, but paralyzes world markets in the process. This is especially true in markets for raw materials, such as cotton. In contrast to the smoothly operating and productive methods of world trade, barter agreements involve endless diplomatic negotiations. They involve domination by the Government not only of commerce but of production, and they create arbitrary discriminations."

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Private Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in asking for this time is to acquaint the Members with the situation which confronts us today so far as bills on the Private Calendar are concerned. There have been approximately 50 bills reported by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization which appear on this calendar. During the last Congress similar bills were placed upon the Private Calendar and were objected to. They were then reported out in an omnibus bill. The House considered the omnibus bill, but failed to take a vote on the final passage of that bill.

It was the desire of the objectors officially appointed by the minority and majority leaders on both sides of the aisle to have some expression on the part of the membership of the House as to what their desire might be in regard to the passage of these bills, and that was the basis upon which we made our objections during the last Congress.

In view of the fact that the House in its consideration of the omnibus bill voted on a roll-call vote to pass a majority of the bills included therein, we feel it is not incumbent upon us during this Congress to again object to these bills, as we did in the last Congress. However, in view of the fact that the majority of these cases show that the immigrant came into this country by means of some fraud, either by forging a birth certificate or obtaining a fraudulent visa, we do not believe these immigrants should be placed on a par with other persons who came over here from Europe after waiting the prescribed time under the quota in order to come lawfully into the country.

For this reason I have prepared a series of amendments to be offered to each of these bills, which would deny the lawful admission into this country but would admit the alien as a permanent resident of the country. It would deny him the right to obtain citizenship, however. In that way we would not work a hardship upon the family of the immigrant. In many cases they have lived here from 10 to 12 years; have married and are raising a family; they are engaged in business, and if at this time we would send the immigrant back to his native country it would mean breaking up the home and perhaps the destruction of a business which is the sole means of income for the family. It would probably work irreparable hardship in some cases. We propose to offer these amendments to give permanent residence but denying citizenship to such alien.

I am making this explanation so the House will understand what we have in mind when these bills are being called.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. Will this not set a precedent for others who have resided in the country for a great many years and who would not have the same status under these bills?

Mr. COSTELLO. Undoubtedly it would set a precedent for other cases that have taken place prior to the inauguration of our quota law or which may occur at any time hereafter.

Mr. GORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. I can assure the gentleman there will be sufficient objection to prevent the passage of these bills; therefore he need not worry about his amendment.

Mr. COSTELLO. I merely make this statement to show what the attitude of the official objectors is.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Did the gentleman say that the bills to be considered here today affect those who have entered this country in violation of our immigration laws and that they are here through fraud?

Mr. COSTELLO. The gentleman is quite correct. There are possibly three bills on the calendar which are not fraud cases. As to all the rest, in some cases, the immigrant was innccent of knowledge of fraud being perpetrated in his behalf. In other cases he was to some degree a participant in the fraud. In other cases undoubtedly the immigrant had full knowledge. The degree of the guilt or innocence of the immigrant is difficult to determine.

Mr. COCHRAN. Would we not be condoning the offense if we now permitted them to remain in this country?

Mr. COSTELLO. That is something for the membership of the House to decide and that is why we followed the procedure we did during the last session of Congress.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. May I ask the gentleman how he got the floor? I understand he only has 1 minute.

Mr. COSTELLO. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should like to have the floor maybe longer than the gentleman would permit me.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] may be permitted to speak for 10 minutes on this subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I will not take very much of the gentleman's time. Do the objectors feel that they have had enough time to go into these cases individually and that they are thoroughly competent to pass on the subject? In other words, do you have the full consent of your own conscience as to what you are about to do this afternoon in the way of offering amendments?

Mr. COSTELLO. During the last Congress the objectors obtained from the Department the individual files in a large number of these cases. We studied the files. We studied the committee report. We also went over the hearings held by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD 2 years ago I placed a statement of facts as I found them from these records. I put these statements in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so the Members would have the detailed facts on each of the bills contained in the omnibus bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I expect to object to each and every one of these bills, unless the gentleman can show me I am wrong, because I feel all these bills should go back to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

We now have a new Committee on Immigration. It is not that the personnel is any better than it used to be when I was a member of the committee, but anyhow, there is a good deal of promise that they have seen the light on a good many things. Personally, I should like to see this matter sent back to the present Committee on Immigration for full consideration. I know one distinguished member of that committee is not here today. I believe that if we would refer these bills back to the committee it would meet with his approval. Would the gentleman be opposed to that course if one or two other gentlemen would join with me in sending these bills back to the committee?

Mr. COSTELLO. I may say to the gentleman that, of course, I could not object to his course of procedure. When the bill is called it will either be passed or objected to. It requires two objections to prevent the consideration of a bill. If two objections are made against any individual bill on the Private Calendar it is immediately recommitted to the committee from which it came.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In order to save time in calling the calendar I would suggest that the gentleman arrange to lump all 50 of these bills in one group so we may make objections to all of them at the same time.

Mr. COSTELLO. I believe that would be up to the Speaker. I do not believe it can be done. I recall that in the last Congress I did object to a sequence of bills, but objected to each one individually.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Does not the gentleman from California believe it is rather a dangerous procedure to offer these amendments in view of the many more cases that would follow and in view of the sentiment in favor of sending a great many radicals back where they came from rather than letting more come in?

Mr. COSTELLO. Undoubtedly a precedent will be established which would permit any other past or future cases to seek identical treatment. I may say to the gentleman that a further reason for following this procedure is to avoid working a hardship on the families involved. In many instances these persons have been here for 10 years and have been married here, and in a number of cases the persons to whom they have been married are American citizens. These people are raising families and are engaged in business. If we were to send the father of the family back to Europe, it would mean the wife and two or three minor children in each family would be left in this country, the man's business would be destroyed, and there would be no means of support for the wife and children and they would have to be placed on the relief rolls. Therefore, our idea was to try to work out some sort of equitable method that would prevent this situation and at the same time not put these men in the same status as a person who has complied with all the laws in gaining admission to the United States.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. Does not the gentleman think it would be better even in the cases he has mentioned if these bills were recommitted and allowed to come out here in the regular manner, so any merit they may have could be stated in debate, the entire matter discussed, and a vote taken? In that way the House could decide whether or not any case was an exceptional case, instead of passing these bills without objection when probably nine-tenths of the Members present today know absolutely nothing about the content of the bills.

Mr. COSTELLO. I may say to the gentleman that was the method we followed during the last Congress, but unfortunately none of the omnibus bills was actually passed by the House. We did consider one of them but did not come to a final vote on it.

Mr. MOTT. This is early in the session and the chances are an omnibus bill will come out. As far as I am concerned, I am going to object to these bills that are on the calendar today which have to do with cancelation of warrants of deportation and send them back to the committee and let them come out again and be debated.

Mr. COSTELLO. My purpose in making the statement was to inform the House just what was being considered on the Private Calendar today and what the procedure was we had planned on. Of course, the Members of the House if they desire to handle the matter otherwise and send the bills back to committee can do so, and that is perfectly proper, of course.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] seems to have the impression that these bills were dumped back here on the floor without any consideration by the new committee as now constituted, but, as a matter of fact, a subcommittee was appointed by the chairman of the Committee on Immigration to go over all these bills again, and the subcommittee reported back to the main committee that there was no objection to the bills which had passed at the last session. Therefore, I should think that such an amendment as proposed by the gentleman would do an injustice in a lot of worthy cases.

Mr. COSTELLO. I may say to the gentleman that I believe he is correct in that the reports from the committee accompanying the bills this year are a little more complete, giving more accurate information concerning each individual case. However, it was not my intention to offer this amendment to the two or three bills on the calendar in which no question of fraud or illegality is involved.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar.

OKIE MAY FEGLEY

The Clerk called the first bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 875, for the relief of Okie May Fegley.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, to Okie May Fegley, the sum of $10,000 in compensation for injuries caused by a post-office truck, resulting in serious and permanent injury.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "settlement" in line 5, insert "of all claims."

Line 7, insert "of Williamsport, Pa."

Line 7, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$8,500."

Line 9, after the word "injury" insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISBURSING OFFICERS OF THE ARMY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2072, for the relief of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, there is on the Speaker's desk an identical Senate bill, S. 512, and I ask unanimous consent that that bill be considered in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of the following disbursing officers of the Army of the United States the amounts set opposite their names: Capt. Emmett J. Bean, Finance Department, $29.05; Lt. Col. Richard L. Cave, Finance Department, $180; Capt. Harold F. Chrisman, Finance Department, $57.15; Lt. Col. Walter D. Dabney, Finance Department, $35.72; Maj. Henry M. Denning, Finance Department, $50.28; Lt. Col. Edwin F. Ely, Finance Department, $111; Lt. Col. Horace G. Foster, Finance Department, $55; First Lt. John R. Gilchrist, Finance Department, $65.10; Capt. Charles W. Hensey, Finance Department, $19.59; Maj. George F. MacDonald, Finance Department, $5; Maj. Arthur J. Perry, Finance Department, $26.28; Capt. Alexander H. Perwein, Infantry, $407.88; Capt. Leighton N. Smith, Finance Department, $14; said amounts being public funds for which they are accountable and which comprise minor errors in computation of pay and allowances due former members of the Civilian Conservation Corps, who are no longer enrolled in that corps, and which amounts have been disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States: Provided, That no part of the amounts so credited shall be later charged against any individual other than the various payees.

SEC. 2. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Lt. Col. Richard L. Cave, Finance Department, the sum of $100, public funds for which he is accountable and which were paid to the Cox Fence Co. for construction work and disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States.

SEC. 3. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Lt. Col. Richard L. Cave, Finance Department, the sum of $19.83, public funds for which he is accountable, and which has been disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States on account of a payment made to a former officer of the Officers' Reserve Corps.

SEC. 4. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Lt. Col. Edward T. Comegys, Finance Department, the sum of $857.77, public funds for which he is accountable and which represent items disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States on account of payments made for the shipment of baggage and household effects of certain personnel of the Third Attack Group from Fort Crockett, Tex., to Barksdale Field, La.: Provided, That any amounts collected from any person on account of payments herein validated shall be refunded to such person upon presentation of a claim therefor to the Comptroller General.

SEC. 5. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Lt. Col. Walter D. Dabney, Finance Department, $242.17; Lt. Col. Cherubusco Newton, Jr., Finance Department, $553.67; and Lt. Col. Edward T. Comegys, Finance Department, $1,452.41; public funds for which they are accountable and which were paid by them to J. Irving Nicholls for services performed as a shorthand reporter at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., during the period August 13, 1925, to February 20, 1935, and which amounts have been disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States: Provided, That no part of these amounts shall be charged against any person other than the payee.

SEC. 6. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Lt. Col. Edwin F. Ely, Finance Department, the sum of $10.50, public funds for which he is accountable, and which has been disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States on account of a payment made to a former enlisted man for flying pay.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Maj. Malcolm V. Fortier, Infantry, the sum of $51.26 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for that amount which was paid by him for advertising for and in the interests of the United States, without the prior approval of the Secretary of War as required by Revised Statutes 3828 (44 U. S. C. 324).

SEC. 8. That payments heretofore made for hospital and medical expenses incident to the injury or disease of Reserve officers on duty with the Civilian Conservation Corps, incurred while on leave of absence, are hereby ratified and validated, and the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby directed to allow credit in the accounts of disbursing officers of the Government for and on account of all such payments: Provided, That any amounts collected from any person on account of payments which are herein validated shall be refunded to such persons upon presentation of a claim therefor to the Comptroller General: Provided further, That the Comptroller General is authorized and directed to adjust, allow, and certify for payment all claims when approved by the Surgeon General of the Army for hospital and medical services heretofore furnished incident to the injury or disease of Reserve officers on duty with the Civilian Conservation Corps incurred while on leave of absence.

SEC. 9. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of First Lt. John R. Gilchrist, Finance Department, the sum of $1.25, public funds for which he is accountable, which were paid by him to Dr. Dewey H. Walden, contract physician, for traveling expenses and disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States.

SEC. 10. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Capt. Charles W. Hensey, Finance Department, the sum of $7.68, public funds for which he is accountable, which sum has been disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States on account of a payment made to an enlisted man: Provided, That no part of this amount shall be charged to any person other than the payee.

SEC. 11. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Capt. Charles W. Hensey, Finance Department, the sum of $7.45, public funds for which he is accountable, which sum has been disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States on account of an overpayment made to a former member of a citizens' military training camp: Provided, That no part of this amount shall be charged to any person other than the payee.

SEC. 12. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Lt. Col. Eugene O. Hopkins, Finance Department, the sum of $28.68, public funds for which he is accountable, which were paid to a former soldier as additional pay as an expert gunner and disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States.

SEC. 13. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Capt. Donald J. Leehey, Corps of Engineers, $5,100, representing part of an amount paid by him for rental of temporary office quarters, shop storage, wharf and dock at Eastport, Maine, for the fiscal year 1936, under lease with the MacNichol Packing Co., which amount has been disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States: Provided, That the amounts so credited shall not be charged against any moneys otherwise due the payees.

SEC. 14. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Lt. Col. Montgomery T. Legg, Finance Department, the sum of $150, public funds for which he is accountable, and which were stolen from the office safe of his agent officer at Camp S–123, Corning, N. Y., on January 16, 1938.

SEC. 15. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Lt. Col. Montgomery T. Legg, Finance Department, the sum of $126, public money for which he is accountable, paid by him on a forged voucher.

SEC. 16. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Lt. Col. Emmett C. Morton, Finance Department, the sum of $4,009.45, public funds for which he is accountable, and which were paid by him on fraudulent vouchers prepared by a trusted employee.

SEC. 17. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Maj. Arthur J. Perry, Finance Department, $2.38, public funds for which he is accountable, which were paid to a former enlisted man of the Army as pay and disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States.

SEC. 18. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Maj. Arthur J. Perry, Finance Department, $12.85, public funds for which he is accountable, which were paid by him to First Lt. W. W. Hudgens, Infantry Reserve, for travel expenses, and which have been disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be charged to any person other than the payee.

SEC. 19. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Capt. Alexander H. Perwein, Infantry, $32.10, public funds for which he is accountable, which were paid to a former enlisted man of the Army as pay, and disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States.

SEC. 20. That the Comptroller General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Maj. Louis H. Price (deceased), Finance Department, $21.15, public funds for which he is accountable, which were paid by him to the Dyson Paper Board Co., and which have been disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States: Provided, That no part of this amount shall be charged against any person other than the payee.

SEC. 21. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Maj. Leonard H. Sims, Finance Department, the sum of $126.55, public funds for which he is accountable, which were stolen from the safe of his agent officer at Company 449, Civilian Conservation Corps, Camp Florida, P–79, Jacksonville, Fla., by a person or persons unknown.

SEC. 22. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Capt. Fiorre J. Stagliano, Finance Department, $1,035.42, public funds for which he is accountable and which were paid by him for the rental of passenger-carrying vehicles used by the Puerto Rican Hurricane Commission, and which amount has been disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 2072) was laid on the table.

JAMES A. MILLS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2104, for the relief of James A. Mills.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to James A. Mills, of Jefferson City, Tenn., the sum of $3,000 in full settlement of all claims against the United States as a result of personal injuries sustained by him when his car collided with a Civilian Conservation Corps truck on the highway to Jefferson City, Tenn., on September 5, 1937.

With the following committee amendments:

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors may sit during sessions of the House this afternoon.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if this is agreeable to the minority members of the committee?

Mr. RANKIN. The ranking minority member who was present when we adjourned is the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] who is now present, and it was satisfactory to him.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What is the legislation the committee is considering?

Mr. RANKIN. It is a matter concerning the Connecticut River and there are a lot of witnesses down here from the gentleman's State and from Connecticut that want to be heard and go home. We are doing this for their accommodation, and it is satisfactory to the minority.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the completion of the legislative program of the day and the previous special orders, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes, within which time I shall discuss the National Labor Relations Board.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Maurer the sum of $627.25, to Mildred H. Keaton the sum of $267.50, to June de Ford the sum of $175, to Terza Ungarook the sum of $116, and to Ella Massoo the sum of $89.75 in full settlement of all their claims against the United States for loss and damage to their personal property on February 18, 1937, when fire destroyed the United States Indian Service hospital at Point Barrow, Alaska, where Stanley Morgan was employed as a radio operator of the Signal Corps, United States Army, and the remainder of said persons were employed by the Office of Indian Affairs, Interior Department: Provided, That no part of the amounts appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ATLAS POWDER CO.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2067) for the relief of the Atlas Powder Co.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of the Atlas Powder Co. for reasonable compensation incident to its abandonment, under protest, at the request of the United States, of a certain parcel of land on Winter Island in Salem, Mass., more particularly described in the deed of E. I. du Pont de Nemours Powder Co. to Atlas Powder Co., dated December 28, 1912, recorded with Essex Deeds, southern district, book 2201, page 209, and to allow in full and final settlement of said claim a sum not exceeding $1,762.75 in consideration for the execution by said Atlas Powder Co. of a quit-claim deed conveying to the United States all of its right, title, and interest in said parcel of land. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,762.75, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for payment of this claim: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

GEORGE B. SPEARIN, DECEASED

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4256) for the relief of the estate of George B. Spearin, deceased.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. GORE objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

REIMBURSEMENT OF CERTAIN OFFICERS, NAVY AND MARINE CORPS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1119) to provide an additional sum for the payment of a claim under the act entitled "An act to provide for the reimbursement of certain officers and enlisted men or former officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps for personal property lost, damaged, or destroyed as a result of the earthquake which occurred at Managua, Nicaragua, on March 31, 1931," approved January 21, 1936 (49 Stat. 2212).

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum, not to exceed $605.50, as may be required by the Secretary of the Navy to reimburse Technical Sgt. Richard S. Reed, United States Marine Corps Reserve, after claimant shall have filed itemized statements showing actual damages sustained by proper appraisal, and under such regulations as he may prescribe pursuant to the provisions of the act approved January 21, 1936 (49 Stat. 2212), Private Law No. 373, Seventy-fourth Congress, for losses of and damages to reasonable and necessary personal property resulting from the earthquake which occurred at Managua, Nicaragua, on March 31, 1931: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

META DE RENE M'LOSKEY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 554) for the relief of Meta De Rene McLoskey.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. GORE objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

HENRY FISCHER

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1361) for the relief of Henry Fischer.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. GORE objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

MARGARET REDMOND

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2014) for the relief of Margaret Redmond.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. GORE objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

FRANK BURGESS BRUCE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2853) for the relief of Frank Burgess Bruce.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. GORE objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

WIDOW AND CHILDREN OF JAMES PATRICK MAHAR

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3550) for the relief of the widow and children of James Patrick Mahar.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Wilber National Bank, of Oneonta, N. Y., administrator of the estate of James Patrick Mahar, late of the city of Oneonta, Otsego County, N. Y., deceased, the sum of $5,000 in full satisfaction of any and all claims of the estate of James Patrick Mahar for the United States Government life-insurance benefits under policy No. K–812772, the same to be distributed among the heirs-at-law and next of kin of the said James Patrick Mahar, a deceased soldier, according to the statute of descent and distribution of the State of New York.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

THE OCILLA STAR

The Clerk called the bill (S. 303) for the relief of the Ocilla Star.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Ocilla Star, of Ocilla, Ga., the sum of $96 in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for the publication of six foreclosure advertisements in four consecutive issues at the request of a county rural rehabilitation supervisor, Resettlement Administration, in December 1936: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

THE FITZGERALD LEADER

The Clerk called the bill (S. 463) for the relief of the Fitzgerald Leader.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Fitzgerald Leader, of Fitzgerald, Ga., the sum of $32 in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for the publishing of two foreclosure advertisements in four consecutive issues at the request of a county rural rehabilitation supervisor, Resettlement Administration, in December 1936: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

MARGARET ROSE UNCAPHER, MILTON E. UNCAPHER, JR., AND ANDREW G. UNCAPHER

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 529, for the relief of Margaret Rose Uncapher, Milton E. Uncapher, Jr., and Andrew G. Uncapher.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of appropriation for "Emergency construction of public buildings, act of August 12, 1935," to Margaret Rose Uncapher, Milton E. Uncapher, Jr., and Andrew G. Uncapher, of Vandergrift, Pa., the sum of $901.60, as payment in full satisfaction of the amount of balance of just compensation claimed to be due them on account of the taking of their lands by the United States through condemnation proceedings for a post-office site at Vandergrift, Pa.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES AGAINST MEXICO FOR EXPROPRIATIONS OF AGRARIAN PROPERTIES

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 148.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 148

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. J. Res. 114, a joint resolution authorizing appropriation for expenses of a representative of the United States and of his assistants, and for one-half of the joint expenses of this Government and the Government of Mexico, in giving effect to the agreement of November 9–12, 1938, between the two Governments providing for the settlement of American claims for damages resulting from expropriations of agrarian properties since August 30, 1927. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. I yield myself 2 minutes, Mr. Speaker.

This resolution, Mr. Speaker, makes in order the consideration of House Joint Resolution 114, which sets up a commission on Mexican claims, to determine the value of lands expropriated by Mexico; that is, agrarian lands. It also provides $100,000 for this commission. The $100,000 is repaid to the United States Government out of the first moneys collected from Mexico, so there is no cost whatever to this Government.

There has been an agreement tentatively entered into which provides that the Mexican Government will make its first payment, I think, next month, in the amount of about $1,000,000. The President of the United States has designated as the representative of the United States Government Mr. L. M. Lawson, who has been in the Federal employ about 30 years and at the present time is International Boundary Commissioner, located at El Paso, Tex. Mr. Lawson is probably one of the most able and efficient employees in the entire Federal service, a man thoroughly familiar with what is involved in this question, and one competent and capable to select the personnel necessary to make these appraisals.

I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker, and I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY] such time as he may desire.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] has explained the purposes of this resolution known as House Joint Resolution 114. He summed it up in a very few words when he said that $100,000 is to be appropriated and that the money will be paid back into the Treasury out of the funds received from the Mexican Government. That is a brief summary of a very important resolution.

This problem goes back many, many years. On March 30, 1938, our Government became so incensed over the treatment that it had received from Mexico that the State Department addressed a communication to the Mexican Government, and I am going to quote very briefly:

The recent expropriation by the Mexican Government of oil properties belonging to American citizens is therefore but one incident in a long series of incidents of this character and accordingly raises no new question. The subject now under consideration between the Government of the United States and the Government of Mexico is a matter of compensation for various properties of American citizens expropriated in the past few years. It is my very earnest hope that because of the very friendly relations existing between the two Governments a fair and equitable solution of this problem may soon be found by the Mexican Government.

To this we have a reply from President Cardenas, of Mexico, and that reply, in substance, under date of March 31, 1938, after the usual preliminaries, says he is very glad to know that our Government admires what he has been doing and promises nothing. He says:

Mr. Ambassador DANIELS: It is a satisfaction for the Mexicans to have the friendship of a people which, through its President, continues to support the policy of friendship and respect of each nation, a policy which is winning for your country the affection of many peoples of the world.

That followed a long summary of what they proposed to do. This, however, did not satisfy Secretary Hull, because on July 21, 1938, he again addressed a communication to the Mexican Ambassador in Washington, in which he said:

During recent years the Government of the United States has upon repeated occasions made representations to the Government of Mexico with regard to the continuing expropriation by Your Excellency's Government of agrarian properties owned by American citizens without adequate, effective, and prompt compensation being made therefor.

That is followed by a further detailed statement of what has been happening, and expresses the displeasure of the United States Government at the tactics of the Mexican Government.

There was another reply. And Mr. Hull, under date of August 22, 1938, decided to write to the Mexican Government again. In that communication he referred to the owners of moderate-sized farms who have claims in excess of $10,000,000 dating back to 1927. So this is not a new matter, something that happened last week or last year; it has been going on for many years with the same result: No payment and no attempt to pay.

There is still another letter from the Mexican Government on the same subject, and I am going to quote very briefly from it:

The Government of Mexico in the note under reply suggests the existence of a number of subsidiary questions.

These subsidiary questions, Mr. Speaker, refer to the fact that they claim that many years ago these properties were bought below cost, and that some of the land concessions were given by unscrupulous representatives of the Mexican Government without adequate compensation, as well as other reasons. This, however, does not change the proposition before us. We are not quarreling about the amount, we are not quarreling about the size of the properties; all we are saying is that we have never been able to get any consideration of our claims.

So these notes continued to flow back and forth. The tempers of the representatives of both sides rose to a high pitch and at one time I thought we had reached the point where we were going to explode, but finally came another note from Mexico which I believe is rather significant. In one of our previous notes, Secretary Hull suggested that perhaps they stop expropriating lands until such time as we had a chance to talk about payment. This is the reply:

The Mexican Government cannot refrain from carrying out the redistribution of the land, although in so doing she might likewise affect foreigners.

There is more along the same line and then appears the following statement which is rather pointed.

There are numerous examples of nations whose cultural progress is beyond discussion, which have seen themselves obliged, without repudiating the right of property in the abstract, to issue laws which have signified expropriation without immediate payment and sometimes without later compensation.

Now, these words are underscored and I wish you would pay attention to them:

Countries might be mentioned which, under the pressure of reasons considered to be of public necessity, have forced private individuals to exchange their gold and their gold certificates for money which has already been depreciated or which was depreciated immediately afterward. Those countries have also been under necessity to require private persons without distinguishing between nationals and foreigners, to receive in payment of obligations, which have been contracted in gold, the already depreciated currency of the country.

Mr. Speaker, after our Government received that note we apparently became very self-conscious. Evidently our position in connection with gold was the basis for the Mexican Government being so sharp. As a result of all the correspondence between our Government and Mexico we have this resolution, which, if adopted, is supposed to provide the machinery to settle the claims of our citizens arising out of the expropriation of their land by the Government of Mexico.

The pending resolution represents just one further step in our timorous dealing with Mexico, a nation that should be friendly to the United States, but which over a long course of years has been the most disturbing factor to peace in North America. This resolution is just so much eyewash, and offered for the purpose of misleading the American people in their belief that their Government is protecting the rights of its nationals, whereas in truth and fact it is just temporizing with a serious situation that is growing worse every day. I have made desperate efforts in Congress to have the State Department take vigorous measures to force Mexico to observe the rights of our people. I have submitted a resolution of inquiry directed to the State Department asking for certain information that should be available to Congress and the people of the United States, but the House Committee on Foreign Affairs has suppressed the answer to my inquiry, as though Congress and the American people are not entitled to this information, which has a great bearing on the future of our country and the rights of all Americans, no matter where they happen to be. The resolution before the House today sets up a joint commission for the purpose of determining to whom shall be paid damages for loss of property due to the Mexican communistic revolution. There is no provision in the agreement to set up the commission for any substantial payment to any American, but it arranges for merely what is tantamount to a token payment. It is interesting to know that in the letter from the Secretary of State, which is part of the report of the committee, that he states that while the State Department "maintained its position," it suggested as a means of adjustment this commission. I maintain that Congress, if it agrees to this resolution, confirms the Mexican position rather than the proper American protective obligation that the Government owes its citizens.

If Congress accepts this resolution, the Communists in control of Mexico will claim that Congress has deserted Americans who have been deprived of their property by the methods of the Mexican "reds." Congress by adopting this resolution will commit itself to the "red" philosophy whereby private property has no standing before the Government and to the "red" theory that the capitalistic system should be abolished. While the State Department as a face saver may suggest this resolution, still substantially it is an admission that the Mexican Communists are right in their theory of international law, as well that the Mexican policy of expropriation of private property is acceptable. For the probable payment of $1,000,000 a year, will Congress destroy its belief in the stability of the capitalistic system, and will the American Congress agree in principle to the Third International, supported by the Moscow "reds"? It would be much better, in my opinion, for the American Government to admit that it has not properly protected its people and pay the claims itself to our citizens who have been deprived of their property in Mexico by neglect of our Government to protect them in these rights. It would be much better, as a matter of principle, to take this position than subscribe to the Mexican policy of confiscation and robbery, for then some future Government of the United States, alive to its responsibility, might take stern measures to force Mexico to pay into the Treasury of the United States money paid out to American citizens by our own Government because of Mexico's dishonesty.

The question before the House on this resolution is, Shall we sell our precious American birthright for a mess of "red" Mexican pottage?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. DEMPSEY. How would it be possible for the Mexican Government or the United States Government to pay any claim for lands expropriated without an appraisal of the lands and knowledge of their value? If this system is not adopted, how would it be possible to do it?

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. The Mexican Constitution, under which the Mexican Government is proceeding with this expropriation, requires them to make an indemnification for the property at the time it is expropriated. That is the time to fix the value rather than waiting for 12 years to raise the question and then go back and try to fix values.

Mr. DEMPSEY. How can anything be done except by a commission representing the two governments?

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I would be willing to submit it to a responsible official of the Mexican Government if it would get us anywhere, but they have made no attempt to pay or settle these claims.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does not the gentleman think this is a step in the right direction?

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. No; I think it is a waste of time. When you go back over the years and find that there are hundreds of millions of dollars due and the best they can propose after these years is $1,000,000 a year to be divided up among all the landowners.

Mr. THORKELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. THORKELSON. Does not the gentleman think it would be more honorable if the United States took the property and held it until it was paid for?

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Does the gentleman mean hold title to the property in Mexico?

Mr. THORKELSON. Yes; hold it until Mexico paid for it.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. It might offer greater security. Here we have property confiscated and we have American citizens turned out of their property without receiving any—and certainly little—encouragement from their own Government.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mexico has never paid for any property of that sort.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. May I ask if these payments will be made in silver?

Mr. FISH. There is nothing provided in the resolution as to how the payments will be made. I am inclined to agree with my colleague from New York [Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY] that after one or two payments they may not be made at all. I will give my reasons for that as I proceed. Whether they will be made in silver or not I have not the faintest idea. I may say to the gentleman, when a nation like Mexico has continued for these long years, particularly for the last 5 years, to seize American property, expropriate it, and not pay damages, I cannot understand why we should continue to buy silver from Mexico at twice its cost of production. If we wanted to put an end to what has been going on down there, this form of communism, this seizure of American property which they call expropriation, we should have ceased buying its silver. It is not expropriation. Expropriation without payment is simply a polite word for robbery. It is communism. We should have long ago ceased to buy silver from Mexico. If we had done that, or if we had served notice on that country we were going to do that, we would have stopped this practice of communism in our neighbor Republic of Mexico.

Mr. SHANLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SHANLEY. The gentleman knows this so-called expropriation happened long before the silver policy was brought into effect. He further knows it is not communism for a sovereign power to take property by expropriation. It is allowed by international law.

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman will ask one question at a time I will try to answer that question.

In the first place, I do not admit, although I have no evidence to substantiate it, that there was any degree of seizure of American property before 1934. It is my belief that the overwhelming majority, 90 percent, or maybe 99 percent, of these properties have been seized under the "pink" or "red" regime of Cardenas during the last 5 years. Of course, I know what the bill says. The bill says that these claims will be settled back to 1927. There may have been sporadic claims from 1927 to 1934, but whenever a property was seized in those days our administration came down on them like a ton of brick and you heard about it all over the country. It is only in the last few years that American property has been seized by the score under this "red" Mexican regime. The other question the gentleman raised was what?

Mr. SHANLEY. The doctrine of expropriation.

Mr. FISH. Everyone agrees on what expropriation is. It is well understood that a government has the right of eminent domain, that it can seize property in its own country, provided it pays an adequate compensation. No one questions the legality of that; but when you seize property and you do not pay for that property on a fair and equitable basis within a reasonable time, it is no longer expropriation. It is nothing but robbery and in most cases it has been nothing but robbery in Mexico up to the present moment.

The gentleman knows and every lawyer will tell him that expropriation of property without payment within a reasonable time is just a polite word for robbery or communism or confiscation or anarchy. I submit that this has been going on for a number of years in Mexico with little or no protest from our own New Deal administration.

I do not know that anybody is objecting to this bill particularly. It is just simply a gesture. There is no guaranty in the bill by Mexico that it will not continue to seize our properties. There is no guaranty that payments will be made beyond a few years. You know Mexico has had the habit of repudiating its debts. The American people lent $90,000,000 for the construction of railroads down there, all of which has been repudiated. Mexico does not pay any interest at all on those debts or the amortization thereof. It has got into the habit of repudiation and pays nothing on its bond issues. Of course, it has paid some little claims involving $500,000 or so for the last 4 or 5 years and it can well afford to pay these small claims if it holds the property it has taken in the past and continues to take additional American property.

Suppose you are an American citizen expecting to be upheld in your right to do business and trade in foreign lands and expecting to be upheld in your right to hold property in foreign lands, and your property was seized 5 years ago in Mexico, and you have not received one red cent for it until today; not a dollar. What do you do to live? Suppose you have no more money. Of course, this expropriation has brought destitution and poverty to many American citizens. Now this little bill is brought in. I am not opposing the bill, but I propose to have something to say about the good-neighbor policy in Mexico. We are reaping the whirlwind of that good-neighbor policy, that soft, supine policy which has worked one way, where we have been the good neighbor and they have taken our shirts and our pants, too, and the property of our citizens, and have refused to pay for all these years. If this is the good-neighbor policy, it is a one-way policy, because it does not work both ways. A good-neighbor policy must be mutual and work both ways.

Mr. DEMPSEY and Mr. O'CONNOR rose.

Mr. FISH. I yield to a member of the committee.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does the gentleman from New York know of any method that could be pursued other than setting up a commission to determine the value of the lands expropriated?

Mr. FISH. I am supporting the bill, but at the same time I am reserving my right to point out that this should have been done years ago when they got into the habit under the good-neighbor policy of seizing the properties of American citizens one after another, a large number of properties. Then we should have come right down on them and said, "If you continue to do this and do not make immediate provision to pay for or restore the property, we will not buy any more silver from you or we will not trade with you." But as I say, you have let this thing go until it has developed into a rotten mess in Mexico.

Mr. KEE and Mr. O'CONNOR rose.

Mr. FISH. Again, I must yield to a member of the committee.

Mr. KEE. Does not the gentleman know that prior to 1917, 161 of these agrarian properties were expropriated? The gentleman made the statement a moment ago that most of the property had been expropriated since the advent of the Cardenas administration, but prior to 1917 there were 161 expropriations.

Mr. FISH. Yes; I believe in the revolutionary times there were.

Mr. KEE. That was under a Republican administration in this country.

Mr. FISH. I believe that was during the Wilson administration. In revolutionary times in Mexico there were a number of expropriations, and there was chaos and civil war in Mexico, and our citizens suffered losses. In fact, President Wilson practically went to war with Mexico. However, the claims of which I am speaking have arisen under the Cardenas regime, and one might expect it because that is a "pink" or "red" regime. They boast about it, they do not deny it. They state specifically in their reports that they propose to continue this course, and they will as long as that regime exists there. They are no respecters of our rights. They seized American oil properties a year ago and have not paid a penny on those properties, which probably involved $100,000,000, not a puny four or five million dollars, as is provided for in this bill. They have taken the money of our people, who invested it in Mexico as they would in any other country, and who developed those lands, built oil wells, and brought a certain amount of prosperity and wealth to Mexico. They have seized those lands, and so far they have refused to pay a penny on them. I say to you it is not a question merely of our investments—and we have $1,000,000,000 of American investments in Mexico; probably more investments in Mexico than in any other single country. If we do not take a firm position and stop this communism and this confiscation of property, including the oil properties, it means the end of our investments not only in Mexico but throughout Latin America. Make no mistake about this, we are not arguing today about a few million dollars. That is chicken feed for this Government. I forget how many millions we spend ourselves every day. I am not at all sure we will be paid a million each year by Mexico, but a great principle is involved. If we sit down and continue to let our property be seized without protest or action, then they will continue to seize it, and probably never pay for it.

Mr. O'CONNOR and Mr. FITZPATRICK rose.

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman says this procedure should have been adopted years ago.

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the gentleman say it should have been adopted during the Harding, Coolidge, Fall, and Daugherty administrations?

Mr. FISH. No; because I tried to point out that it is my belief that most of these agrarian claims that are involved in this bill arose under the Cardenas regime. The Government admits there are about 100 of them. That is the best information I can get. I have not been able to get the information, although I have been working at it for 2 or 3 months, as to how many were under the Cardenas regime and how many were prior to that. I believe you will find that 90 percent or more are within the last 4 or 5 years under this "red" regime.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman says that Mexico has repudiated her obligations. Is repudiation of obligations on the part of nations peculiar to Mexico?

Mr. FISH. Not at all; and I am pleased the gentleman said that. What has Mexico done? She says, "Yes, I am repudiating my obligations to the United States, but you have repudiated your own obligations. You have gone off the gold standard and depreciated your dollar." Those were her words to this Government. She said, "You claim we have repudiated, but you have repudiated yourself." You will find this in the diplomatic messages between Mexico and this Government. But Mexico is not the only nation that has repudiated its obligations. Great Britain, France, and other nations have welshed on their war debts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts and Mr. O'CONNOR rose.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman permit just one further observation?

Mr. FISH. I will have to yield to a member of the committee, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman know that in 1933 one of my young constituents was killed in Mexico City and nothing, virtually, has been done about it, although it was admitted that he was killed by one of two Mexican policemen. There was a mock trial and there has been no satisfaction of any kind, although it was an entirely unwarranted and brutal murder.

Mr. FISH. It is my idea, my colleague [Mrs. ROGERS], although I have not the facts, that quite a few Americans have been killed in Mexico and nothing has been done about it. I rather think it runs to almost a score of Americans who have been killed.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman has stated several times that what we should do is to clean up this communism. The gentleman has been a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee for years. The gentleman has made repeated speeches on the floor of the House instructing the people of the United States to mind their own business. Does the gentleman think it is our business to go into Mexico and tell them what form of Government they should have or does the gentleman think we should confine our efforts to our own country?

Mr. FISH. I am very pleased to have the distinguished gentleman who represents the State of New Mexico agree with the contention I have repeatedly made in the Congress and elsewhere that it is none of our business what form of government exists in any foreign nation in the world, whether it be in Soviet Russia or Fascist Italy or Nazi Germany. What I complain about the respect to this administration, and I shall discuss it if I have the time, is the fact that this administration from the President and the Secretary of State down——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PARSONS). The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 more minutes.

From the President and Secretary of State down seem to think it is their duty to criticize the form of government and the individuals at the head of those governments in foreign lands. It has never been done before in America and therefore——

Mr. DEMPSEY. What does the gentleman mean when he states that we should stop this communism in Mexico?

Mr. FISH. I am only saying exactly what I believe, that it is communism.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Why should we do anything about it?

Mr. FISH. What I am saying is simply this: I believe in protecting the rights of American citizens to trade and own property in all lands. If that right is interfered with and property seized and not paid for, then I would not trade with them. I would stop buying silver at twice the cost of production.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Because they are Communists?

Mr. FISH. Because they took the property.

Mr. DEMPSEY. What does the fact that they are Communists have to do with it? You said we should clean out this communism.

Mr. FISH. Those are your words.

Mr. DEMPSEY. No; I am quoting the gentleman.

Mr. FISH. I do not advocate force and violence. I do not believe in that.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I cannot understand the gentleman's attitude.

Mr. FISH. I am simply saying that as long as they seize our property, if we cannot protect them, we ought to stop buying silver from them; and if we cannot do that, we ought to stop trading with them.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman has repeatedly referred to "pinks" and "reds" and has said that we have got to stop this communism.

Mr. FISH. I said they are "pinks" and "reds," but I did not say we should stop communism by force. If they want to be "pinks" and "reds," that is their business.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the gentleman will read his remarks, he will find that is what he said.

Mr. FISH. Oh, I know what I said.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Now the gentleman states that it is none of our business.

Mr. FISH. It is none of our business whatever, and that is the main thing I complain about with respect to this administration. We seem to think we have the right to tell these dictatorial nations what form of government they should have. I do not care whether they are "pinks" or "reds" or Fascists or Nazis. That is their business; and it is none of their business what form of government we have in America.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman said that this Government ought to take a firm stand if Mexico refuses to pay our citizens for land taken. Assuming that Mexico refused, what firm stand, outside of not trading with Mexico?

Mr. FISH. First, I would recall that very distinguished Ambassador, Mr. Josephus Daniels, and give him a job back here in Washington. Then, if that were not sufficient warning that we meant business——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And what is the business that we would mean?

Mr. FISH. Then I would stop immediately buying any more silver from them, and if that were not sufficient, I would stop trading with them altogether until they came to their senses and respected American citizens and their rights to own property and do business in Mexico.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And that is what the gentleman meant by a firm stand?

Mr. FISH. Yes. Certainly I do not mean to go to war for the almighty dollar, because I am against war with any nation unless we are attacked, and that goes for Germany as well as any other nation.

Mr. THORKELSON. It is a fact that Leon Trotsky lives there, is it not?

Mr. FISH. I am not concerned with that. That is not our business. We are concerned with American property and the rights of American citizens, and that property has been stolen, and if anybody tells me these oil rights have not been stolen, then I do not understand the English language. Our properties have not only been stolen, but worse than that, they have seized this property and then sold the oil, bartered it to Germany. Nineteen million barrels of oil that belonged to us have been bartered to Germany, and they have added insult to injury, because not only do the Germans get the oil but they barter for it German machinery, road-making machinery, farm machinery, mining machinery, which hitherto had been built in America by American labor and sold to Mexico. So we lose our oil rights and our money, our investment, and also lose our trade with Mexico, with the result that Germany has increased its trade with Mexico some 50 percent in the last year, and we have lost a substantial amount of our trade. That is the whirlwind that we are reaping as a result of the good-neighbor policy, the weak-kneed, soft-neighbor policy backed by an occasional slap on the wrist.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. GEARHART. The gentleman said that international law recognizes the right of expropriation, provided settlement is made within a reasonable time. International law also recognizes the right of reprisal. I am wondering what the gentleman would think about our Government seizing a portion of the territory of Mexico, say, Lower California, and holding it as a reprisal until settlement is made.

Mr. FISH. I do not believe in force or compulsion or any form of armed force. If we had an Ambassador down there that meant business, and had proper instructions from the State Department, we could settle this controversy in a short time.

Mr. GEARHART. But in our other contacts with Mexico it was only through force, for instance at Vera Cruz, that we could get them to pay any attention to or respect in the slightest degree American rights.

Mr. FISH. I know that, but I am not at all sure that we were right in going into Mexico and fighting at Vera Cruz.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. SHANLEY. I know the gentleman has in mind the Gondra Treaty that was ratified when Calvin Coolidge was President of the United States, and that treaty makes it a duty on our part when we have difficulties to refer them to a commission. So far as reprisals and methods short of war are concerned, we are stymied. We must proceed under that treaty. I know that the gentleman making this statement is well aware of that.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. For the sake of the RECORD, these expropriations began back in 1915 and continued up to August 30, 1927—and I am reading from a document of the State Department. One hundred and sixty-one appraisals have still been left unsettled, so if the Claims Commission established at that time by our Government has not been able to get the matter settled, how do we expect this Commission to do anything?

Mr. FISH. Oh, I have no idea of the Mexican Government doing anything.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. This situation today is the result of failure on the part of Secretary Hull to get Mexico to submit to arbitration. They have refused, and this is only palliative, to say the least.

Mr. FISH. It is just a gesture; the gentleman is right.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I understand it has been proposed that the payment will be made in American dollars and it is so understood. I was wondering if the gentleman would consider writing into the law that the payment should be made in American dollars?

Mr. FISH. I think it would be a good idea for the lady from Massachusetts to offer that amendment when the bill is being considered. I do not think anyone should oppose it.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I hope the chairman will accept that amendment.

Mr. FISH. Now, the issue before the House is this particular bill. So far as I know, no one on the Republican side is opposed to the resolution. It provides that certain sums shall be paid annually, and I hope they will be paid. The issue I am trying to discuss is much greater than this resolution. We have four or five hundred million dollars invested in oil lands alone throughout Latin America. We have new pipe lines about to be opened in Colombia and Venezuela this month, pipe lines involving as much as $40,000,000, in both Venezuela and Colombia.

American enterprise, American engineers, American money, and American investment have gone down there. Unless we do something about the seizure of American oil lands in Mexico, what guaranty have we got for any of our investments in Latin America? If Mexico, our neighbor, right at our doorstep, can seize our oil lands to the amount of $100,000,000 or more, why cannot Colombia and Venezuela do the same, if that is established as a precedent? They have already done it in Bolivia. They have seized $17,000,000 of our investments down there within the last month, by action of the Government. If we continue to be soft about Mexico, if we continue this weak-kneed policy about our property, then we cannot expect to protect our citizens elsewhere. If we do nothing about it in Mexico, what are we going to do about it in Chile if they take our mines? Are we going to do something about it in Cuba if they take our sugar mills? Are we going to do something about it in Venezuela or Colombia if they should take away our pipe lines or oil properties? I say the time has come to let these nations know that we propose to protect the rights of our citizens, and if they confiscate our property, then they must know that they are dealing with a nation that knows how to protect the rights of its own citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM].

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, there does not seem to be any objection to this bill. The bill has already passed the Senate in its present form. It seems that all the speeches being made here are about everything else but this particular bill. Nothing is said about this bill except that they agree to it.

This bill simply calls for one thing: It appropriates about $100,000 to pay the expenses of this joint commission between the Mexican Government and the Government of the United States, so as to determine the amounts of the claims for these farm lands. It has nothing to do with anything else. It is merely that the Mexican Government, according to this agreement, is to pay $1,000,000 a year, the first payment to be made May 31 of this year, and they are to pay $1,000,000 a year every year afterward until the full amount of the claims determined upon by this commission is paid. That is all there is to this resolution. That is all there is to this rule. All this talk about Mexico and what they have done is beside the point.

I have the record here, which I shall show you at the proper time when the bill is being considered, showing that the Mexican Government has paid all of its obligations made to this Government, principal and interest, up to the present time. There have been only two commissions—one the General Claims Commission and a special claims commission. The General Claims Commission is functioning upon claims prior to 1927. The special Mexican Claims Commission has done its work, agreed upon an amount of over $5,000,000, and the Mexican Government is paying at the rate of $500,000 a year, and it has made every payment, with interest, up to the present time.

Secretary of State Hull writes a letter with reference to this matter under date of March 8, 1939, which reads:

MY DEAR MR. BLOOM: I have learned with regret that when House Joint Resolution 114, a joint resolution to authorize an appropriation to meet the expenses of this Government under the agreement reached with Mexico for the settlement of American agrarian claims, came before the House on the Consent Calendar on Monday, March 6, 1939, an objection was made to its passage.

The Department of State cannot seek an appropriation to meet the obligations of this Government under the agreement with Mexico until the joint resolution referred to above has been enacted, and it is therefore very important to the successful conclusion of these negotiations that the bill be passed as soon as practicable. I feel that I should bring the foregoing to your attention in order that you might give such consideration as you deem appropriate to taking other suitable steps to endeavor to obtain early consideration of the bill in the House. If it would be helpful in connection with any steps you may take in this matter, you may feel at liberty to indicate to the officers of the House of Representatives my particular interest in obtaining early consideration of this measure.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

Mr. Speaker, the appropriation asked for is $100,000. This is simply an advance of money which is to be repaid to the United States Government out of the first money received from the Mexican Government. So on May 31 of this year the Mexican Government is obligated under this agreement to pay to the United States of America $1,000,000. Immediately the United States takes the $100,000 out of this $1,000,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I cannot yield; my time is too limited.

The United States Government deducts the $100,000 out of the $1,000,000 that it receives from the Mexican Government to pay these expenses.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] said that the amount is not adequate. There is no mention whatever in this resolution of the total amount of the claims. That is something that must be determined upon first by the Joint Commission of Mexico and the United States before anyone can say whether the amount is adequate or not. In any event, the United States Government is not out one penny, for it gets this money back first. The only way we could bring this bill before the House was by having this rule; and since the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] says that no one on the committee objects to it, there should not be any objection to the rule.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the President and the Secretary of State have approached this question in the only sensible and businesslike way it could be approached. It is necessary to determine the value of the lands seized by Mexico. The President has selected as the chairman of the commission, L. M. Lawson, of the International Boundary Commission, El Paso, Tex., probably the best-informed man in the United States on Mexican affairs.

We cannot ask Mexico to pay these claims unless we know what we want her to pay.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Very briefly.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Will the gentleman from New Mexico inform the House by what process Mexico is going to pay us $1,000,000 next month on a proposition that has not been touched as yet, neither side knowing what the proper amount or full extent of the claims is?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I may say to the gentleman from New York that an agreement was reached between the gentleman to whom I have just referred and a representative of the Mexican Government, knowing that the total amount involved was greatly in excess of $1,000,000, the Mexican Government agreed to pay $1,000,000 on the 31st day of May.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. That information is not in the committee report, though.

Mr. DEMPSEY. No; but let me say that it is necessary to appraise these lands; that is what we are asking be done. Until this is done we cannot properly arrive at the amount Mexico owes the people of the United States.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS. I am interested in the oil situation.

Mr. DEMPSEY. This resolution has no reference whatever to the oil situation. It refers only to agrarian claims.

Mr. BROOKS. The gentleman from New York referred to oil lands, but the gentleman states that this resolution does not refer to oil lands?

Mr. DEMPSEY. This resolution does not have any reference at all to oil lands.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York has advised me that he does not wish to use the remainder of his time. I, therefore, move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

AMERICAN-MEXICAN AGRARIAN CLAIMS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Joint Resolution 114, authorizing appropriation for expenses of a representative of the United States and of his assistants, and for one-half of the joint expenses of this Government and the Government of Mexico, in giving effect to the agreement of November 9–12, 1938, between the two Governments providing for the settlement of American claims for damages resulting from expropriations of agrarian properties since August 30, 1927, and ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, and that a similar Senate resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 46, be substituted for the House resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the Senate joint resolution be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how will the time be controlled if the bill is so considered?

The SPEAKER. Consideration would be under the 5-minute rule if the gentleman's request is granted.

Mr. BLOOM. Does the gentleman want to agree upon some definite time? How much time would the gentleman like?

Mr. MAPES. We have adopted a rule. I have requests for time. I think I shall have to object.

Mr. BLOOM. We could agree upon some time limit, the time to be equally divided and to be controlled by the gentleman from New York and myself.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that time for general debate be limited to 1 hour, to be equally divided and to be controlled by the gentleman from New York and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, in addition to his request heretofore submitted, now requests that there be 1 hour of general debate on the resolution, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the purpose of the gentleman from New York in submitting this request rather than proceeding according to the rule?

Mr. BLOOM. Only at the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] as to how we could proceed and control the time.

Mr. MAPES. I object, Mr. Speaker. We have adopted a rule.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 114, authorizing appropriation for expenses of a representative of the United States and of his assistants, and for one-half of the joint expenses of this Government and the Government of Mexico, in giving effect to the agreement of November 9–12, 1938, between the two Governments providing for the settlement of American claims for damages resulting from expropriations of agrarian properties since August 30, 1927.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK].

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, there was a bill on the Private Calendar considered a little while ago and the record shows there were two objections. I refer to No. 125 on the calendar. The gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] objected. The gentlemen shown as objecting are the gentlemen from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS and Mr. GORE]. I was present with both of those gentlemen and I find the name listed as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRANT]. I went to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRANT], and he said he had not objected; and if he did, it was through inadvertence. The record shows that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRANT] did object. While these gentlemen are here and before we go any further, I would like to have the matter considered, because of the gravity of the bill. It involves a death claim in which a man was hit and killed by a Government truck running on the wrong side of the road. I am fearful if we let it go any further, it cannot be corrected and will have to go over. This is very serious to the people involved. Is it possible at this time to get the record clear so that it will state exactly what did happen? If we can do that, it would be the best thing that could be done for all persons concerned.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I yielded for a question only.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] yielded for a question. The Chair may say that before the House adjourns the Chair will be glad to recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK].

Mr. PATRICK. I just wanted to call attention to the matter now.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 114.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 114, with Mr. HARTER of Ohio in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The first reading of the joint resolution was dispensed with.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON].

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, this joint resolution comes to the House with the unanimous report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It is therefore not controversial. The debate under the rule indicated that the merits of the bill were not subject to objection, and the extraneous remarks made had no pertinency whatever to the terms of this bill. Certain Members took advantage of the time for debate in order to air their views in condemnation of certain problems, political and otherwise, led by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], who rarely ever speaks in the House, but who took advantage of this occasion to make a few remarks, of course, of a nonpartisan and nonpolitical nature. He is always that way. I would like sometime to see the distinguished gentleman from New York rise and speak in a partisan manner. It would seem so unnatural.

The bill effectuates a method by which the United States and Mexico have set up an agency or commission whereby the rights of our citizens are recognized in the payment of agrarian claims to be made by the Government of Mexico for lands of American citizens confiscated by Mexico. I wish my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] would ask his usual question, "Where are you going to get the money?" because I would like to answer him by saying that the money in this instance would come, not out of the American people or the Treasury of the United States, but from the treasury of the Government of Mexico. The claims are to be paid out of this fund, which will be paid by Mexico at the rate of $1,000,000 a year until the total amount of the claims allowed by the Commission have been paid. The Commission will be composed of one representative from the United States and one from Mexico.

We are not concerned now with the cause of the confiscation of land in Mexico. That is not involved here. For many years there has been confiscation of agrarian lands of American cititzens in Mexico. The Government of the United States and the Government of Mexico reached an agreement last November by which a commission was set up to determine these claims and ascertain the amount of the claims. Mexico is to make its first annual installment payment on May 31 of this year of $1,000,000 and a similar amount each year thereafter until the total amount of claims approved by this Commission has been paid.

Some doubt has been expressed with reference to whether or not the Mexican Government will meet its payments. The gentleman from New York said we would never get any of the money. We can only consider this, however, from experience we have had with reference to another claims commission which was set up between the United States and Mexico. I refer to the United States-Mexican Special Claims Commission set up a few years ago to consider claims arising during the revolutionary period in Mexico. The Mexican Government agreed to pay these revolutionary claims at the rate of $500,000 a year for 10 years. Five of these annual payments have now been made and the Government of Mexico is meeting those payments promptly. The gentleman from New York seems to think there has been some lethargy on the part of the administration in the collection of these claims and he seeks to cast some aspersions upon the administration, our Ambassador to Mexico, and the State Department; however, his statements are without foundation and are not based on fact. The truth of the matter is that these agrarian seizures went on under the administration of which the gentleman from New York is a part, a Republican administration, during which time there were 161 agrarian confiscations which took place prior to 1927. The party of which he is a distinguished member and a great leader made no effort to reimburse the citizens of the United States for those losses.

The settlement of these claims, under a definite plan worked out for payment thereof by the Mexican Government, should meet with the approval and not the condemnation of the American people. Mexico is perhaps not prepared to make any large annual payments. As I understand from representatives of the State Department, a payment of $1,000,000 a year is approximately 10 percent of what it is thought will be the total amount of the claims. Of course, no one knows what the total value of the claims allowed will be, but I understand it is estimated that the possible total amount of these claims will be $10,000,000, though they may be much more. Until the claims are presented and passed upon by the Commission, no one knows what the total will be, and the agreement merely provides for one million annual payment by Mexico until the full amount allowed by the Commission has been paid. When this money is paid by the Government of Mexico there will first be deducted the expenses incurred by our Government in setting up the machinery, so the claimants will get the net amount of collections after our Government has been reimbursed for all expenditures made by it.

There should be no objection to this measure, and I believe no one will be against it. I believe the State Department has carried on this matter in a very able and commendable manner, and I think the House should vote unanimously for the passage of this resolution.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs from the State of Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the resolution before us today is an example of the teamwork necessary between the President and the Congress to carry on our foreign affairs. The President has made an Executive agreement with Mexico. He did not choose to refer it to the Senate for ratification, but did it solely on his own responsibility. Now he must come to Congress for money to put the agreement into effect. This is the kind of action which an authority on foreign affairs, quoted and approved by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY], describes as follows:

> When our President agrees upon a mutual action with the chief executive of another country without the authority of the Constitution or of Congress, the agreement is not legally binding; it is merely a sort of a gentlemen's agreement.

We will be told that if we do not raise the money to carry out this "gentlemen's agreement" our Government will be embarrassed in its relations with Mexico, even though we disapprove of the agreement the Government has made. We may well reply that this possible embarrassment should have been considered when this agreement was made. At this time, when we have this question before us, and when we have neutrality legislation being discussed in committee, and when our whole effort is to seek a way of peace for our country, we should reexamine the conduct of our foreign affairs.

We are a constitutional democracy. The execution of our foreign policy is solely for the President. The determination of our foreign policy is, in the last analysis, a responsibility of the Congress, which has sole power to declare war, and therefore the responsibility to keep from declaring war. In addition to this, the Senate has the duty of ratifying treaties and the Congress, the House of Representatives acting first, has the duty of appropriating money. There is hardly any conceivable activity in foreign relations which does not involve the spending of money. This present resolution providing for the Mexican Commission is an example.

While the President may make speeches, write notes and make "gentlemen's agreements," he must come to Congress to make his action practically effective. An example of this is the creation of ambassadors. Congress in 1909 provided: "No new ambassadorships shall be created unless the same shall be provided for by act of Congress." Our President has chosen to ignore this law, feeling that the question of whether his diplomatic representative in another country shall be labeled as an ambassador or minister is solely for him to determine under the Constitution. But Congress still controls the creation of embassies. From a practical standpoint the big difference between an ambassador and a minister is the rate of pay which Congress alone has the power and the duty to determine, and through the power of appropriation the Congress still has the veto if our President, bursting with international good will, or generosity toward his appointees, continues to create new ambassadorships in violation of law. This is democracy at work. It is more cumbersome than the conduct of foreign affairs in a totalitarian state but it is more stable and there is no proof yet that it is not more conducive to peace. When Assistant Secretary of State Berle says, "Rightly, in foreign affairs, we trust to the steady voice which speaks not from government to government but from people to people," he refers to a stability and reliability in our foreign policies once they have undergone the democratic process of approval by both the Executive and the Congress which does not exist across the seas. On the other hand, attempts of our Presidents to evade or dominate this process have not been particularly happy. When President Wilson took his famous ride to Paris and was there taken for the famous ride by our then allies, he claimed to be speaking not from government to government but from people to people. To his great sorrow, to the chagrin of this ccuntry and the disappointment of our allies, he was badly mistaken. He was only an agent of the United States, with authority to negotiate but not to enter into any binding agreement.

On the other hand, when Secretary of State Hughes entered into negotiations, representing his President, with the nations of the world in Washington, in 1922, he had with him as delegates representatives of both parties in the Senate—Senators Lodge and Underwood—and he had prominent Members of the House of Representatives on his advisory committee, so that when the time came to ratify the treaties and pay the bills the agreements of the representatives of the United States in the conference were approved and became a stable part of our foreign policy.

As we start into the consideration of so-called neutrality legislation we in Congress should bear in mind the important part that the President must take under our Constitution and the President will do well to bear in mind the responsibilities of Congress in determining our foreign policy. We hear a great deal of talk these days about naming the aggressor nations, and punishing them by measures short of war. One suggestion is that we draft legislation giving this power to our President. Another suggestion is that we let our present neutrality legislation lapse and permit him to name aggressors and takes sides by measures short of war, regardless of how little short of war these measures may prove. What do you mean—aggressor? Granted that the President is in international determinations the sole judge and jury, he still does not make the laws of nations or define offenses against the laws of nations. Article I of our Constitution says that Congress shall have power, among other things, to—

Define and punish * * * offenses against the laws of nations.

The definition and the punishment of offenses against the laws of nations must be unilateral in the present instance. If we wish our Government to visit unilateral punishment on nations that have offended, Congress, under our Constitution, has the duty to decide what are the offenses and what the punishment shall be. Merely to say this over, to attempt to write it down, shows the grave difficulty which confronts us when we attempt in a constitutional way to name and punish aggressors. Certainly we should not in an unconstitutional way give to the President the power to name and punish aggressors.

We criticize Italy, Germany, and Japan for two reasons: First, we do not like their internal form of government; second, they are attempting to secure more territory by conquest. Every one of us has a right to feel indignant about these two things, but should we now start, by official action or by official inaction through failing to limit the tendencies of the President in that direction, to punish these nations for absolutism and for conquest? We may have felt indignation, but we did not interfere during the conquests of Great Britain and France during the past century, possibly because we were making our own conquests. We may not have approved, but we did not intervene to correct the brutal absolute governments in Russia, Turkey, and in many of our neighboring countries to the South. Let us try as a Congress to define the laws of nations and offenses against these laws which we as a nation are going to punish by war and by measures short of war. There should be nothing secret about this. In fact, open discussions should be helpful, first, to inform our people so that they, in turn, can give their views to their representatives; second, so that the world may know what we are doing. If we can restate or make a new statement of international law and offenses and punishments to fit modern conditions, we may be doing a great service to world peace and order. If we cannot agree on any such statement, we should prevent the President from doing it for us. Once we have determined upon our foreign policy, its execution can be left to the secrecy and rapidity of executive action, but there is no place for secrecy and rapid action in formulating our international policy in these times.

What do we mean by declaring war, which is the constitutional duty solely of Congress? We know that in modern times styles of warfare have changed. First, wars are started without being formally declared, and, second, warfare through economic pressure and military threats can be practically as effective as old-fashioned warfare, accompanied by bloodshed. Does anyone, except the President, think that war is not now going on in China? Does anyone, including the President, deny that we are not now in a secret military alliance with Great Britain? Here are the headlines of this morning's Post:

Britain invites all nations to resist Hitler dominations; United States asks bids on eight warships; Proposals sought even before funds are voted in move to speed program.

This is the sort of thing that the monthly publication by the national committee of the Communist Party, United States of America, describes in its April issue as follows:

The foreign policy of the United States takes on a firmer, more decisive character * * * a serious consideration of America's foreign policy is no longer possible without careful thought as to where and how the President's clear stand against Berlin-Rome-Tokyo aggression can be implemented by cooperation with other powers * * * the common anti-Fascist and peace-loving interests of the United States and the Soviet Union, if grasped without loss of time, can become decisive * * * but the President's policy requires that it be pursued resolutely and without the hesitations which have permitted our hands to be tied so long by the crudely unneutral Neutrality Act.

On March 10, 1939, Joseph Stalin, before the Eighteenth Congress of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, said:

The new imperialist war has become a fact * * *. We stand for support to nations which have fallen prey to aggression and are fighting for the independence of their countries.

I now ask, Have we an alliance with Great Britain and Soviet Russia; have we in secret already declared war on somebody?

Let us make it clear to our own country and to the world that our only foreign policies are those which have been approved by Congress, which are not secret, which anyone may read, and that they are based not on war and force against anyone but upon peace and justice. In determining this policy openly and deliberately we have a duty to cooperate with the Executive and a right to expect his cooperation with us. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, we have just listened to a very interesting and informative address on our foreign policy. We likewise listened a few minutes ago to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] speak regarding the outrages that, in his judgment, have been committed in Mexico. However, it seems to me that the important thing at this time for the consideration of this committee and later for the consideration of the House is to determine what is the best and quickest means by which American citizens may obtain redress for the taking of their agrarian properties in Mexico.

Living as I do in El Paso, on the Mexican border, I have heard a good deal about this situation; in fact, I have good friends and constituents who suffered heavy losses on account of the loss of property in Mexico which they had honestly acquired. I do not want anything I may say here to be construed as approval of some of the illegal and, in my judgment, outrageous practices that have been followed in the confiscation or expropriation of properties in Mexico belonging to American citizens, but at the same time it seems to me the question now for the consideration of the House is what is the best and most practical means by which we may at least obtain a measure of redress for our citizens, and, of course, I mean what is the only peaceful method by which we may do it, because I take it that no one, certainly no Member of this House, is going to favor going into a foreign country and forcibly taking something in order to obtain redress for wrongs that have been committed against some of our citizens. In view of world conditions, we should strive to promote friendly relations between all the American republics. Therefore, it seems to me that when you talk about a good-neighbor policy, when it comes to the discussion of peaceful methods, this measure sets up the only means by which this can be accomplished.

I have a great interest in this resolution because I believe it will bring about practical results, perhaps not a full recovery to our citizens, but at least a million dollars every year until the amount adjudicated by the International Commission has been paid.

Another consideration that makes me favor this resolution is that I know the law will be honestly and efficiently administered. It just happens that Mr. L. M. Lawson, the American Commissioner, is a resident of my city and a good friend of mine. I should like to say in passing that I know of no man in the Government service in this country who is more capable, more conscientious, or more efficient than he. For some 30 years he has been in the Government service, being an outstanding engineer in the Reclamation Service and having been drafted by President Coolidge to become the International Boundary Commissioner in connection with the rectification of the channel of the Rio Grande between the United States and Mexico. Fortunately that work is just about completed, and in my judgment it is one of the outstanding pieces of engineering and diplomatic work in this country. It has an interesting sidelight today in the fact that it is the only time I know of in the history of a boundary between two nations where that boundary has actually been moved without war. It is the only time I can recall when there has been a peaceful moving or changing of an international boundary.

Mr. Lawson is not only an outstanding engineer, but along with it he is an understanding diplomat and knows the Mexican character. I am very certain he will render distinguished service in this capacity, and when the work of this Commission as set up under this resolution is completed, I undertake to say that it will be a work of which all citizens in this country will be very proud.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. I understand further that Mr. Lawson does not receive any additional compensation for the services he renders to this Commission.

Mr. THOMASON. Not one cent, as I understand it, because he is already the International Boundary Commissioner dealing with Mexican affairs along the border between the United States and Mexico, so this is just an added duty, and I am sure the gentleman is quite correct in his statement. I hope this bill will pass without opposition. Our citizens will be glad to get at least a part of the money due them. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I think we should at least know what we are doing before we vote for this bill. Here is a measure that provides for the creation of a Commission to confer with the Mexican Government upon ways and means to indemnify American citizens for their property which was expropriated by the Mexican Government. It is sought to obtain an agreement whereby the Mexican Government will pay annually a million dollars for such indemnification.

Here we run headlong into the silver question. These payments would probably be made in silver. Our Treasury does not buy silver from Mexico direct. Mexicans take their silver to our refineries from whence it is purchased by the Treasury. In any event, Mexican silver would be converted into American dollars to pay the claims.

Therefore, the million dollars our claimants would receive each year would be paid for in silver. However, we are paying 43 cents an ounce for it, while in all likelihood it is worth no more than 21 cents, or perhaps less. It was selling for about 21 cents an ounce in the London market when the silver-purchase program was started. Now what really will happen here, is the American taxpayers will pay the difference in the actual value of silver, which is not more than 21 cents an ounce, and the 43 cents we pay for it.

In other words, what we really will be doing if we pass this bill, will be to put a tax on American citizens for more than half a million dollars. Actually we are asking the people of the United States to help pay our own citizens for the property taken from them by Mexico.

We are, of course, doing other strange things with gold and silver—in Mexico, Venezuela, China, and elsewhere. We buy gold at an enormous premium with American goods, and then with this gold bid the price of silver up to perhaps more than twice its actual value! In the above-named countries, we actually exchange gold for silver.

Here is a beautiful illustration of what happens when a government tinkers with its money. How many people are there that would even dream it possible that the American taxpayers will be forced under such an act as this to pay the greater portion of the money our claimants would receive from Mexico, if, of course, we receive any, and the silver-purchase program continues?

Here our money disorder has us in the strange dilemma, where we would like to have another nation indemnify our nationals for property which it confiscated, but cannot without confiscating the property of our own citizens.

Nor is this all. Should the American Government monetize the silver coming in to make these payments at $1.29 an ounce, which is what it is now doing with other silver it buys, the American taxpayers will have to pay to the Treasury at the rate of 86 cents for every ounce of silver taken in as payment for these claims. Should the latter be done, which would be likely, then the proposition works out as follows: Out of every $1.29 supposedly received from the Mexican Government, the taxpayers of the United States will actually be paying about $1.08.

The truth is the American taxpayers will probably pay every cent of the $1,000,000, because we have not a particle of use for any more silver. We already have far more than we can possibly use.

It appears to me it is about time for us to give some of these matters real and honest consideration and do a little thinking about them to see where we are going. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. It appears to me that this is a procedure wherein we confess acceptance by the American people of the doctrine that confiscation of the property of our citizens in Mexico is not to be further challenged. The procedure here seems to imply that the Commission will sit and determine what damage there may be, but that the principle involved is not to be discussed. Furthermore, it perhaps ought to be an international affair, because there appears to have been confiscation of property in Mexico, of nations other than the United States. I respectfully ask the chairman of the committee if other nations are invited to sit in with this body?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee is not here, but if the gentleman wishes to ask that question of me, I say to him that one of the main reasons I do not like the bill—and I cannot see how we can oppose it—is that I think it carries that interpretation, that we are agreeing to this confiscation, and to a continuation of the confiscation and that it will probably be accepted as such by Mexico.

Mr. GIFFORD. That is the point I wished to bring out. Is this to be a permissible procedure—confiscation of property not only affecting this country, but also other nations. If we are simply to settle damages and confess our failure to protest the procedure of confiscation, it is not a happy ending.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. If the gentleman does not agree to this kind of procedure, may I ask the gentleman what kind of procedure he would suggest?

Mr. GIFFORD. Although I do not claim to have any particular knowledge or a definite opinion on the matter, I do think that even under the "good neighbor" policy we should not go so far as to nod approval of the confiscation of property and invite it to be a regular procedure in Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman half a minute more to ask him another question.

Mr. GIFFORD. But I rose to ask a question, but the gentleman may again answer it by asking one.

Mr. BLOOM. If the gentleman has no suggestion to make of a procedure to adopt, should that prevent these claimants from coming in and getting their money?

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman may take it from me as a suggestion that it is a very dangerous policy that we are pursuing. By setting up this Commission to settle damage claims we should be very careful lest it be interpreted that it is perfectly all right for Mexico to proceed with their policy of confiscation in the future. It is a highly doubtful procedure, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has said.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes. I believe the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] is correct, and if there be any way of amending the resolution that would be acceptable, I would like to see such an amendment. I am inclined to believe that this resolution will convey the interpretation to Mexico that we have agreed to their system of confiscation, and it will encourage such a procedure in the future and may encourage it in other foreign nations. It does seem as if we were about to accept a system of payment that may not be at all adequate, may not begin to pay 25 cents on the dollar, and that we, by legislation, are a party to it. They will then say that the United States Government has endorsed this program of expropriation and no payment over a number of years or a payment of only 25 or 30 cents on the dollar.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. With reference to these installment payments, does not the gentleman realize that since we set up the General Claims Commission between the United States and Mexico some 15 or 16 years ago, we have never received any money out of it? The only way we have gotten any money from Mexico is by these installment payments such as we set up under the special commission, whereby they are paying it.

Mr. FISH. I hope we do get something out of it. I think American citizens who owned the property ought to be adequately paid by Mexico. But this whole miserable picture of despoliation of American citizens by Mexico over a long number of years has been one of just turning the other cheek each time and not doing anything about it whatever until now we have a pittance handed out to us, and in the legislation we practically concur in the despoiling of our citizens.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. FADDIS. In connection with this good-neighbor policy, it occurs to me it should be reciprocal. It occurs to me also that we have a perfectly good weapon against Mexico to make them accord justice to American claimants in the matter of silver, have we not?

Mr. FISH. We certainly have. I have already discussed that. I would be for the good-neighbor policy if it operated on a mutual basis. I happen to be a Pan-American. I believe in creating good will and promoting trade between the United States and all Latin-American states. Of course, the good-neighbor policy must work both ways. It has not been on the part of Mexico. That is why it has failed. That is why it has collapsed. We have been insulted and the rights of our citizens have not been respected. Their property has been seized by Mexicans and we have not done anything about it. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania suggests a remedy, and the remedy is correct. We do control the situation economically by the purchase of silver. We could stop that, because we are paying twice the cost of production; but I have already spoken on that.

I rose to say simply this, that we have not been bringing in many bills affecting our foreign policies during this session of the Congress. Unfortunately a feeling has grown up both in the House of Representatives and among the American people, and you can hear it even in this debate by distinguished members of our committee, that we do not have the right to criticize the foreign policies of the administration or of any administration. I want to point out and to emphasize to the best of my ability, that we ought to have the right, the majority and particularly the minority, and I say to the minority that we not only have the right but we have the duty, to criticize and expose the foreign policies of the administration more so than we have to criticize and expose its domestic policies. Domestic policies are closer to home. People know more about them; but when it comes to the foreign policies that might involve us actually in war, then I say to you Members of Congress on both sides that we have not only that right, but we should use that right where we differ with the President, where we may think he is involving us in war, in foreign commitments in military alliances, or in any foreign entanglements that may endanger the peace of this country. It is the duty of members of both parties, regardless of partisanship, to take the floor and speak to their constituents, the American people, through this medium of debate in the House of Representatives, through this sounding board, in order, if they possibly can, to prevent our being led into another foreign war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FISH. I yield myself 5 additional minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The same issue arises in this Mexican problem. I offer no apologies for criticizing our weak-kneed and bungling policies in Mexico. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY] introduced a resolution asking merely for certain information. What happened to that resolution? It was pigeonholed in the Committee on Foreign Affairs. There was nothing secret in it. The Secretary of State answered it to the best of his ability. It should have been brought out here. We are the representatives of the people back home. Why should this have been smothered in the Committee on Foreign Affairs? Why should there not have been put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the answers to the questions asked by my colleague from New York? I also asked certain questions by resolution of the Secretary of State and the President on the Mexican situation. I wanted to find out how many properties had been seized under the Cardenas regime. I have not been able to find out even to this moment. In spite of the fact that I am a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, my own resolution was smothered and pigeonholed, although I moved to get it out of committee myself by a vote of the committee. It is unprecedented, to my knowledge, that an answer to a resolution of a Member of Congress by the Secretary of State should not be reported to the House and the full answer given to the House and put into the RECORD. That is why, when we are afforded an opportunity on the floor of the House, the gentleman from New York and myself and others have deliberately, purposely, and advisedly criticized the policies of the administration in Mexico. I, for one, believe that the good-neighbor policy has collapsed and broken down in Mexico. I believe it is responsible for the tragic treatment of American citizens doing business in Mexico.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. Can the gentleman mention any time that he has been prevented from expressing his views, either in the committee or on the floor, with reference to his views on foreign affairs?

Is it not a further fact that the report from the Secretary of State is on file with the committee, not pigeonholed with the clerk of the Foreign Affairs Committee, where any Member of the House is privileged to go and read it? And is it not further the fact that today on the question as to which the gentleman says he could not get any information, the Under Secretary of State gave the gentleman the information that he asked for and said that to their knowledge—not that he was withholding any information, but to their knowledge—there were only 100 claims reported up to the present time? I told the gentleman that this morning in the committee.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman's hearing is just as good as mine. He told me this morning they were trying to get the information I desired, but I have not got the information as yet.

Mr. BLOOM. He was not, however, withholding the information.

Mr. FISH. But I have been trying to get the information for 2 or 3 months, even by resolution, and have not received it. I have not time to yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. BLOOM. I will yield the gentleman 1 minute. Has the State Department, or the Secretary of State, withheld any information from the gentleman from New York? Did they not tell the gentleman from New York today in the hearing that they did not have the information? Is that not right?

Mr. FISH. They did not have the information available.

Mr. BLOOM. Why does not the gentleman say yes or no?

Mr. FISH. Under Secretary Welles told me he was trying to get it today, but I have been trying to get it for 3 months and have not gotten it yet.

Mr. BLOOM. He said he did not have it.

Mr. FISH. No; he said he instructed somebody this morning to get it for me. He has not gotten it yet, of course; but I have been after it for 3 months.

Mr. BLOOM. He did not decline to get it, though.

Mr. FISH. The fact is I could not get it even by resolution. The report is still before the committee when it ought to be before the House, as we are nothing but the servants of the House. But the report of the Secretary of State also failed to answer my request for the number of expropriations of American property under the Cardenas rule.

Mr. BLOOM. But it is up there to be read by any Member of the House.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield with only 1 minute remaining; nor can I in 1 minute attempt to discuss the so-called barter system and how it works in Mexico; but in answer to the statement of the Secretary of State who today denounced the German barter system, all I want to say is that the German Government was driven to that system. It has no money, no gold, and has no way of buying anything without money or foreign exchange except through the barter system. Naturally this is the only system it can use. Germany has to use it in order to live; yet the barter system was attacked today by Secretary Hull as a menace to America.

I say to you further that the whole German situation is one of overpopulation and food supply and raw materials. Until it is settled on the basis of raw materials and food supply whether Germany gets it through the barter system or some other system makes no difference but if it does not get these supplies it will be driven to the wall and there will be war. The way to settle this serious problem is on a common-sense basis and not by criticism and attacks on the barter system. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, may we be advised as to how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen and one-half minutes remain on the majority side. All time on the minority side has been used.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Of course, I cannot see why the report should not be made public, anyway, but it is my understanding from the gentleman's brief statement that any Member of the House may go to the Foreign Affairs Committee and read that report on the Mexican situation in the committee room.

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Without asking the gentleman from New York? I understood before that the chairman's permission must be asked.

Mr. BLOOM. No.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. So it is available to all Members?

Mr. BLOOM. It is open to any member of the committee to read it in the committee room, not to take it out of the committee room.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does that apply also to any Member of the House?

Mr. BLOOM. Any Member of the House. That was agreed upon in the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. IZAC].

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, in 1934 when President Cardenas took over the reins of government in Mexico he was faced with a very serious situation. He tried to inaugurate certain reforms. I will mention two of them today. First he tried to build schools throughout the whole of the Republic of Mexico. He did not get very far with the reform because he did not have any money. The second reform was what is known as the agrarian program. This agrarian program simply meant that they were going to take over the great land holdings and divide them among the Mexican peons.

Adjoining my district is a 1,000,000-acre tract of the most fertile land on the North American Continent in and above the delta of the Colorado River. This land was taken over by Americans, for the most part, years ago. How they got it I do not know. Part of it was Spanish grants, part of it was Mexican grants, part of it was outright sale. When the President of Mexico decided that he would put his people on those lands, naturally he expropriated them. There is nothing under the doctrine of eminent domain that is recognized in every nation to prevent that. There is only one thing that we demand in exchange for that expropriation, and that is payment for the lands. Again, the President of Mexico could not find the money with which to pay the American citizens whose lands made up part of the lands that were taken over by the Mexican Government.

The result has been that people in my district who, of course, flooded over onto the Mexican side of the border, were injured to the extent of perhaps millions of dollars. I hold no brief for those great holdings of land way down in the interior of Mexico where perhaps not a shovelful of ground has been turned, but I have sympathy for our people who have gone across the line, developed this land at a cost in some cases of about $25 an acre, just to get it in shape, and now see it going back to the desert.

We have done everything we could to encourage the State Department to negotiate this question with the Mexican Government and for 6 long months they were at a stalemate until finally they obtained the agreement that is referred to in this bill. It is the best we could get. It may not be everything that we should like to have, but I believe it will form a basis for better feeling in the future. True, we could go over there and wage war on our neighbors to the south, but that is not the way to get along with people who have to live with us in the Western Hemisphere. Our whole system of national defense is bound up in the fine, friendly feeling of the American nations one to another. If for no other reason, let us accept this as a basis for good feeling.

We are going to get a million dollars on the 31st of May under this agreement. Every year thereafter as the claims come in they will be adjudicated and the Mexican Government will give us the money with which to pay these claims. I have heard it stated it was hundreds of millions of dollars, although I do not believe that is so.

This has nothing to do with the expropriation of mineral or oil lands. It is only those lands taken over for farm purposes to give the mass of the Mexican people a chance to eke out a living on their own soil.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. Was it not some years ago that the Mexican Government started expropriating this land, at which time they agreed to repay the legitimate owners in bonds, and later on they failed to redeem the bonds? If this bill does not pass, the rightful owners will not get anything.

Mr. IZAC. They have only the bonds, and they are practically worthless because the Mexican Government has not the money with which to redeem them. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KEE].

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the consideration of the measure we have before us today is hardly the occasion for a discussion of the entire foreign policy of the United States. The situation that we are now confronted with is a very simple one. A foreign government, a neighbor of ours to the south, has exercised its right under its constitution, being the same right we have under our own Constitution, to take private property for public use. It has, in the exercise of this right, expropriated some property belonging to American citizens. This property was of considerable value, and no payment therefor has yet been made to the owners. We have before us a measure under which we hope such owners may be compensated.

This expropriation started back in 1915 and has continued from that time to the present. Some years a great number of properties were taken by the Mexican Government. Some years only a few. Quite recently, as has been well stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], under the administration of President Cardenas expropriations have materially increased. There is no question about our recognizing the right of Mexico to take this land. We have a provision in our own Constitution authorizing us to take private property for public use and we frequently exercise this right of eminent domain. In this country, however, the taking of private property for public use is immediately followed by payment of an adequate compensation. We appoint commissioners to determine the value of the land taken and we make prompt payment therefor.

This is simply a case of Mexico exercising the right of eminent domain. The pending bill is for the purpose of appointing commissioners to determine the value of the property that Mexico has taken from our citizens and to arrange a method of payment. It is a simple proposition. I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and some of the others that the amount fixed in this bill as an annual payment to be made by Mexico is not sufficient.

We are not advised at present as to the amount of money that will be required to pay off the total sum that Mexico owes our nationals for the property taken, but we do know that the amount will be substantial. It is impossible at this time to get this information. The State Department advises that all the claimants, the American owners of expropriated lands, have not filed their claims and it is impossible for the Department to know the claimed value of the lands taken. With the meager information at hand, however, we are assured that the amount owing by Mexico to our American nationals will not be an inconsiderable sum.

Sometime ago I made a slight investigation of this question in an effort to determine if possible the total value of all the agrarian properties expropriated, payment for which is to be made under the terms of this settlement. My effort met with but little success. Some information was available as to the number of properties seized, but values can only be estimated. In a note addressed by Secretary of State Hull to the Mexican Ambassador on August 22 last, the Secretary said that agrarian expropriations began in Mexico in 1915, and that up to August 30, 1927, 161 moderate-sized properties of American citizens had been taken. Up to this date, whatever may have been the value of these lands, not a single claim has been adjusted and none have been paid.

I make this statement in view of the fact that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] stated on the floor this afternoon that we had not heard of this proposition in recent years because prior to 1927 our Government had just jumped on Mexico and made that country come across. This statement of our Secretary of State showing there has never been a single dollar paid certainly does not indicate that prior administrations in this country were any more successful in making collections than the present one.

The owners of these properties lost their property, its use and proceeds for from 11 years up to more than 20 years, and are still seeking redress.

The value of the 161 properties expropriated prior to 1927 is not stated, but in the same note from which I have heretofore quoted Secretary Hull states that subsequent to 1927 additional property, chiefly farms of moderate size, with a value claimed by the owners of $10,132,388, have been expropriated by the Mexican Government. This figure does not include the large land grants frequently mentioned in the press. It refers only to the moderate-sized holdings which rendered only a modest living. None of them as yet have been paid for.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. KEE. Various estimates have been made and remarkable valuations have been placed upon the properties of Americans that have been expropriated. Whether or not these estimates are correct we do not know. This fact is for the determination of the commission named in the bill we are now considering. It has been estimated that the total value of all the properties taken by Mexico from all foreign owners, including British and American, is approximately $700,000,000. This may possibly be true, and it may be entirely beyond reason. The only question here is whether or not this settlement we are making is the best possible settlement that can be made for and on behalf of American claimants, whatever may be the amount due them. I say it is. The amount to be paid by Mexico, $1,000,000 a year, is not sufficient, but in Mexico's present financial situation we cannot possibly expect to do any better. If you will bear with me I will give you some figures upon the total indebtedness of Mexico today.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I believe those figures could be placed in an extension of the gentleman's remarks, but I am very eager to know if the gentleman believes this sort of permission should be granted. Under the resolution, the representative shall make a report upon the completion of his work, which may take years. It may take a long time. You are setting up here a very liberal permission. The representative is allowed every sort of expense, and even the expenses of entertainment are allowed under the resolution.

Mr. BLOOM. But they are paying a million dollars every year.

Mr. GIFFORD. That does not matter. Can you not put me on this commission? It could be a very splendid job for life.

Mr. BLOOM. Would the gentleman resign from Congress if I did?

Mr. GIFFORD. It would be an excellent thing to be on that commission, with no termination of the job until the work was completed and with every conceivable kind of expense allowed, including entertainment.

I hope I did not interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. KEE. No; that is all right; but I should like an opportunity to answer the question.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. One-half minute.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from West Virginia 1 additional minute.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman comment on my question?

Mr. KEE. The only comment I have on that is that there is a tremendous amount of money involved here—more than the $10,000,000 that has been frequently mentioned in connection with the expropriation activities of Mexico.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will it take a tremendous amount of time?

Mr. KEE. It will take a number of years to adjust it. If we could do better, we would do better.

Mr. GIFFORD. The commissioner does not report until the completion of his work. He does not report yearly, or anything of that sort, does he? He has carte blanche under the resolution?

Mr. KEE. I do not recall the exact provision, but the money is to be paid yearly by Mexico, and will no doubt be paid out to the claimants from time to time by the commission.

Mr. GIFFORD. No one ever read such a liberal permission as this.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I understood the Chair to state that there was a minute and a half remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated a half minute remained.

Mr. BLOOM. I yielded a minute to the gentleman from West Virginia and reserved a half minute for myself to make a brief statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman misunderstood the Chair. The Chair stated there was a half minute remaining, and the Chair understood that time was yielded to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. BLOOM. I know the time is fixed by the rule, Mr. Chairman, but I just wish to say for the benefit of the Committee that when the question of silver was being mentioned I had a telephone message sent to the State Department to find out whether or not these payments are to be made in dollars. The State Department informs me that all the payments made heretofore and all the payments under this resolution are to be made in dollars, in United States money, and in no other currency.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to provide for the expenses of participation by the United States in the settlement, in pursuance of the agreement of November 9–12, 1938, of claims of citizens of the United States against the Government of Mexico on account of expropriations of agrarian properties since August 30, 1927, including personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; rent of offices, electric service, drinking water, rooms and rent, and purchase of equipment for the use of the representative of the United States and his assistants, in addition, if deemed necessary by the Secretary of State, to the lawful per diem; stenographic, reporting, and translating services by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); traveling expenses; communication service; purchase of law books and books of reference; transportation of things; printing and binding; office supplies; official cards; entertainment; expenses and honorarium of a neutral umpire in the event such an appointment is found necessary; and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, including the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes herein specified: Provided, That any expenditures from the amount herein authorized to be appropriated shall become a first charge upon any moneys received from the Government of Mexico in settlement of the respective claims, and the amount of such expenditures shall be deducted from the first payment by the Mexican Government and deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts: And provided further, That the representative of the United States shall, upon the completion of his work, submit a report to the Secretary of State, attaching thereto (a) a statement of the expenses of himself, his assistants, and of the umpire, in case an umpire is designated; (b) a list of all claims rejected; (c) a list of all claims allowed in whole or in part, together with the amount of each claim and the amount awarded thereon; and (d) a statement of the reasons for the allowance or disallowance in each case. Certified copies of (a) and (c) shall be transmitted by the Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall, after making the deduction provided for above, distribute in ratable proportions, among the persons in whose favor awards shall have been made, or their assignees, heirs, executors, or administrators of record, according to the proportions which their respective awards shall bear to the whole amount available from time to time for such distribution, such moneys as may have been received into the Treasury in virtue of the agreement of November 9–12, 1938.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the middle word.

Mr. BLOOM. What middle word does the gentleman want to strike out?

Mr. GILCHRIST. "Drinking water."

Mr. Chairman, the first agrarian bill I know anything about was the one passed by the Romans by which they distributed lands to the soldiery. I have a little indecision in my own mind as to what is meant by "agrarian property," as contained in this bill. I rise partly to ask the chairman of the committee if that refers to all that is under the surface of land as well as upon the surface of the land?

Mr. BLOOM. The dictionary defines "agrarian" as pertaining to fields or lands, or their tenure.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Under the rules of the common law it means all that is beneath the surface of the earth. If I own a piece of land, I own the oil below it and I own the silver below it, too. I do not know exactly what that word means in this bill.

I also rise to ask the chairman of the committee why this resolution is limited to expropriations only since 1927?

Mr. BLOOM. I may say to the gentleman there were two Mexican Claims Commissions. One was the General Claims Commission, covering all other claims except revolutionary claims arising between July 4, 1868, and August 30, 1927.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. BLOOM. Then there were the special claims, the so-called revolutionary claims, covering the period from January 20, 1910, to May 31, 1920. The Special Claims Commission has done its work, and now we have the Agrarian Claims Commission. According to the agreement, this Commission will take up all the claims from 1927 to the present time.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, the general Mexican claims bill, which is usually introduced in the House and brought to the attention of Congress in the dying days, when they are putting bills through at the rate of about 20 per minute, not alone calls for a decision as to what the claims are but requires that the people of the United States shall actually pay such claims in advance of the time that Mexico pays them to the United States. Mexico will never do this.

In other words, if, for instance, some great railway company has a claim against Mexico, as they do have or pretend to have, the general Mexican claims bill requires us to actually pay those claims in advance of the time we shall get $1 from Mexico, and we will never get it. This bill does not so provide and neither did the original Mexican claims bill so provide, but I am wondering if the time shall come when the people of the Eighth Congressional District of Iowa will be asked to actually pay claims of this character.

It seems to me that the bill, as written, provides many dangerous things. If we are going ahead with a Mexican claims bill, it is all right to decide how much those claims are, and I do not know that I object to that, but I do object to the implications that are in this bill. No one can tell me or assure me what they mean. I do not know, as I said before, what agrarian claims are. I never was a very good Latin student, anyway. [Laughter and applause.] And I do not know just when the people of my district will have to help pay these claims.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, may I withdraw the motion to strike out the middle word?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. We have been condemning Mexico for expropriating our property. I want to call your attention again to the fact that this bill proposes to do the same thing with American property. If enacted and any collections are made and the present monetary set-up continues, it will do nothing less than confiscate the property of American citizens in the United States to pay the claims of some of our citizens for the confiscation of their property in Mexico. I ask, is this right? I am in full sympathy with the purpose of this measure. But that is another matter.

I understand both the minority and the majority members of the committee having this bill in charge have agreed to its passage. Nevertheless I cannot stand here and vote for it knowing that I am doing the same thing to the American citizens for which we have condemned Mexico. I repeat, this measure proposes to confiscate the property of the American taxpayers.

Mr. BLOOM. In what way? I do not quite understand the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Let me explain to you how our claimants would finally get American dollars. Whether in the form of goods or silver coming from Mexico, ultimately they would be exchanged for dollars, which then would be handed over by the Government to the claimants.

Mr. BLOOM. We are going to get dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Very well; we are going to get dollars; but how do we get the dollars? The silver has to pass through first. They bring this silver in and sell it to the United States Government at 43 cents an ounce, and then it is converted into United States dollars.

Mr. BLOOM. What has that to do with this matter?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. It has this much to do with it: Silver is only worth about 21 cents an ounce, or less, and we are paying twice its actual value. Who is paying that difference but the taxpayers of the United States?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. Would not the price of silver remain the same whether this bill passes or not?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Certainly, the price of silver would remain the same, but the American taxpayer would not have to buy the silver to make these payments.

Mr. HOUSTON. We could take it up with Sears, Roebuck, could we not? [Laughter.]

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. THORKELSON. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: If these dollars are paid to us, they will be international dollars?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes; the American dollar. All the payments will be made by the Mexican Government to the United States, and those that have been made have been paid in American dollars.

Mr. THORKELSON. In international dollars?

Mr. BLOOM. In our dollars.

Mr. THORKELSON. But there is a difference between the domestic dollar and the international dollar. The international dollar is secured with gold and the domestic dollar is not.

Mr. BLOOM. Is there any other dollar outside of the American dollar that could be considered as an international dollar?

Mr. THORKELSON. I refer to the international dollar.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

The New Deal gentleman suggested that we should take it up with Sears, Roebuck, and for the RECORD the Republicans do not have to take up matters with Sears, Roebuck. There are New Deal fellows like Hopkins that have to go to Sears, Roebuck to get their brains, like they did when they went to Sears, Roebuck to get General Wood.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Let me again try to make clear how the Mexican people get the American dollar. They have to buy it either with silver or Mexican goods, and it eventually amounts to the same thing because Mexican goods are valued in their silver. So if we vote for this bill we are simply expropriating—assuming we get this money from Mexico—at least $500,000 a year from the American taxpayers.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I would like to know on what ground the gentleman bases the statement that the passage of this bill is going to affect the American taxpayer adversely.

The gentleman talked about the matter of purchasing silver when the bill was being considered under the 5-minute rule, and now the gentleman is talking about the purchase of silver which is not involved in this bill. The gentleman's point should be taken up and considered in connection with other legislation, because it has nothing to do with this measure, as the gentleman well knows if he has read the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Almost anyone should be able to figure out, I believe, that Mexicans will have to pay for this in something, and they have only silver or commodities with which to pay it. Their commodities are ultimately valued in silver, so it does not make any difference whether we take silver or commodities; it is valued at 43 cents an ounce; and if that silver is worth only 43 cents an ounce or less, who pays the difference, if it is not the American taxpayer? I want to call your attention again to the fact that if silver certificates are issued against silver taken in to pay these claims, it simply means that the American taxpayer is taxed an additionl 86 cents for every $1.29 which the claimant receives from the Mexican Government. How can we justly do a thing of this sort?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the good-neighbor policy toward Mexico and other countries, especially on this hemisphere. I have no sympathy with the dollar diplomacy which used to characterize this Nation's affairs in dealing with nations south of the Rio Grande. However, I do believe that we can carry on a good-neighbor policy without sacrificing too much. I love my neighbor, but how much—not enough to give up my own rights and all benefits for the benefit of my neighbor. Good neighborliness merely means fair dealing and mutual concessions and helpfulness.

I live down near the border and know something first-hand of this matter. I have, during the years, seen hundreds of refugees, our own citizens, who had property in Mexico, coming back to the State of Arizona and to our border States, stripped of all of their possessions. Of course, you say that was under a revolutionary regime and is a matter for another claims commission to consider. I do know that although many of these cases have been considered, and some awards have been made, yet I believe there are other real cases of merited help the commission has not given those who have lost their all in Mexico. I am convinced a full accounting has not been made.

I am not so much concerned about the big landowners, especially those California land barons who went down into Old Mexico and acquired land in the delta of the Colorado River at 5 cents an acre. I am not caring so much about them. I am not shedding any tears about Mexicans expropriating such land under their agrarian policy, if they will only settle for them fairly, but I am thinking of hundreds and hundreds of American citizens who have lost their holdings in Old Mexico. The Mormon people, as agriculturalists and missionaries, were the heaviest losers in this class.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Not now, as I fear I shall not have time to bring out one or two other things. What is our attitude toward our neighbors to the south? Toward the Republic of Mexico? I want it to be a friendly attitude, but it also ought to be a fair attitude.

A friend of mine who had spent many years in Old Mexico lectured before a group of us one day some years ago and he brought out this odd contrast between those Latins and us

Anglo-Americans living only a few miles apart. The old gentleman, a philosopher, said, "I came down Mill Avenue to the college campus, and while on the way here I saw an unused building with all window panes broken out. That is the way you do in this country. Small boys throw stones through window panes of unused buildings. The police are not there, and if the police ever arrive, the boys are gone, and the owner of the building suffers a loss. Your police have done their duty if they prevent or seek to prevent such damage." He said further, "If that had occurred in Old Mexico, the procedure would have been different. It might have been that small boys would have thrown stones through the window panes, and they might have fled before the policemen arrived, but within a few hours afterward the policemen in Mexico would have come around to the owner, having put in the window panes, and they would apologize to the owner of the property for having permitted the thing to occur.

If such is their custom, Mr. Chairman, I think I favor the Mexican plan. If their police, representing the government, feel it their function to protect property, and that is what we feel, too, about it, to the extent of repairing damages done, that is a pretty good idea. If that is the Mexican law, if that is the Mexican philosophy, we might well copy it. However, I would say that if that is "good for the goose, it is also good for the gander." If they indemnify their own people when destruction of property has taken place, then in fairness to their neighbors, our citizens who have lost property there, they ought to indemnify them. I notice that our neighbors in Mexico are quick to avail themselves of our law when it is to their advantage.

One notable case in which Mexico takes advantage of the principle of our law, which, incidentally, is a principle they themselves have, is concerning the use of water in an arid land. Indeed, it is quite possible that we Americans in the Southwest took a few hints from the early Spaniards and Mexicans when we established the water law common to the arid portion of our country, which law is known as the law of prior appropriation, or beneficial use. At any rate, the water law which prevails in the intermountain country of our West differs from the water law in the eastern portion of our country and is very similar to the water law of Mexico. Whether our Anglo-Saxon pioneers, finding themselves in an arid land out West, changed their water law to suit the new conditions under which they were to live or whether they borrowed such a sensible law from their Latin neighbors is an academic question which I do not care to discuss. In any event, our arid West and the Republic of Mexico have the same legal principles and philosophy concerning the use of water.

I cannot too frequently call to your attention the fact that the Mexicans are applying water from the Colorado River right now to the rich delta lands at the head of the Gulf of California. This they could not do until after we completed Boulder Dam, regulating the stream flow for their convenience and saving them from the former hazard of annual floods. We can protect our legal rights to the waters of the lower Colorado River only by using it on our own lands or by taking due diligence to show the world that we intend to use it as soon as possible and how much we contemplate using.

Without envy I am willing that Mexicans shall get all the benefits possible out of our expenditure of more than a hundred million dollars in building Boulder Dam, provided they do not thereby impinge upon our rights and privileges. We must, to be consistent, recognize their right to take advantage of the water law of prior appropriation for beneficial use just exactly as we apply that principle in our own country and no further. On the other hand, Mexico should regard property rights of Americans who have acquired property in Mexico with the same respect and sancitity as they regard property rights of Mexican citizens, and, to be good neighbors, should pay for any property taken from our citizens. Nothing short of that is good neighborliness.

I believe this bill aims to carry out this policy of good neighborliness in a way that is recognized as equitable, and I believe that the work of such a Commission as is provided herein will do much toward sifting out spurious claims and listing the valid claims. Thus we may have a full accounting and all may know how much is rightfully due our citizens. Of course, we have heard the complaint made here today that if Mexico ever pays us anything, it will be paid in silver, which is probably true. However, I have no objections to such payments in the real money of Mexico which is also the real money of the United States. The important thing is to get fair payment for our citizens, and in order to do that a proper accounting is necessary of what is due American citizens.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, there are some here who consider this bill a very important matter. While I also consider it important, I don't know that I should oppose it very strenuously as it is a unanimous report. As a representative of the Committee on Expenditures, I could not help casting my eye over the unusual permission for seemingly extravagant expenses granted. We have here a Commission that may sit for years, with all sorts of expenditures allowed, no limitations, and we may well wonder if there will be any money left to pay anybody for their small claims. Its framers were broad-minded. Altogether too broad-minded to suit me. The Government must advance the money for expenses out of any moneys in the Treasury not yet appropriated and that should of course read "out of any money not yet borrowed." This bill ought to be somewhat amended. Commissioners ought not to be appointed without limit of tenure. This trouble of settling damages with Mexico is an old story and results have been most unsatisfactory. We may well contend it will be many years before the job is concluded.

Secondly, will they then want the Export-Import Bank to pay our nationals with our own money? This is nowadays the way to accomplish the good-neighbor policy.

I submitted in the first instance that this was a very questionable procedure. I have read extracts from the agreement of November 1938. One clause reads:

> While upholding the Government's position, we will appoint a commission to settle the damages.

It is one thing to expropriate by eminent domain the property of our own people, but should we in this country expropriate the lands or property of nationals of a foreign country we would expect a protest to be made.

It is said that acquiescence in such a matter might lead to an era of international robbery on a large scale. It must not be accepted as a principle; rather, it should be violently protested. What really is the Government's position at the moment?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield. I want the gentleman to tell me about this commission and how I can get on it.

Mr. BLOOM. Would the gentleman be interested in knowing what this $100,000 is for? I have a break-down of it if it would be enlightening to the gentleman.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, I do not care for the break-down. I can read writing. You have provided for all kinds of entertainment, drinking water, and other unusual things. The drinking water may have to have spirit preservatives in it, I suppose, but it does seem an unusual grant of power for any commission.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield, yes.

Mr. BLOOM. I do not like to take up the gentleman's time, but the gentleman has been here so long and the gentleman knows that what he has just read is the regular form of every resolution that has been brought to the floor of the House.

Mr. GIFFORD. It does run true to the form of resolution the gentleman from New York reports. He has had much experience and would leave out nothing.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. KITCHENS. Something was said about a commission that was formed in 1868, I believe. Does the gentleman know if that commission is still functioning?

Mr. GIFFORD. I would not be surprised if it was created under language similar to that used in this resolution.

Mr. BLOOM. Well, there is no appropriation made for any other commission, I will say.

Mr. GIFFORD. It would be at a very great sacrifice for any commission ever to finish the job, under this umbrella of high living and full authority.

Mr. BLOOM. Can the gentleman not trust the Secretary of State? All this money is expended under his supervision.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, I trust this Secretary of State, but I do not know who may be the next one.

Mr. BLOOM. Well, I do.

Mr. GIFFORD. But the Secretary of State has very little authority. The sky seems to be the limit under this resolution.

Therefore, representing the Committee on Expenditures of the House, I felt compelled to comment upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin: On page 2, lines 4 and 5, strike out "without reference to" and insert in lieu thereof "in compliance with."

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I could not hear the amendment, but I reserve a point of order.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield if the gentleman wants to make a point of order.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I could not hear the amendment as it was read.

The Clerk again reported the amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is self-explanatory. It strikes language from the bill which excludes employees from the provisions of the Civil Service Act and requires that those employed under the provisions of the bill be appointed in compliance with said act. I sincerely hope that those in charge of this bill will accept the amendment, and let us put into actual practice the preaching which we hear from day to day in the Well of the House and in newspaper headlines, that the Congress is in favor of the merit system.

Why is it that Members of Congress who continually prate and wax eloquent in defense of the civil-service merit system continue to support and vote for legislation which excludes the merit system and provides for a political spoils system of appointments? I certainly hope that this amendment will be accepted, in order to expedite the passage of this bill today. The New Deal proponents have told us that this bill carries out a friendly neighbor policy. This is the first New Deal friendly neighbor policy which I have seen where Uncle Sam is going to get something. Generally the New Deal friendly neighbor policies require Uncle Sam to be a Santa Claus when the friendly neighbors knock at the Treasury door. I want this bill to get over to the Senate as soon as possible before the friendly neighbor changes his mind and asks Uncle Sam to give instead of to receive.

I sincerely hope that our good-natured colleague from Texas, the neighboring State to Mexico, will rise in his place and accept this amendment and let the country know that this Congress, particularly the New Deal majority, acts as well as talks in favor of the merit system and in opposition to the spoils system which they have followed for 6 long years.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the people to be employed by this commission must understand the particular type of work it is doing. There must be an engineer and others possessing technical knowledge. As I said in the beginning, this commission has been operating for several months, and the Mexican commission has been operating for several months. We have translators, stenographers, engineers, and special people doing this kind of work; people who have had experience in doing similar work. You cannot apply to the Civil Service Commission at this time and expect to get the people qualified to do this particular kind of work—translators, legal advisers, agricultural experts, and others.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman from New York mean to stand in his place on the floor of the House and tell us that it is impossible to select qualified people under the merit system through the Civil Service Commission for these insignificant positions—insignificant when compared to the responsible positions that are filled by the civil-service system?

Mr. BLOOM. I do not say that, but I say that in the case of this particular work, where these people have been functioning for 3 months, where they are doing a highly specialized type of work, people who are trained in this work, to make such a requirement would defeat the very object we are trying to bring about by the passage of this resolution.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I shall support this amendment. This is just another example of trying to force upon the country a bill that does not contain the civil-service provisions. We know that the administration is talking in season and out of season about the merit system, about civil service, yet measure after measure after measure comes before us without any civil-service provision in it. Do you realize today that in certain services, especially the Post Office Service, there is open disregard of the civil service? For instance, especially at Christmas time people are blanketed in for special work in the Post Office Department, and they are continued long after the work is over, while people who have civil-service ratings have been given no work at all and though on the civil-service rolls have not been employed for a long period.

Mr. Chairman, I earnestly hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin will be agreed to. Let us see whether this administration means what it says when it states that it believes in the merit system. I am sick and tired of hearing the administration talk about the merit system and then have to realize that both the Executive and legislators are not willing to support the merit system. I have begun to think that we can accomplish nothing until the Republicans come into power again, then the merit system marches forward.

I am extremely glad, Mr. Chairman, that there is an opportunity for free and open discussion today upon our foreign policy. The members of the Foreign Affairs Committee have literally starved for important information from officials in the State Department and from our representatives in foreign countries regarding international affairs. Those of us who have been in Washington for years have many contacts, but it is a shortsighted policy that keeps important news from the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee. There are many new members on the committee, men of ability, men who can be very useful in solving our international problems. I rejoice that after weeks of requests for hearings such hearings will be held next week to consider so-called neutrality measures. At no time in my knowledge has the country been more interested in the protection of American people and our foreign affairs and at no time in the history of the country has the information from informed sources been so meager. [Applause.]

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 5 additional minutes in order to read a letter from a fellow citizen of Missouri which I am sure will interest every Member.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is it on this particular resolution?

Mr. SHORT. It is.

Mr. BLOOM. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment to this resolution be limited to 15 minutes, including the 10 minutes granted to the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, on October 11, 1938, I received the following letter, which I am sure will interest every Member of this body:

SHAPLEIGH'S
St. Louis, October 11, 1938.

Hon. DEWEY SHORT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR DEWEY: Some fifty-odd years ago my father, in company with other men in St. Louis, acquired a large tract of land in Old Mexico, bordering on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande River and extending back through the major portion for a distance of 2 leagues, or about 7 miles, and through the minor portion for a distance of about 1 league. In all, close to 200 miles of land bordering on the Rio Grande.

Taxes were paid regularly on this property, and the receipts are in my files.

Mexico has a law that titles cannot be held by foreigners on land within 50 leagues of the border, except by consent of the Mexican Government through its President.

About 1895, I think it was, I went to the city of Mexico and obtained such a concession from President Diaz.

Under the provisions of the Mexican agrarian law, with which you are no doubt familiar, all this Mexican land was expropriated, and we were not even allowed to pay taxes on it.

A claim has been filed upon our part with the Mexican-American Claims Commission and our claim has been proved both by our titles and by their admissions.

Now, we have had the best legal advice in all these matters. I am today in receipt of a letter from our principal legal advisor, and I feel that possibly you would be interested in getting a slant on how people in position to know feel about the way Mexico has failed to acknowledge responsibility for their actions. The letter is as follows:

"MY DEAR MR. SHAPLEIGH: You no doubt have seen the recent correspondence between Secretary Cordell Hull and the secretary of foreign relations of the Mexican Government regarding the obligation of Mexico to pay for the agricultural land of American citizens that has been confiscated by the Mexican Government. The only difficulty facing Secretary Hull is the fact that the strong stand he has taken was begun 25 years too late. Mexico has adopted the policy of sheer confiscation of all agricultural land owned by foreigners in Mexico, and since President Roosevelt has adopted his good-neighbor policy Mexico has decided boldly to announce its intentions. The good-neighbor policy of Roosevelt means to Mexicans and all Latin-American countries that they will be permitted to do what they wish to foreigners in Mexico, and particularly to Americans, and they will not be interfered with by our Government.

"Mexico does not intend to pay for the oil properties taken by violence nor for $10,000,000 worth of stolen American agricultural, oil, and coal lands. Mexico's next move will be against mining properties in Mexico owned by Americans. Mexico has not paid one cent of her debts of any kind or interest on them since the fall of General Diaz's administration. How can Mr. Hull expect Mexico to begin now?

"Mexico made an agreement with the United States in 1923 that all oil properties or products of the subsoil actually developed should remain the property of the owners of the surface. No attention has been paid by the present head of Mexico's Government to that agreement. Carranza promised to respect titles of properties held by foreigners, but one by one their promises have been repudiated, particularly since the present Government of the United States demonetized gold and reduced the value of our dollar almost 50 percent, a clear steal by our Government. So now when we find fault with Mexico for stealing the land of Americans, Mexico replies, 'You're another; we are simply following your example.' Even now our Government could protect American properties, but not by simply scolding and threatening.

"Now, until we know what policy our Government will ultimately pursue, there is no hope of getting compensation for the lands belonging to yourself and associates that have been confiscated by Mexico. There is one good thing about it and that is that our claim has been filed and proved both by our titles and by their admissions, and if Hull succeeds in making any arrangement with Mexico to pay for them, we will be in position to take advantage of it."

I do not know if there is anything you can do in this situation, but I am sure at least you will be glad to have the information I have given you above.

Very truly yours,

A. L. SHAPLEIGH.

P. S.—Our claim amounts to approximately $1,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure that many Members of this House know Mr. Shapleigh, who is the head of the Shapleigh Hardware Co., a man of unimpeachable integrity, of an honest character, who has told us the true story of this particular situation as it affects him and some of his colleagues in the city of St. Louis, in my State.

I, along with practically every other Member of this House, believe in the intent of this joint resolution, but the thing I regret about it is the provision appearing at the bottom of page 2 and the top of page 3, reading:

Provided, That any expenditures from the amount herein authorized to be appropriated shall become a first charge upon any moneys received from the Government of Mexico in settlement of the respective claims, and the amount of such expenditures shall be deducted from the first payment by the Mexican Government and deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

In other words, if these claimants, these Americans, who have invested their own good money down in Mexico in all good faith and have developed these properties only to have them seized unlawfully by the Mexican Government, violating the sanctity of contract and repudiating solemnity of obligations, if they are to lose these lands and on top of that be required to pay the expenses of this Commission and the cost of its operations, which give promise of being interminable, there being no limitation put upon them, how long they shall sit or upon the amount of money they shall spend, it simply means that a very small proportion of the money collected will get back to these claimants. I shall vote for the joint resolution in the hope that American citizens will receive something approximating justice, but I shall be surprised if enough money is collected from the present Mexican Government to pay the expenses of the proposed commission. Of course, a little is better than nothing.

I heartily concur in the opinion expressed by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK]. We all believe in the good neighbor policy, but, Mr. Chairman, it is not playing the good neighbor to surrender your rights without registering a protest; it is not being a good neighbor and it is a very unwise policy to sanction wrongdoing, and certainly we should demand for ourselves that which we are willing to grant unto others. I love our friends to the south, but I want to say that we have pursued a weak, vacillating, mollycoddle policy so far as the expropriation of these lands by Mexico is concerned. Instead of demanding justice we sanction injustice; instead of standing for law and order we invite anarchy and disaster.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Does the gentleman know that the provision herein contained with reference to deducting the cost involved in collecting this money is the usual, customary clause? In other words, the Government of the United States goes out and makes this agreement and collects the money. The expenses come out of the claims. That has been the rule heretofore in all other similar matters. It is not unusual. It is the custom.

Mr. SHORT. That is news to me.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The gentleman has not studied these matters then.

Mr. SHORT. We warn Americans who invest their money in any country that this Government is not going to collect it for them.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The United States Government is not a collection agency for Americans who go abroad and make investment. All it can do is try to get the money back, and I think the expenses should be paid by the people who took the risk. The Government has been very generous with these people.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLOOM. When this bill was being considered by the committee, at no time was there any objection so far as civil-service employees are concerned or so far as the amount of money to be expended was concerned. The bill was reported by the committee unanimously. I have here a list of the total to be expended for the collection of these claims. On May 31 the Government of the United States will receive $1,000,000. The expenses will be deducted from that, and it will not amount to more than that, because I have a statement showing the total expenses, which I would like to put in the RECORD, and I will read it to the gentleman if he wants to hear it.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the members of this commission are taken from the regular personnel of the State Department and receive no additional salary from the commission. The expenses shown include communications, $2,000; rent, supplies, office, and so forth, traveling, per diem, and everything else, totaling $100,000. This is taken out of the $1,000,000.

I have not heard an argument made against this bill today. Everyone has simply presented abstract theories. If this plan is not acceptable, I would like to have someone suggest to this committee what plan can be put forth which will give to these claimants the money that will be due them after the Joint Committee from Mexico and the United States has arrived at a settlement.

What plan can be formulated that will take the place of this plan? How are these people going to get their money in any other way but through this method? Is it going to help matters for Members to stand on the floor of the House here and call the Mexican Government and the people of Mexico various names? I do not see how you are going to help this situation or encourage trade with foreign governments by so doing. I would like to have an answer to that.

Mr. SHORT. I may say that many people in this country are calling everybody bad names. I do not think we should.

As much as I believe in the civil service, I believe that because of the peculiar nature of this problem it is necessary to have the commission free to take along whatever help it wants, regardless of the civil service. Let me say to the gentleman that I favor the intent and purpose of this resolution; however, I hope and pray that whoever composes this commission, when they get down to Mexico, will insist upon our American rights and try to collect somewhere near the amount of money that American people have invested down there. It is time Uncle Sam showed a little backbone and not play the international "boob" forever. As Will Rogers once said, "We never lost a war, but we never won a treaty." Conferences are bad things for Americans.

Mr. BLOOM. Suppose the gentleman and I go down there?

Mr. SHORT. I think it would be a very lovely trip. Mexico is an enchanting country, but I do not like the idea of the other fellow having to pay my expenses.

Mr. McGRANERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McGRANERY. My good friend, the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], seems concerned about his constituent who has had a claim exsting since 1895. Is it not a fact there have been several Republican administrations in control of the Government since that time, but this is the first time a real friendly effort has been made to conciliate our differences with the Mexican Government?

Mr. SHORT. The gentleman is introducing politics into the discussion now. We have had Republican administrations since that time, but this is the first time that lands have been expropriated and our property seized.

Mr. McGRANERY. I understood the gentleman to say his constituent's land was expropriated in 1895.

Mr. HOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOOK. I think the gentleman has made a very serious statement here this afternoon. Is it reasonable to deduce from his statement that he would suggest the United States should declare war and send an army down there?

Mr. SHORT. You Democrats during the Wilson administration tried that once without any great success.

Mr. HOOK. I am just asking whether that is what you intend to do?

Mr. BLOOM. He says "no."

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOSER. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], since he has suggested that he himself and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] go to Mexico on this commission, whether or not by way of appeasement he would not include our genial friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts, because the gentleman from Massachusetts is the one who has been asking how he could go along on that commission.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, it was understood that I did intend to invite especially the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MOSER. I am pleased the gentleman has not slighted him.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the amendment of Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 32, noes 40.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HARTER of Ohio, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 114) authorizing appropriation for expenses of a representative of the United States and of his assistants, and for one-half of the joint expenses of this Government and the Government of Mexico, in giving effect to the agreement of November 9–12, 1938, between the two Governments providing for the settlement of American claims for damages resulting from expropriations of agrarian properties since August 30, 1927, pursuant to House resolution 148, he reported the same back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that an identical Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 46) may be considered in lieu of the House joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the joint resolution?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am opposed to it with the spoils-system provision in it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must qualify in opposition.

The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin moves that the pending resolution be recommitted to the committee with instructions to report it back forthwith with an amendment, as follows: "Page 2, lines 4 and 5, strike out 'without reference to' and insert 'in compliance with.'"

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 31, noes 49.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 114) was laid on the table.

J. D. WARLICK

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 125 of the Private Calendar that was called today, the bill H. R. 3784, for the relief of the estate of J. D. Warlick.

Mr. Speaker, when this bill was called on the calendar the gentlemen from Tennesseee [Mr. BYRNS and Mr. GORE] were sitting over here, and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE] was back of us. When the bill was called, as we understood, no one objected except the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO], who has been very patient and splendidly courteous in this matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Who is "we"?

Mr. PATRICK. I and those who were present regarded the bill as having passed. I started to wire home that the bill was passed but decided first to consult the reporters. The reporters found there had been another objection, and it was stated that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] had objected. I went to the gentleman from Tennessee and was told that he did not object. It developed that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRANT] had been recorded by two of the reporters as having objected. I went to the gentleman from Indiana, and he said he did not object, but both the reporters had him so marked on their records. I wish to bring the matter up at this time in order to clear up the situation. All I wish is to get the record clear if there has been an error, and if there has been an error it can be corrected.

This is a case in which an old gentleman from Alabama was killed when a C. C. C. ambulance ran over him. We believe this is a case in which there is clear civil liability, although the driver of the C. C. C. truck was not held criminally. He had a trial, but as far as I can get the facts, no effort was made to put him in jail for the balance of his days, whether that should have happened to him or not. It happened that he was in the hands of Democrats—he was a C. C. C. truck driver—and was not put in jail. Anyway, this is a very serious case, and it has been hanging fire since 1937, when I believe the bill was first introduced. We had hoped under what looked to us like undisputed facts that the bill would go through and not be objected to.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Just how is the gentleman from Alabama getting time to speak, and what is his request?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Alabama, after making the preliminary statement he has made, desired to ask unanimous consent, under the circumstances stated by him, for the present consideration of a bill which was on today's Private Calendar.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman been granted time to speak?

The SPEAKER. No. The gentleman was recognized by the Chair to submit a request.

Mr. PATRICK. I am taking a lot of time, I will admit, to submit a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 125, on the Private Calendar, the bill H. R. 3784, for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill referred to by him, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Private Calendar No. 125 (H. R. 3784), a bill for the relief of the estate of J. D. Warlick.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this calendar has been called and the record apparently shows that there were two objections. I am not going to permit a return to the calendar or have the record corrected at this time. The men who are in charge of this calendar have gone to their offices and are not here to express for themselves just what their attitude may be. Therefore I would suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that he submit his request tomorrow morning, when there will be an opportunity for the objectors to be present.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take any more time than is absolutely necessary.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the gentleman wants to go back and have this bill reconsidered. The gentleman is not objecting to what is in the RECORD.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I understand the gentleman wants to go back and have the bill reconsidered, but I cannot permit that until the regular objectors are on the floor and in position to state whether they are willing to agree to this or not.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Alabama temporarily withdraw his request under the circumstances stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. PATRICK. Yes, Mr. Speaker; I withdraw the request.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who spoke on the bill we have had under consideration this afternoon may have 5 calendar days within which to extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a compilation and statement by John Clark, secretary-treasurer of the Great Falls Mill and Smeltermen Union, of Great Falls, Mont., advocating the use of copper, a 100-percent American product, on Government projects, and particularly on Rural Electrification Administration projects.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter I received from the master of the Idaho State Grange and my reply thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANDIS and Mr. SHORT asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point and to include some excerpts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, to enlighten my colleagues who are wielding the ill-clothed, ill-housed, and ill-fed as a weapon for public sympathy and appeal in debate on this floor, to be recorded and sent home as evidence of their humanitarianism and incidentally a bid for votes, it is my desire to say that I have qualified in all three groups.

My first experience was in a Grover Cleveland panic, when I was stranded in Boston and forced to subsist on one plate of beans a day, which cost me a dime. I am also familiar with conditions among the laboring groups, having been a sailor and longshoreman and a member of both unions.

I am not making this statement as a fractional history of my life, but instead as a reminder to those who cry for the "have-nots," that I, having been one of the ill-housed, ill-clothed, and ill-fed, can shed larger and more realistic tears because of my more intimate experience, if we must resort to such theatricals.

For 6 years the New Deal has drenched the public with tears and many of us feel so badly now that we will soon begin to cry with the New Dealers for the greater glory of socialism and destruction of constitutional government. It is hard to believe that so many hypocrites can lead a party for 6 years without being discovered.

Twenty-six years of my life as a doctor of medicine has allowed me a more intimate acquaintanceship with people who lack many comforts, yet these men and women did not complain except when they were denied work. With rare exceptions, these men and women are willing to make their own way in life without charity or special aid from Congress or anyone else. They are not beggars. They are instead real, patriotic American citizens, much more sincere than many Members of Congress who are continually holding them up as objects of charity. These unfortunate people we are quibbling about on the floor of this House are unemployed because they cannot obtain work. It is not their fault. It is instead the fault of Congress for having allowed such a condition to come about.

It is well for the Members of Congress to bear in mind that we will be held responsible and we are responsible for the chaotic state we find ourselves in today. These unemployed people I speak of are an integral part of our Nation's industrial structure, and must be returned to it so they can be employed in private enterprises of which they are a part. It is the only way in which we can regain prosperity and security.

The New Deal Members in Congress who favor greater Federal control, more taxes, more regulation, more restriction upon industry, more meddling in business, and more laws, are responsible for the present industrial stagnation which like an evil disease is destroying our Nation today, and the same party must, therefore, be held accountable for the liquidation of tomorrow.

These new dealers have been chasing the end of the rainbow for 7 years, trying to find the pot of recovery, only to meet with the same success that others have when they look for the pot of gold. For the past 7 years the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board and others have primed and pumped and given shots in the arm to revive business, only with nearly fatal results, because business is practically dead.

The New Deal and its leaders have at no time shown the slightest familiarity with sound business principles. Our factories are working today only because of the export of machinery and war materials, and it is my opinion that if peace is consummated in Europe, internal strife will begin here. No one will deny that there is greater unemployment when factories are closed, and such idleness can bring about only dissension and strife.

Along this line of thought we may also include our abnormal agricultural program, not only in its regulation at home but also in our trade pacts which are dealing the final destructive blows to the whole farm industry. Evidence of this may be found in our surplus farm commodities, such as cotton, wheat, and other staple farm products. These surpluses are bound to accumulate year by year until the present trade policy is changed. This condition can no longer be corrected by Congress, because it has delegated such power to the State Department. The Secretary of State seems to be more interested in developing the welfare of foreign agriculture than he is in looking after the welfare of the farmers in the United States.

The President in his tariff letter appears to be apprehensive about tariffs which may interfere with trade agreements, and he reminds the chairman of the committee:

> When, for example, our exports of automobiles to Brazil under a trade-agreement concession increase, as they have done by $4,500,000,000 (?), there is more purchasing power available for our workers to buy meat, butter, milk, eggs, fruits, and vegetables.

The President, however, conveniently forgets that Swift, Armour, Libby, and other American meat packers are shipping meat in from South America to us at the expense of our own stockmen. He also forgets that the cans used in the packing of such meat are also manufactured in Argentina, Brazil, and other South American Republics at the expense of American labor.

He further forgets that butter, eggs, fruit, and vegetables are also imported into the United States from foreign countries, denying to our own farmers the opportunity to supply our own people with food. The Secretary of State and the President conveniently fail to inform the public that foreign markets have been lost to American agriculture and that our export trade consists mainly of automobiles, airplanes, machinery, war materials, and metals. The same distinguished gentlemen further fail to inform the American public that when these commodities are no longer required by foreign nations all markets will be denied to the American producer, with the ultimate and final collapse of our total industrial structure. When this happens we may develop a very unfavorable trade balance, which will deplete our Treasury of gold much more rapidly than it came in. If this should happen, our own people, having already been deprived of gold as security and money, will become victims of another New Deal colossal blunder; that is, the Gold Reserve Act of 1934. No; nothing is said about the eventual outcome of these foolhardy experiments. They will, instead, descend upon our people at some future date in an avalanche which will bury our Nation in poverty and suffering. In the midst of all this the New Deal majority in Congress sits idly by and plays its fiddles to amuse the leaders in the Federal Government.

The New Deal is guilty of another strange activity which the people should not forget. It is the socialistic philosophy which exists from the highest to the lowest, a philosophy which is the foundation of all socialistic governments such as those in Europe. It is the same philosophy which dominates those who follow the President and the administration, instead of the Constitution of the United States. It is a curse which is going to destroy our Nation if each State does not immediately resume its sovereign power and correct the Federal Government. Nothing can be expected from Congress, because it is not composed of statesmen but is instead made up mainly of incompetent followers tagging behind inexperienced and wabbling New Deal leaders.

Much was said on Thursday and Friday of a very significant meaning, something to which our people should give serious consideration for the future welfare of the United States. I shall take the liberty to discuss the President's article first. He said: "All that needs to be done in the future is to conserve the soil of the South," and he asserted that much remained to be done to "get the South out of hock to the North."

This in my opinion is a very queer remark to come from the President of the United States. No one has denied the South its right to conserve the soil, or the right to engage in the same business as the North. This statement is no more than a childish slap at the North to curry favor in the South.

Further, declaring that when he first came to Warm Springs nearly 16 years ago he had to buy milk and cream, apples, meat, and shoes that originated in the North and West, he went on to say there "wasn't very much change in that system of economy until about 6 years ago. It was then we began to ask ourselves, Why is all this necessary?"

This is another strange remark because certain commodities are indigenous to the South as others are to the North. Most all of us poor folks know that we cannot raise oranges, lemons, and other semitropical fruit in the North, and the same people in the South know that they cannot produce the same quality of beef, apples, wheat, and other farm products in the South. For this reason, an exchange takes place between the North and the South which furnishes employment to our transportation systems—for the general welfare of all the States.

In referring to shoes, the President neglected to inform the people in the South that many shoe factories in the North are idle because we are importing shoes from Europe—destructive to both North and South.

I quote again:

> Balanced economy. I think that we have done more in those 6 years than in the previous 60 years all through these Southern States to make them self-supporting, to give them a balanced economy that will spell a higher wage scale, a greater purchasing power, and a more abundant life than they have had in all their history.

This statement may be right because the New Deal has destroyed in the last 6 years the wonderful business structure and prosperity that we had accumulated in the last 144 years. I would like to know, as a matter of general interest, how many employees in the Federal Government have been or are at the present time engaged in productive private industry, operated with their own capital. I hold in profound respect anyone who is now operating private industry and able to meet a weekly pay roll. The American people should ask themselves this question because it means so much to our future welfare.

The now popular phrases of "balanced economy," "consuming power," "increased consumption," "velocity of money," and many other vacuolated phrases are nothing but a mass of empty words—the credo of the New Deal.

"Students' responsibility." The President said the students had a great responsibility to devise "new methods, new means—experiments, if you like—in order to improve the conditions during your own lifetime." I can only say in criticism of this statement that professors and students ran Mr. Wilson's administration, which led us into a war and in the end left us with a dollar worth 64 cents and a national debt of $28,000,000,000.

Students and professors predominate in the present administration, and their ability is clearly demonstrated in the fact that we have a national debt of over $40,000,000,000, valueless currency, stagnant industry, paralyzed agriculture, broken-down and bankrupt railroad and transportation systems. We have dissension in labor, meddling in business, invasion of State rights, destructive taxation, and a nation saturated and infiltrated with socialism and communism to the point where constitutional government is no longer recognized; and, to conclude, our distinguished President says:

> I believe this country is going somewhere, but it must depend for its future progress and prosperity very largely on the younger generation, the people under 30, the people who have got American ideals and are not afraid of trying new things.

This paragraph is astonishing because it does not recognize the value of industry, commerce, business, and labor as a factor in producing national prosperity. The President leaves it up to the people under 30 years, who are entirely unfamiliar with the operation of business, like those who are now leading the New Deal.

The President, however, makes one statement: "I believe this country is going somewhere," and in my opinion this is very pertinent, because we are going toward destruction so fast that it will take the Army and the Navy to control the social structure under a state of martial law to prevent bloodshed on the final day of liquidation.

Before discussing more important problems it is my desire to call the Members' attention to other things which have transpired in the last 2 days. According to information in the newspapers, considerable discussion arose on the Senate side from statements made by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], when he evidently reaffirmed his belief in the Constitution of the United States. This would be of little interest except for its relation to a statement made by the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]:

> I want to say in conclusion to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], for the integrity of whose view I have a very high regard, that in my personal opinion the Senator belongs to an old day in his country. His opinions have ceased to be the current opinions of his country. He has an attitude toward public questions that was appropriate to a certain era in the country's development, and I never saw a man who in his heart entertained those views more honestly or expressed them more ably than does the Senator from South Carolina. There may be temporary occasions of short duration when the pendulum will swing toward the Senator's point of view, but I entertain the belief that it will never actually get there, and that when it approaches that point it will not stay there long because of the complexity of our country.
> The only effective way by which the numerous economic forces which play upon our section can be brought into anything like harmony with the remainder of the country is through the Federal system, which is a unit of economy, and to assist us as an integral part of the whole for the legitimate benefit of the whole. * * *
> My election is over for 6 years, just like the Senator's election. He was elected against the administration. I was elected for it. Let posterity determine which one was the wiser appeal that was made.

Personally I am not interested in these statements except in relation to the New Deal philosophy. I agree with the able Senator from South Carolina and believe as he does in constitutional government. I shall even go a little further than that and predict that if we do not return to it our end is not far off.

It will not take 6 years to find out who is right and who is wrong, because I anticipate a climax sooner than that. I am, however, under the impression that all Members of Congress and the President have assumed an obligation "to preserve, to protect, and to defend the Constitution of the United States." In view of this, I cannot understand how anyone can violate this solemn obligation.

The 48 States in our Union must for the safety and for the perpetuation of the United States meet upon a common ground and it is the Constitution of the United States. If a State elects a Representative to Congress to follow the New Deal or the Executive instead of the Constitution, such State is not keeping faith with the remaining 47 States. I realize constitutional government is hanging in the balance, but I do not believe it can be disregarded with the approval of the majority of our people.

We, the Members of Congress, should always bear in mind that we are elected as representatives of the people and guardians of their liberty and rights. When we fail in this protection we have betrayed our trust. Partition of public property, which is now prevalent in Congress, can only end in complete destruction of the Government. If Congress continues in this unsound procedure, our end will not be different from that of other governments which have pursued the same course. The evidence of our folly will be found in the ruins left where we departed from sound fundamental principles.

This strange socialistic philosophy may be found in both Houses, and is a factor in our Government. It is not my intention to criticize any Member for such opinions, even though I deny the right of tolerance of such ideas in our Government.

I shall in future discussions express my viewpoint in the hope that the States and the people will act in their own interest.

On March 30 and 31, 1939, we discussed the emergency relief appropriation of $150,000,000. I supported the full amount of this appropriation—not because I believe the W. P. A. is sound or economical, for it is neither. I voted for this appropriation because our unemployed people are not in any sense responsible for national unemployment. Congress alone is responsible for that in its failure to support business. I realize we cannot continue to appropriate money. Neither can we continue to restrict and destroy operation of sound business without causing more unemployment, and that will bring about a decrease in Federal income and a proportionate increase in our national debt, with the ultimate result that we will be bankrupt.

My greatest fear, however, is in the failure of the majority to recognize the threatening danger and to institute proper corrective measures before the collapse. However, the responsibility rests upon the New Deal, and it must accept the blame.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, Wednesday, after the previous special orders, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

RESIGNATION

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation, which was read:

APRIL 3, 1939.

Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington. D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I herewith tender my resignation as a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

I have enjoyed this association very much indeed, and I am deeply grateful to you for appointing me to such a high and dignified service.

As I am sure you know, I am resigning only because of the fact that I am leaving the House of Representatives.

With kindest regards, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou eternal Christ of God, from Olivet to Calvary in lonely pomp ride on; in the hush about the cross we wait for Thee; may Thy love and forgiveness lay compulsions on our souls. Anthems will soon be changed into dirges, the sun unstreaked by midnight will die at midday. Oh, may we not remain in the desperate silence untouched and unmoved; help us to see deeper and deeper into that sacrificial love which is the heart of all. Be Thou the climax of our hopes, the height of our aspirations, and the ideal of all we would like to be. In the dearth of our prayers, in the paralysis of our praise, in the valley of our doubts, Oh, read our hearts; let the tidings of Thy peace come from the tempest's approaching storm; we beseech Thee to fill the void places in our breasts. Graciously pity all who suffer from that ingratitude which freezes the emotions of the heart and all who have been wounded by some tragic sorrow. Be with all, that we may be living disciples of Jesus and minstrels of God—bearing the cross and sharing the redeeming love and power of the Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 3790. An act relating to the taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 964) entitled "An act creating the Arkansas-Mississippi Bridge Commission; defining the authority, power, and duties of said commission; and authorizing said commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Friar Point, Miss., and Helena, Ark., and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mrs. CARAWAY, Mr. OVERTON, and Mr. VANDENBERG to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

W. P. A. INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 152) from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 152

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation and study authorized by House Resolution 130 of the present Congress, incurred by the Committee on Appropriations, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $25,000, including expenditures for the employment of clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee or subcommittee thereof conducting such investigation and study or any part thereof, signed by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. The official stenographers to committees may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia, if not otherwise officially engaged.

SEC. 3. The heads of the executive departments and other executive agencies are requested to detail personnel temporarily to assist the committee or subcommittee upon request of the chairman thereof.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA MILK INVESTIGATION

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further privileged resolution (H. Res. 146) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 146

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation and study authorized by House Resolution 113, incurred by the Committee on the District of Columbia, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $10,000, including expenditures for the employment of experts, clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee or any subcommittee thereof conducting such investigation and study or any part thereof, signed by the chairman of the committee and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. That the official committee reporters may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia, if not otherwise officially engaged.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out in line 4 the figures "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$2,500."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRINTING OF HEARINGS BEFORE NATIONAL ECONOMIC COMMITTEE

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing I report back favorably (Rept. No. 377) a concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 3), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 3

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act approved March 1, 1907, the Temporary National Economic Committee of the Congress be, and is hereby, empowered to procure the printing of 5,000 additional copies of part 1 and each subsequent part of the hearings held before the said committee, who are directed by Public Resolution No. 113, approved June 16, 1938, to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the concentration of economic power in, and financial control over, production and distribution of goods and services.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter received from Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a statement which I made before the Ways and Means Committee on the subject of pensions for the aged.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by inserting a speech made by Hon. J. Roy Jones, commissioner of agriculture, before the Carolina Warehouse Association on March 30.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a letter from the Right Reverend Monsignor Thomas J. O'Dwyer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein some documents from the Legislature of Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by Dr. Fechner, Director of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday of next week, after the disposal of the legislative business of the day, I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INVESTIGATING COMMITTEES OF CONGRESS

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to call attention to the methods used by one of the investigating committees of this Congress. A wire received from California was inserted in the RECORD yesterday. I ask that all Members of this House who believe in fair play and the sacred right of American citizens to a fair hearing on charges made against them read this telegram. It will be found on pages 3761–3762 of the COGRESSIONAL RECORD. I further submit that if the California farmers ever bow their heads to the despotic rule of one man, that man will be a citizen of the United States and not a foreign trouble maker.

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] is recognized for 1 hour. [Applause.]

SERVICE IN THE HOUSE

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, in looking through the Congressional Directory yesterday I found that of the 102 men who were elected to the Sixty-seventh Congress only 3 have served continuously since that time: The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], and myself. My remarks, naturally, will be somewhat reminiscent and in the minds of most of the Members largely historical. It may be of interest to the Members to know how I happened to come to the American Congress.

In 1920 my district was represented by a Republican, and in the years prior to that time it had been represented by a Republican more than half of the time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Maryland was the only Democrat who defeated a sitting Republican for Congress that year; so he has that to his credit.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I thank the gentleman.

There was no demand for the Democratic nomination as it was conceded that the country and, of course that district, would go Republican. I had been in the very active practice of law for 19 years and felt that I saw an opportunity to enter into a service which would be of great interest to me, of great service to me, and I hoped of service to the country. The consequence is that the American Congress has been burdened with my presence for the last 18 years. I am now beginning my tenth term.

It is not an easy thing to be wrenched away from associations that have existed so long and that have always been so satisfactory and so kindly. As I think of the men and the women in the Congress I know, there is no one, there is no Member of Congress with whom I am acquainted, that I would not be glad to trust with the most sacred affairs of my own life or of the life of my family after I pass away. This applies equally, of course, to both sides of this House.

When I came here Mr. Claude Kitchin was the minority leader. He sent for me and called my attention to the fact that my colleague from Mississippi has mentioned, that I was the only Democrat in the United States who was elected in 1920 to succeed a Republican who was running to succeed himself, and he said I could have any committee I preferred. I had for many years studied the monetary situation of the country and of the world. I immediately told him that I would be very happy if I could become a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. He was kind enough to see that I obtained an assignment on that committee, and it has certainly been a very happy one both in its associations and in the tremendously important matters which have engaged its attention.

Before I discuss some of the proposed legislation that I have attempted to advance let me call especial attention to a piece of legislation which was actually accomplished.

My colleague on the Committee of Banking and Currency, the present chairman of the committee, had for 15 years been continuously introducing a bill providing for the insurance of bank deposits. Conditions were such that it had always been impossible to get anywhere with that legislation; but in 1933 the conditions which existed, the closing of the banks, the demoralization of credit, seemed to give that proposed legislation an opportunity; and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] called his colleagues together to arm and fight that battle. We know that Federal deposit insurance is now a matter of history. Temporary legislation was passed in 1933, and the permanent legislation in 1935. That legislation could not have been passed without the leadership of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL]; I could not have done it. Whether he could have done it without me I am not absolutely certain, but it certainly could not have been done without his leadership. And there is another distinguished Member of this House who should be especially mentioned in connection with that piece of legislation which has meant so much to the country for all these years. That year was the first that the Democratic Party had a steering committee, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] was the chairman of the steering committee that year, the dark days of the proposed legislation when every possible political device was needed in order to encourage it and to help carry it through.

I went to see the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER], and I told him that we needed the assistance of the steering committee of the Democratic Party. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] paid me one of the highest compliments I ever had paid me in my life. He simply asked me the question: "Is it the right thing to do?" My answer, of course, was: "It is, in my judgment." Under his leadership the steering committee of the Democratic Party performed yeoman service, a tremendous service, in the passage of that legislation. The citizens of every State in the Union have been benefited by it, and I know that my friends from New Jersey will be especially anxious to join in my commendation of this measure, because that great State has been a particular beneficiary of that legislation very recently.

In 1922 I introduced a bill providing for a stable value for money. Other bills of like character had been introduced in the past, but in 1922 the first hearing in the history of any national assembly in any civilized country in the world was held in the Committee on Banking and Currency on that bill. Other hearings were held in 1924, and in 1926 we had been enabled to obtain the interest of a Republican Member, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG]. We were in the minority, of course, and we were glad to get the cooperation of the majority side in that year to take hold of this proposed legislation. These hearings were continued for several years.

In 1932 a bill introduced by me providing for stabilization of the currency passed the House by a vote of 289 to 60; but when it got over to the Senate a substitute, which was meaningless, was offered, and the legislation did not become law. Since that time many distinguished Members of this House have not only offered but have pressed at hearings proposed legislation having a similar purpose, as you all know.

Mr. Speaker, no specific legislation of the indicated kind which any Member of Congress has proposed has become law. We have a right to hope and we have a right to believe that the tremendous educational influence of the hearings on all these bills have had a profound effect in educating the American people on the proper application and on the legitimate use of the circulating medium of the country.

On June 1, 1936, I spoke in the House on this subject. This speech begins on page 8624 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 1, 1936. In this speech I undertook to collect 19 remedial monetary measures which had been passed and to discuss in section 20 the value of the various pieces of emergency legislation which had been passed in addition to the monetary legislation.

Before I leave I want to express a very definite opinion reached after the very best thought I have on the future of the democratic method. As time goes by, as trouble in Europe increases, as totalitarian governments seem to gradually rise in ascendancy, I seem to become more convinced that the democratic method will forever survive. [Applause.]

In the New York Times Magazine of a few Sundays ago there appeared an article by David S. Muzzey, professor of American history, Columbia University, in which the following statement is made:

> Moreover, no country enjoying a fair amount of economic prosperity and security has given itself over to the dictators. They are the product of misery, jealousy, bankruptcy, and desperation—adventurers whom civil disorder and social confusion have thrown to the top to strut for a brief time as heaven-sent deliverers. If history has any lesson at all, it is that their day will be short. Even wise Thales, more than 25 centuries ago, declared that one sight the world would never see was "a tyrant growing old."
> Napoleon, with more political and military genius in his little finger than the "sawdust Caesars" of today have in their whole bodies, lasted about 20 years. When the first cracks appeared in the edifice of despotism which Napoleon had raised, the people from Spain to Russia rose to demolish that edifice and send its architect to die in exile on the barren island of St. Helena. Drunk with power which breeds ambition for more power, he had dared to challenge the historic process of the emergence of political, religious, and economic liberty. For all his great gifts, he failed. And are we to believe that his feeble imitators, fighting with the noble weapons of purges, persecutions, confiscations, concentration camps, and castor oil, will succeed where he failed?

Nor do I share in any manner or to any extent the fears of great bodies of our people in this country that the United States is in danger of any sort of dictatorship, is in danger of any sort of bankruptcy, is in danger of any sort of failure in its credit, is in any danger of inflation, or is in danger of any condition which is not better than the condition which has existed in this country since 1932.

My views on what should be done are embodied in a bill, H. R. 5520, this Congress, in support of which I made a speech in this House on January 12, 1937, also a speech made by me in this House on June 8, 1937, and in a statement made by me before the Committee on Banking and Currency on July 8,

As I indicated a few minutes ago, I do not share the fears of those who believe that the social legislation which this Government has engaged in since 1933 is inimical to the public interest. On the contrary, I believe it is a sounder policy than any other now suggested to the public in a politically broad way. Some of the suggestions which have been made and which are being made, suggestions that we arbitrarily balance the Budget regardless of the country's condition, suggestions that we reduce relief expenditures, suggestions that we retard the progress of the W. P. A. and the P. W. A., are in my judgment demonstrably contrary to the public interest, and I hope to be able to demonstrate this within the time allotted me.

The habit of mind which began in this country on the 4th of March 1921 and existed until the 4th of March 1933 and which resulted in economic collapse is the same as that which is continually complaining about the method of the present administration.

Mr. Speaker, New England has always been considered the most conservative part of the United States, and when I use the word "conservative" or when I use the word "liberal" I use them in their very vague political sense, because everyone ought to be a conservative and everyone ought to be a liberal, but even New England is rapidly emerging from that school of thought which says, "I am rich in power; I represent interests which have a commanding influence in Washington, and when I get into financial trouble I propose to go to Washington to get relief out of the Public Treasury, and after I have obtained my relief the Public Treasury shall be closed to every other element of society." I say even New England is fast emerging from such a school of thought as that.

I have in my hand a book called An Economic Program for American Democracy, by seven Harvard and Tufts economists: Richard V. Gilbert, George H. Hildebrand, Jr., Arthur W. Stuart, Maxine Yaple Sweezy, Paul M. Sweezy, Lorie Tarshis, and John D. Wilson.

When I read this book and when I considered the vast gap between the thinking involved in this book and the thinking which was common in the Northeast some 30 or 40 years ago I recalled the lines of the Harvard song:

> Fair Harvard! Thy sons to thy jubilee throng,
> And with blessings surrender thee o'er,
> By these festival rites, from the days that are past,
> To the days that are waiting before.

I read beginning on page 24, and I wish every Member of the House could read this little book:

One of the lessons of the past 5 years has been the striking demonstration of the efficacy of public spending in promoting national well-being. Viewed merely in terms of the direct objects of expenditure—the provision of relief and temporary jobs to the unemployed, benefit payments to farmers, the development of useful public projects, and the restoration of the Nation's financial structure to solvency—the Federal Government's program of increased expenditures has been of inestimable social benefit. But these direct gains, important though they were, were less significant than the secondary effects of deficit spending in producing a marked expansion of general industrial activity and private employment. On the basis of a careful study of Government receipts and disbursements, it has been computed that the net expenditures of the Federal Government tending directly to expand the Nation's income averaged $3,000,000,000 a year from the middle of 1933 to the middle of 1936, as compared with an annual average of only $1,300,000,000 in the preceding 3½ years. By the latter part of 1936 the national income had reached a level equivalent to about $70,000,000,000 per annum as compared with $41,000,000,000 in 1932–33; both the physical output of mines and factories and the average prices received by farmers for their produce had more than doubled; and some 8,000,000, more workers were employed in private jobs than at the depth of the depression.

From 1932 to 1937, while the Federal debt was increasing by $15,500,000,000, the State and local governments actually reduced their debt slightly, and the net increase in total corporate debt was probably not more than $1,000,000,000. Taking $16,000,000,000 as a rough estimate of the increase in debt from 1932 through 1937, we get an annual average increase of $3,200,000,000.

The increase in the national debt from 1932 to 1937, a period of 5 years, on an average was $3,200,000,000.

This must be compared with the annual average increase of over $6,000,000,000 in the prosperous decade of the twenties.

Under the previous administration, from 1921 to 1929, the debt increased from $75,000,000,000 to $126,000,000,000—that is public and private debt—an average of $6,000,000,000 a year from 1921 to 1929, whereas during this period which is so complained of by those who are opposed to the administration, the annual increase has been less than half, that is, less than $3,200,000,000.

Clearly the total debt, corporate and public, has not increased by an excessive amount since 1932, if the experience of former years is taken as a basis of comparison.

Mr. Speaker, the expression "national debt" is found in every newspaper and in every magazine in the United States in every issue, and it is complained about in the face of the fact that we have no national debt. What does Austria mean by a national debt? Austria cannot produce enough to feed and clothe and house and transport its own people. Austria is compelled to get a large part of its food and clothing and housing from outside the country. Therefore, it has to borrow from outside the country and must have a low standard of living in order to have something left of its own manufactured products to pay this outside debt. That is a national debt. It is a national debt when you owe what you owe outside of your country. But when you owe what you owe inside of your country it is not a national debt.

A distinguished United States Senator complained the other day that every national in the United States had a mortgage around his neck of $430. I say to him that not one dollar of that money is owed outside of the confines of the United States and therefore the same individuals who are mortgagors in the amount of $430 apiece are also mortgagees. One obligation absolutely cancels the other. Then talk to me about an increased national debt, when everything we are using this money for is to save food and clothing and housing and transportation and what not which would otherwise be wasted.

What is better, to have a $40,000,000,000 income in 1933 and taxes collected amounting to just a little over $2,000,000,000, or an income in 1937 of $70,000,000,000, an increase of $30,000,000,000, and an increase in taxes to $6,000,000,000? Why, when the national debt was half as much as it is now, in 1932, Government bonds were selling at 83. Now, with a national debt of $39,000,000,000, Government bonds are selling at 102. Why is that? It is because of the tremendously increased national production. For every dollar we put into circulation we have received in actual production of wanted goods and services of over five times as much.

It has been conservatively estimated that if we were able to distribute all the wanted goods and services that we can produce; in other words, if our people had adequate buying power, we could produce in this country $120,000,000,000 worth of consumers' goods and capital goods a year. Let us assume that in order to do this we have to increase the national debt—that is, the so-called national debt, because we do not have any national debt—suppose we have to increase the borrowing in this country and have to borrow $1 to increase the national production and distribute $5. Is that a business proposition or is it not?

Not long ago Collier's Weekly published an editorial attempting to answer this argument, and the answer was this. They said:

That is true, the debt is owed within the country. It is not the same as a national debt. But these bonds, this borrowing, is all owned by the rich, and therefore, the poor have to pay the rich.

In the first place, you will want to find out who Collier's Weekly is, and one way to find that out is to look at the book called Sixty Families, and you will find in that book a chapter entitled "Press of the Plutocracy," and on page 256 we find this paragraph, speaking of Mr. Thomas Lamont:

Lamont, however, has been less important as a newspaper owner than as a silent manipulator of the press. For many years he was a director of the Crowell Publishing Co., which publishes the American magazine, the Country Home, Collier's Weekly, and Woman's Home Companion, all with huge national circulations. Since Lamont's departure the Morgan interest in Crowell has been represented by Director A. H. Lockett—

And so forth. Now, naturally you would expect Collier's Weekly to make that statement, but let us see how true it is, and these are calculations made for me by the Federal Reserve System and the Department of Commerce, and I also got some of the data from Harvard research workers.

Savings depositors and insurance policyholders hold $20,000,000,000. Of baby bonds, there is $1,500,000,000. Of Government trust accounts, Social Security accounts, and so on, $7,000,000,000, aggregating $29,000,000,000 of those bonds either directly or indirectly owned by the common people out of the $39,000,000,000.

Then philanthropic foundations, educational institutions, and people of moderate means own some part of the remaining $10,000,000,000.

It is absolutely impossible to make any mistake about Government expenditures through a process of borrowing as long as you have not exhausted the productive capacity of your country, because you will always get more back in real wealth than the amount of the expenditure. Is it not perfectly evident that if you have 50 bushels of wheat and it is represented by $50, you can put $50 more into the market provided you have 50 more bushels of wheat to match the extra $50, and this is what happens when government borrowing is used to increase the national production.

There is another thing that is being said continuously, and that is that we are placing a burden of debt on posterity, on our children and our grandchildren and our great-grandchildren. This to me, as I said before, as long as we keep the debt within the country, is the most absurd statement that could be made. If our children and grandchildren owe this debt, they also own it. If they owe it, they own it. There is an asset always and absolutely against a liability.

The other day there was a letter written by a lady living in Virginia, and I did not use this letter until I verified the fact that the woman is living, and living in the town where she says she is living and that the letter is absolutely authentic. The letter was written to a distinguished Member of the United States Senate whose views are not like mine at all, and this is what she says:

Why should this generation hand down any debt or burden at all to the next generation? Our children and our grandchildren are in no way concerned, as far as I can see. Every morsel of food that has been eaten by the hungry bellies of this generation was grown before it was eaten. The labor, time, and resources of this generation were used to produce it—why should not this generation's hungry consume it? Why should our children or our grandchildren even be concerned, much less pay for it? Had it not been eaten, what would have happened to it?

One of the natural laws is that nothing remains static, everything is in a constant state of change. The moment any article or thing is made or created it starts to deteriorate. Food grows until it is ripe and at that instant it starts to decay. Instead of weeping bitter tears over the "waste" of feeding hungry people with food that is already in existence, we should weep for the millions of meals that rot and decay for want of human consumption, all because our sacred financial system, consisting of hard, glittering metal and dry nonnourishing paper, will not permit the rotting food to reach the hungry people.

If our children and their grandchildren must pay for this food that has already been grown and eaten before they were born, why should we not say that they must also pay for all that which rots and decays? It is a crazy and a rotten-to-the-core system that says someone must pay for food that is eaten, but that there is no loss if it rots in uselessness. In both cases it has already been produced and is in existence; it must be consumed in some manner, either by nature or by human beings. The same argument holds true for clothing or anything else that this generation has consumed or used. It is self-evident that anything we have used or consumed was produced by us before we could use or consume it. Where, then, is the logic or justice of saying that children yet unborn are concerned, or that they must pay?

This lady says in conclusion:

If some of my reasoning seems radical, I did not get it from Karl Marx; it was drilled into me from an early age and from the teachings of Jesus Christ. I hope He is not considered a Communist or dangerous radical in this materialistic age.

Mr. Speaker, it seems true that we all prefer the inductive process of reasoning to the deductive. We prefer the facts of experience rather than the argument of logic. In the following statement, which is to all practical purposes accurate, the national debt of the United States is contrasted with the national debt of Great Britain. This is an article written by Ernest K. Lindley and it appeared in the Washington Post of March 10, 1939, extracts from which I shall quote:

The present Federal debt is somewhat less than $40,000,000,000. This is a little more than $300 for every person in the United States.

A debt is large or small, of course, only in relation to the income or earning capacity of the debtor. The total income produced by the Nation last year was about $62,000,000,000. This year it may run up to $68,000,000,000 or $70,000,000,000. So our total Federal debt is, roughly, between 57 and 63 percent of our national income.

Across the Atlantic is another nation with an economic system similar to ours, a nation long experienced in public and private finance and one which has not suffered from inflation, Great Britain.

The United Kingdom has a national debt of $35,000,000,000, excluding the war debt owed to us and debts which it owes to other governments. Last year the United Kingdom had a total national income of about $25,000,000,000. So its national debt was about 140 percent of its national income.

If our national debt were as large in relation to our income as the United Kingdom's debt is in relation to its income, it would be between $89,000,000,000 and $98,000,000,000, instead of $40,000,000,000.

Our States and localities have total debts of about $19,000,000,000. You can add this to our Federal debt to obtain a total of almost $59,000,000,000 of debts for our Federal, State, and local governments.

Localities in the United Kingdom have a total debt of about $9,000,000,000, according to the latest figures available, making a total public debt, national and local, of about $44,000,000,000. This is 176 percent of the national income of the United Kingdom. If the combined debts of our Federal, State, and local governments were 176 percent of our national income, they would total between $109,000,000,000 and $123,000,000,000 instead of $59,000,000,000.

The interest charges on the national debt of the United Kingdom amount to 4 percent of the national income.

The interest charges on our national debt amount to about 1½ percent of our national income.

Moreover, the British economic plant was operating almost at capacity last year, while ours is working at only two-thirds capacity, or a little better. On a national income of $80,000,000,000 we would need a total public debt—Federal State, and local—of $140,000,000,000 to match the British.

The experience of the British should be a conclusive answer to those who fear that our public debt is nearing the danger point.

Mr. Speaker, of course, I am not at all confident that these remarks will change anyone's opinion, but they are made by me at one of the most serious periods of my life. They are made by me at a time when I am closing a career. They are made by me at a time when I believe I am fully aware of the mental uneasiness of the people of this country, and I never was more sincere in my life than I have been today in expressing the opinions that I have expressed. No country is in any danger of having its credit blasted or in any danger of an inflationary condition as long as its production is not up to its capacity. As long as we are able to produce more than we can produce now of wanted goods and services, we cannot have any inflation. If we put more money into circulation and still more money in circulation until our production reaches 100-percent capacity, and then through some foolish, inconceivable process we should continue to put more money into the market, we would then have true inflation. We cannot have it by any other process except that one which I have indicated.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for, I hope, a pleasant remark?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, coming from the minority on this committee, we are about to lose a most delightful personality, and the only real satisfaction in New England to which the gentleman made reference is that the New England viewpoint will lose one of its strongest opponents, and therefore we shall expect to prevail very much more hereafter.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much. That remark is characteristic of the kindly disposition of my colleague from Massachusetts, who has always been most kind and considerate and thoughtful of me in spite of the fact that we have never been able to agree.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. The Eastern Shore of Maryland comprises the First Congressional District of our State. Rich in tradition, wholesome and big in hospitality, when the people of that section of Maryland call into public service one of her distinguished sons, it is evidence of the respect and esteem with which such public servant is held by her people. Such is especially true of the distinguished gentleman now occupying the Well of the House and who has been a Member of Congress for nearly 18 years. Certainly no man has received greater honor at the hands of the famous Eastern Shore section of our State than has Congressman GOLDSBOROUGH.

As he leaves to take his place in the judiciary branch of our Government I step into his shoes as dean of our State delegation. I do this after nearly 12 years of service and association with him. Not only on the Hill, so to speak, but socially as well, have I become a close friend of Congressman GOLDSBOROUGH, and along with his many associates in the House I am going to miss him very, very much.

Few men in Congress have displayed more devotion to the many and complex problems before the Congress, few men are looked upon as harder or more indefatigable workers than Congressman GOLDSBOROUGH. He has been a deep student, especially along the lines he has discussed today so intelligently as his farewell address. I arise, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of injecting at this point a word as evidence of my own personal regret at Congressman GOLDSBOROUGH'S leaving us, and at the same time express the hope that his service as a distinguished jurist will be met with the same measure of esteem and regard with which his service in this body has always been regarded during the long tenure which is coming to a close today.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Maryland be extended 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, it has been my pleasure to serve for 18 years with the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] as a Member of this House and as a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. Certainly I have had ample opportunity to know him. I have benefited greatly in my attempted service on that committee by his great learning, his splendid legal attainments, and his unfailing loyalty. I rejoice in the new honor that has been bestowed upon him by his appointment to the bench. I do not regard it as a promotion for him. I believe that his change in public service represents a loss to the country. I believe that his opportunities are greater in this body, as a representative of the people, which expresses as does no other assemblage on earth those ideals of human liberty that have blessed this Republic for 150 years. But he will add luster to the great judiciary of this Nation. His record there, I have no doubt, will be marked as has his service as a Member of this House, by great ability, deep devotion to duty, and by unflinching loyalty to all the best traditions of our national life. Not the least among the great qualities he possesses is that of superb courage, which has had much to do with attaining the enviable place which he holds in the esteem and confidence of his associates.

His departure is a loss to this body, a great loss to the committee on which he has served with such distinction, and to whose work he has made able and lasting contribution.

Alan, we love you. Your departure, to many of us—and I speak for both sides of the aisle in this House—will be regarded as a personal loss. We bid you Godspeed and wish you the full measure of happiness and success that you so richly deserve. [Applause.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I do not know how to thank my colleagues for what they have said. I am not going to endeavor to do that. I am not going to say anything personal, except that I have received nothing since I have been in the American Congress but kindness and consideration from my colleagues. As Mr. COLE has said, I have been dean of the Maryland delegation for several years and have always received the most loyal and full cooperation, and I thank my colleague from Maryland especially for what he has said; also the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, Mr. STEAGALL.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Before the gentleman passes on, will he permit a very brief interjection?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman has mentioned as one of the principal contributions of his long and distinguished congressional career, in collaboration with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], the Federal insurance of bank deposits. In that connection I want to call attention to the fact, established by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that after that measure had passed the House of Representatives and the Senate and was in conference it was detained so long that a report became current in Congress that the bill would die there. As a result of that report, 100 Members signed a pledge to vote against adjournment of Congress until the conference report was brought in and the legislation was passed. How authentic that report was thought to be is attested by the fact that among the signers of the petition are to be found the names of the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. HENRY B. STEAGALL, and the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH, who were House conferees. That pledge reads as follows:

> We, the undersigned Members of Congress, hereby pledge and obligate ourselves to vote against any motion to adjourn this special session of the Seventy-third Congress until the bank guaranty deposits bill is brought out from conference and placed upon its passage by the Congress, or until we have bank guaranty legislation.

That pledge was placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and is to be found in the RECORD of June 12, 1933, on page 5826, and it got action. I am proud to have been one of the 100 signers.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I thank the gentleman very much for his contribution.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, sincerely I believe that Republicans and Democrats alike feel this is a sad day. I know the minority members of the Committee on Banking and Currency are sad today in the knowledge that their mentor on money matters is leaving this Congress. We rejoice, of course, that he is being promoted into a field of endeavor for which he is eminently qualified by temperament and education. We know that he will be respected in this new field as he has been respected in the Congress during the 18 years of his service here.

There has been a great deal said about money during the comparatively short time I have been in Congress. We have probably had two or three hundred bills introduced on the question of money. Money is considered by some people to be the source of all our happiness as well as the reason for all of our misery. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] has given more honest, conscientious, serious, and intelligent study to the question of money and the relationship between money and prices than any other Member of this Congress. We have respect for his judgment in this and all other respects.

I want to say to the gentleman from Maryland and to this House today that we all regret that this Congress is to be denied this judgment and this intelligence which he has brought not only to the committee but to this House.

My personal experience with him dates back only to 1933, but it was my pleasure at that time to sit on a subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency and to listen to hearings on a bill which the gentleman from Maryland introduced to establish a Federal monetary authority for the purpose of stabilizing prices. The subject appealed to me. I literally went to school to the gentleman from Maryland. Since then I have been a little impatient with several of the schemes for manipulating our currency and stabilizing our prices, because although I was somewhat criticized in certain sources for the attitude which I took, I saw that the bill of the gentleman from Maryland had much merit and that possibly we were on the right road to effect stabilization. I wish we might have continued that study. Had we done so, I think we would have found the answer to the instability in the commodity price index before now.

Let me say again that we on the minority side of the Committee on Banking and Currency deeply regret that ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH has seen fit to resign from the Congress of the United States, but we wish him every success and we know he will be successful; and, Alan, we know that to your career you are bringing intelligence, we know that you are bringing sincerity, and conscienciousness. You have exhibited on this floor today that you are a man of principle and integrity. It would have been an easy thing for you to have eased out of this Congress without saying anything about the program for which you have fought so valiantly if you had not been sincere.

The Nation and your district, Alan, are to be congratulated that a man of your type, character, and intelligence is to be elevated to this high position to which you go. We wish you Godspeed and will miss you. [Applause.]

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, not for the purpose of indulging in any lengthy encomium—for the gentleman needs none such from me—but my purpose in interrupting is to say that since 1923 until now I have been in almost daily contact with the gentleman from Maryland. During all the time while Congress has been in session since 1923 until today I have been in touch with him. It also happened that during several years, beginning with 1923, we roomed at the same hotel and so had an opportunity during the evenings to discuss at length subjects of mutual interest. We discussed economics, metaphysics, sociology, and all of the other subjects that would engage the minds of those interested in matters of a serious nature.

I could not let the opportunity pass without mentioning the fact that Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH discussed such subjects with an open mind. I do not overly enthuse about those who are constantly concerned about being conventional in their thought and actions. What I liked about my friend was that he did not hesitate to take what might seem to be at the moment an unpopular or unfashionable stand. He approached abstruse questions which we discussed at great length at time with an unbiased mind and that, in my opinion, is absolutely necessary in the search for truth. It was Ptolemy who said, "He that is to follow philosophy must be a free man in mind." ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH, I desire to say what I regard as a great compliment to you, when I assure you that you complied with the requirements which Ptolemy said were necessary to follow philosophy; you were a free man in mind.

I very much regret to see you leaving this body. I believe that here is where you could render the greatest service, all things considered. But you have made the choice and I have no hesitation in saying that you will perform the duties of your new office as well as you have performed your duties here.

I wish you a fond farewell, my friend. [Applause.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I thank most sincerely my distinguished friend from Michigan and my distinguished friend from Ohio.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman yields the floor, will he yield to me?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I feel a deep personal loss in the retirement of my long-time and my dear friend ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH from the House of Representatives. Above and beyond all that, however, I feel that the House of Representatives is losing a Member of a high degree of intelligence, of a supreme passion for service to his day and to his generation. He has in him the elements so mixed that he is an ideal legislator. Whatever the future may hold for him in distinction, I think his career on the bench will hardly equal—it certainly will not excel—the fine record he has made as a statesman and as a legislator.

Let me say to you, Alan, that wherever you go—I hope not far away—be assured that you will have my affectionate regard and my friendship. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I take this minute in order that I may thank especially the distinguished Democratic floor leader not only for his complimentary remarks about me today but for the friendship and consideration he has always shown me. [Applause, the Members rising.]

TAXATION OF COMPENSATION OF PUBLIC OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3790) relating to the taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees on the part of the House: Messrs. DOUGHTON, CULLEN, MCCORMACK, COOPER, TREADWAY, CROWTHER, and KNUTSON.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

Mr. RAYBURN (when the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures was called). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to insert a brief editorial from the Montreal Daily Herald.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the proclamation of the President of the United States with reference to Army Day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under an order heretofore entered, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes to the 20 minutes already given me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely essential, in view of the present conditions prevailing in the world, that the deficiency appropriation for the Bureau of Investigation should not be eliminated—or be restored, as the case may be.

Under the able guidance of J. Edgar Hoover the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice has been doing yeoman work of a type in character rarely duplicated throughout the world. Scotland Yard, in Europe, has not produced as able a set of investigators as our own Federal Bureau of Investigation has.

A comparatively small number of men are engaged in activity which is not only not duplicated anywhere else but evoking the admiration of the whole world. At the present time there is a great deal of espionage going on by foreign governments seeking to penetrate into our military secrets and making a thorough study of our means of national defense, in order to cripple our own efforts in the event of a world war.

I do not wish to appear as an alarmist, nor do I wish to single out any particular nation as being the culprit in these matters, but it seems that all of Europe is employing paid spies to ferret out secrets of our national defense. The work of the F. B. I. in connection with this investigation cannot be checked, and it would be a tremendous calamity if, due to a niggardly policy of refusing proper appropriations, the F. B. I. should be unable to save this country from foreign spies.

I hereby beseech this House not to stint the Department at the present time, and I should like to call your attention to the fact that when some years ago the Department of Justice obtained an appropriation for the F. B. I. in excess of its needs it turned back to the Government $200,000, something no other department has been able to accomplish in a good many years.

After all, at the beginning of a fiscal year we cannot possibly know how much money there will be required by the Department of Justice because of a situation over which it has no control, and we all know that the unsettled conditions in Europe have placed upon the F. B. I. a burden which it could not possibly foresee when the appropriation bill was before the House a year ago.

Mr. Speaker, not only has the Department of Justice been in charge of this particular work but the Congress has also loaded onto that agency quite a number of statutes and laws to be enforced. Not only does the Department of Justice deal with espionage, bankruptcies, interstate, and other provisions of the laws that we have imposed upon it, but the Department of Justice also has to do with aliens, whether they are here illegally through smuggling operations or for other reasons.

The majority of the Members of the Congress know very little about this subject. It is difficult to understand. The best illustration I can give you of this fact is that yesterday when bills on the Private Calendar were being called, a group of objectors, without knowing the merit or demerit of any of the bills reported by the Committee on Immigration, made objections to all these bills. I do not think there is an objector, with possibly one or two exceptions, who could tell the House on what basis he made the objection.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the way to legislate. It is not the way to treat a committee that toils and works hard listening to the evidence of witnesses and finally brings a bill onto this floor for consideration.

The reason is we do not know what the policy of this Congress or any other Congress may be so far as immigration is concerned. Some people write about immigrants who have never seen an immigrant. Some people talk about immigrants who have never had the opportunity of associating with them. Some people talk about immigration when they should take the trouble and opportunity to study the problem as I and others have for many years.

I want this country to be as safe as it can be from espionage activities, whether it be by aliens or citizens. I do not want people in this country who do not belong here. I would like to see all persons who should be removed from this country deported. However, when the Committee on Immigration, which consists of 21 members, has given a question very careful study and consideration and has brought a matter onto the floor of this House, it should receive proper treatment. You will see Member after Member coming from sections that never saw an immigrant object just because it is an immigrant. I say that system is wrong and should be corrected.

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization has tried to correct this matter. How? After 2 or 3 years of study the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization unanimously reported a resolution which would authorize it to conduct an investigation of all our immigration laws, which are complicated, and of all our deportation laws, which are complicated, and the other questions involved in our code. As I stated, the report from that committee was unanimous. We feel that we ought to have the opportunity of studying this matter and bringing back to the Congress a policy which will forever stop the smuggling of aliens into the United States. We feel we should be able to present a law which you and I will understand. We cannot possibly understand the law as the code stands today.

We appeared before the Rules Committee in connection with House Resolution 115, introduced by my colleague the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE], the ranking member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. After presenting our views to the Rules Committee it unanimously reported a resolution which would authorize the Committee on Immigration to make a study of all these problems not only with reference to the code but with reference to the smuggling of aliens through the back door.

You have closed the front door, and in some instances you have refused to unite a father and a mother or a sister and a brother. In some instances you have practically barred immigration into this country of white people. However, the back door is wide open. Thousands of undesirable aliens are coming in through the back door from Mexico and Canada. The committee is trying to correct this situation.

The Committee on Rules gave us a rule. What happened? After manipulations lasting about a week or 10 days—and I do not know who the manipulators are—the resolution was brought back to the Committee on Rules and objection was made by my distinguished friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] that the language in a certain portion of the resolution might result in activities overlapping the work of his committee investigating un-American activities. In order to convince the Committee on Rules and the Congress that it was not the purpose of the Committee on Immigration to interfere with any of the problems concerned in investigating un-American activities the Committee on Immigration agreed to withdraw the entire resolution, eliminate the objectionable features, and deal solely with the questions that relate to the problems of immigration and naturalization, deportation, and expatriation. We had a hearing on that resolution, which I believe is House Resolution 144. After convincing everybody in the room, as we thought, that it is most essential that the committee have the power to subpena and the power to go into all these questions and problems, one man was able to hold back the report of the Committee on Rules. He wants to study three lines. He wants to know why we should recodify the naturalization and deportation laws.

It is impossible today for any lawyer to understand the naturalization and deportation law, not to speak of the difficulty it presents to ordinary people. This law has not been changed, but has been added to, and nothing has been repealed. Since 1907 one section after another has been added to the law, and by the time you get through reading the law you do not know where you are. This gentleman did not see why we should go into the question of a recodification of the law. I believe that is within the province and power of the committee. I do not care how hard it is to do, but something must be done. We ought to have a definite policy. You and I and everyone should know who is deportable and who is not deportable. Everyone should know who is entitled to naturalization and who is not. It is impossible today to know these things.

There has been a sort of a fight between the smugglers, and one has written to the committee. Everyone is giving us some kind of information as to how smuggling is going on. They are willing to testify before the committee if they can get some sort of immunity and tell us who the smugglers are and how they operate.

To bring out my point, I call your attention to an article in the New York Daily Mirror relating that one Satirios Syrkos, a Greek, 58 years of age, from Montreal, has been convicted of smuggling in three persons. He is only part of a ring of over 100 operating on both the Mexican and Canadian borders. When being interviewed by Federal officials, he boasted to the Federal agents that he had smuggled 25,000 Chinese, Greeks, and other aliens across the border into New York and Vermont. The Department of Labor officials who worked the case up considered that an exaggeration, but do believe he has smuggled at least a couple hundred aliens across that border. He charged $250 a person, and his average earnings were $500 a day. The Department of Labor, through some very clever work, secured a conviction in this case and succeeded in having him sent to prison for 7 years. This is only one. No one knows how many others there are like him.

This goes to illustrate that unless you get a squeal in these cases you cannot possibly find out who the culprits are. If the Committee on Immigration can obtain this resolution from the Committee on Rules without any further pussyfooting or without hemming and hawing as to who is going to conduct the investigation, we can get to the root of this smuggling racket that is going on and has been going on for years. In fact, they have a scale of prices which starts at $250 and goes up to $1,500. A Chinese girl brings a top price of $1,500, while a Chinese man is charged just $1,000. There is an international group that has been operating on these two borders, and the Department, with all its force—and I am not criticizing the Department of Labor, which is doing all in its power to prevent these occurrences—is unable to stop the smuggling. How can you prevent smuggling when we have a border 9,000 miles long, counting both the Canadian and Mexican borders? We have 850 enforcing officers known as the border patrol. Of this force there are 68 maintenance employees, leaving about 775 actually doing patrol work. When you bear in mind that the borders are open 24 hours a day, you will see it requires 3 shifts; we must divide that 775 three ways, leaving about 290 shifts, if the men could work 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. However, you must remember that they only work on a basis of 5½ days a week and must have necessary time off for vacations and sick leave. When you have what is left, you must divide that in two, because the nature of the work is so dangerous that the men have to patrol the borders in teams of two. You might be interested in knowing that since the border patrol was created in 1924, 23 officers have been killed in battles with smugglers of aliens. This shows that there is no limit to which smugglers will go to attain their end. It is difficult to prevent smuggling entirely with such a force.

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization should be given the right to study this problem and should have the right to see what can be done to close our borders. If necessary, I would create a real organization of veterans of the World War and put more men on the border to stop the smuggling of aliens. Two years ago hundreds of Chinamen were brought from Mexico into the United States, and a lot of money was required to send these Chinamen back. This group of men has fixed a price of $1,000 for smuggling in one Chinaman, so it is difficult to enforce the law. We have our front door closed, but the back door is open.

If my information is correct, some persons do not like the idea of our making an investigation. Why? Because they represent certain interests who bring in cheap peon labor from Mexico to the United States during the harvesting of certain seasonal crops. When these laborers are ready to leave they lose themselves within the United States, and it is humanly impossible to get them out of the country.

What objection does anyone see to this committee's having the right to go into these questions? What are we doing about it? What does the average Member of the House know about these matters unless he actually deals with them every day in the committee room? It seems to me there is no room for argument. If we can do the job, the results would be priceless. One Member asked me how much it would cost, and I said, "I do not know; something like $20,000, $30,000, or $50,000." He said, "Well, that is a lot of money." It is not a lot of money, Mr. Speaker. It is worth all kinds of money if we can clean house and expose all these criminals who make it a practice to smuggle aliens into this country for a price.

I have right in my files now information which gives me the names of at least two dozen persons who have been engaging in this smuggling, not only by land and water but also by plane, and I will give you another illustration of how far they go. About 4 years ago a little boat had about 100 persons on board, and there was a revenue cutter going in the opposite direction from where the boat with the group of smugglers was going. Do you know what happened? The captain of that little fishing boat thought that was his cue to clean the ship, and he put a number of men in a burlap bag, tied them up, and told them, "Wait until this little Government boat gets away and we will open the bag and let you out." They threw dozens of men in the water or in the ocean to the sharks. This is how far they go in this smuggling racket.

Let me tell you something more. They are bringing in quite a number of colored people from some place through the keys of Florida. We could secure this information if we only had the power of subpena to force these people to testify.

Then there are the trans-Atlantic boats that bring in sailors and seamen. Do you know how the members of the espionage and spy systems come in? They do not get any visa to come to the United States. They do not get any passport to come into the United States. All of your spy system is established as a result of boats bringing in more sailors than they need to man the ship; in other words, they add on almost 100, and when they get in, under the La Follette Seaman Act, I understand they have a right to remain for 60 days in the United States. Then they lose themselves and afterward they do their dirty work.

We ought to go into all of these things and I do not know of any man in this House or in this country who can deny the right to the committee to go into these problems. Oh, I have heard certain things said, perhaps, unkindly toward the committee, but that is not going to meet the problem of the smuggling of aliens or going into the question in the interest of the American people.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that under our immigration laws there is hardly anyone coming in? With a quota of 153,000, this fiscal year will only have 41,000 or 42,000 more persons coming here for permanent residence than have emigrated from the United States, and these people must qualify physically, mentally, and financially that they will not become a public charge, but by the same token there are thousands of men being brought across both borders at a price of $250, who are undesirable aliens and who are a menace to any democracy.

I appeal to the chairman and the members of the Rules Committee, in the name of our own country to let me have this resolution. Do not have me come back here next week or the week afterward and say, "I told you so."

I have referred to many things on the floor of this House. I recall 4 or 5 years ago I stood here and pleaded and begged and told you about the system of espionage of foreign countries seeking to undermine our Government, and you paid no attention until 3 or 4 years afterward, when you saw the living exhibits and everybody wakened up and everybody was hollering about it, and we created the Dies committee, and I hope they do a good job, because they have a big job before them.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. We all realize that the gentleman is an authority on immigration matters. This question is sometimes asked: In view of the situation which the gentleman has called attention to, particularly with respect to the smuggling of aliens and the bringing in the country of an excess number on the crews of ships, why is it that the Department of Labor cannot take care of that situation without further investigation on the part of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAHON). Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] is entitled to recognition for 20 minutes. Is the request agreeable to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I say to the gentleman that the committee in making this study has not consulted the Department of Labor. We have made our own study and survey as best we knew how. Racketeers and smugglers will not advise the Labor Department that they are smuggling. We have information, and if we had the power of subpena, we could produce 100 or more persons who will give us information about how this smuggling racket is going on. We want to go into the whole subject, and, if we can, close up that 9,000 miles of border so that we are safe from enemy aliens, spies, or whatever you want to call them. We do not know. We have the information. If we had the right to subpena and bring the persons here under oath to tell us about the enemies, about how it is done, and who is behind it all, then we can bring in laws that will make it a felony, punishable, if necessary, by death, because this matter has gone too far.

On the next point, the gentleman asks about seamen. Here is a boat that comes in from Europe with 900 sailors. I am advised by experts it needs only about 700 or 750. We have to devise some system to stop that. We want to study the matter at first hand, so we will know exactly what laws to put on the statute books to make the steamship companies do what the law requires them to do. At present there is no such law.

Mr. MAPES. My understanding was, until the hearings before the Committee on Rules, that the penalty imposed on steamship companies for doing that sort of thing was so great that there was not much of it being done.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The penalties the gentleman refers to are where they bring in an alien who is not qualified to enter the United States, and then they are fined $1,000 and the steamship passage back to his native country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 2 minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] has a special order. Does he consent to this?

Mr. FADDIS. If it does not come out of my time, I am willing to have the gentleman get more time to answer the question of the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman think that the smuggling to which he refers could be prevented if the Congress appropriated more money for the Labor Department to take care of that situation?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not think so.

Mr. MAPES. Why not?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Because the present laws are defective. Something is wrong with the law and we want to find out what is wrong with the law. We want to get first-hand information.

Mr. MAPES. The present law prohibits immigration, except under certain conditions, and it prohibits smuggling. If the Department of Labor has the disposition and the necessary men to see to it that the law is complied with, why would not that take care of the situation?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am afraid that the gentleman did not get my point in the beginning of my discussion. I then said that there is a group of international smugglers operating between Mexico, the United States, and Canada.

Mr. COX. Is not this whole thing simply an anodyne the gentleman's committee is trying to set up for the inactivity of his committee and of the Labor Department?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. COX. If the law is defective, then the gentleman knows it, and if he knows it, why does he not propose an amendment?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We do not know it, and that is what we want to know.

Mr. COX. I thought the gentleman was stating to the gentleman from Michigan that the law was bad.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I told the gentleman from Michigan that the present law is bad, but we can put teeth into the law.

Mr. COX. Why not put teeth into it then?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We do not know the facts. We want the facts first-hand from persons who do this thing.

Mr. COX. The gentleman has been before the House relating what he says are facts, stating the manner of the admission of these aliens, contrary to law, and he criticizes the Committee on Rules——

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not criticize it.

Mr. COX. For not reporting a rule making in order the consideration of the gentleman's resolution to authorize him to conduct an investigation covering some indefinite period of time in order that he may ascertain information that will enable him to determine, first, whether the law is defective, and then, if defective, in what manner he can correct it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If we had the power to subpena, we could subpena over 100 or more persons who will divulge a certain international smuggling ring in this country. We will then turn that over to the Department of Justice for prosecution, and we will then study the whole problem, and the committee should have the right to do it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the special orders today I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RESIGNATION FROM THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following resignation:

APRIL 5, 1939.

Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby submit my resignation as a Member of the House of Representatives from the First Congressional District of Maryland.

With my kindest regards, I am,
Very sincerely yours,

T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] is recognized for 25 minutes.

WHO SHALL DECLARE WAR?

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, once more we have before us the proposal to provide for a referendum to the people before this Nation can engage in a foreign war. True enough, the question has been amended so as to satisfy the demands of the time-honored Monroe Doctrine. This, of course, is only to win more support for the proposal, for after all a war is a war no matter on what continent it is fought or over what matter. There is sure to be the same expense involved, the same casualty list, and the same disastrous aftermath—the period of deflation and readjustment. A man killed in the defense of American trade in Brazil or of democratic principles, which exist only in name, in Argentina, is just as dead as though he were killed in defense of trade in China or democracy in France. Why, then, this bit of subtle demagoguery in exempting wars in the Western Hemisphere?

Mr. Speaker, too often the wish is father to the thought and this is, I believe, true in respect to this honest, well intended but misguided attempt to keep this Nation out of war. To all intents and purposes this is the same proposition which was defeated by the House a year ago. If the original proposal was undesirable what, I ask, is there in this modified proposal to recommend it? The gist of the argument in favor of the proposal, is that the people of this Nation are more competent to say whether or not the Nation should go to war, than is the Congress, which is composed of the direct representatives of the people. In this matter these theorists would have us entrust our national security to a system of government almost identical to that used by the aborigines of America, and where are they today? Gone with the wind—and their most famous statute, The End of the Trail.

The most essential power of government is the power to wage war and to have supreme control over the entire conduct of the war. That power is the basic power upon which are builded other powers necessary to the building and maintenance of a nation. Without this power none of the other powers of the Government could be exercised. Without this power the government of any nation would be emasculated and that nation would stand as a eunuch among nations. This power is even more necessary to government than the power to tax and not nearly so liable to abuse.

When a people desire to form a nation the power to make war is the first power they seize. There is not a nation of any importance on the face of the globe which was not born of warfare and not one which could stand if robbed of this power.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does the gentleman remember reading the history of Sweden and Norway, when there was a dispute as to the right of Norway to secede from Sweden, and the people of both countries decided that instead of being involved in war and killing each other off, they would just strike and stop and let the leaders settle it, and the country was spared the devastation of war? Does the gentleman recall that?

Mr. FADDIS. Of course I do.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does not the gentleman think it was the smartest thing ever done in history?

Mr. FADDIS. I certainly believe it was. I believe wherever it is practicable it is a fitting and just substitute for war, but nevertheless for every incident of that kind in history there are literally thousands of incidents where it was impossible to settle differences in any manner except by warfare.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman speaks of the right of the Government to declare war. The Ludlow referendum on war does not take away from the people the right to wage war, but gives the people themselves the right to express their wishes about it, rather than a few selected representatives.

Mr. FADDIS. Yes. Later on in my remarks I will reach that point and answer the gentleman.

Let us compare the fortunes of two very similar peoples—the American Indians of western United States, during the nineteenth century, and the Mongols of Asia, during the thirteenth century. Both were nomadic tribes of horsemen of about the same degree of civilization and probably of the same ethnological derivation. Both were warlike people and developed a very high type of light cavalry. Both were addicted to intertribal warfare. The American Indian decided whether or not he would engage in war by a referendum to the people which was influenced by demagoguery, the incantations of medicine men, and the prophecies of diviners. As a consequence, some of them went to war to fight against the whites, some of them to fight with the whites, and some of them went hunting and fishing. The war was continually carried into their country, and they were always on the defensive. Their own method of handling the question of declaring war divided them at the outset, and they were then easily defeated in detail. When it came to attacking fortified centers, they were helpless, because they had no strong leadership to hold them to prolonged effort. They were tribal or individualist fighters and never had a planned campaign, or reserves of material resources or manpower. They never attained a national status, for the reason that they had no central head to say whether there should be peace or war. They frittered away their resources in sporadic raids and won very few battles and no wars.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman does not contend that there is any comparison between aboriginal tribes, with inferior armament, and the superior arms and superior organization of the white race, does he?

Mr. FADDIS. I contend that human nature is the same today as it was in the time of Genesis, and that the mechanical advancement or improvement in arms has made absolutely no difference in human nature in the human race.

The Mongols or Tarters were different. Although they were divided into tribes, they had a central government which had authority to raise, organize, and command a common army and to make war or peace. This central government at first had little or no power other than the military power. Upon this power was builded the Mongol Empire of Genghis Khan and Tamarlane; and the other powers of government necessary for the transition of a barbarous people to a civilized people followed as a matter of course. These men were unlettered but, nevertheless, military geniuses, because they had the power to exercise the primary protective instincts of mankind unhampered by any restrictions. They formed a vast empire, progressive for its time.

First, they always carried the war into the country of the enemy as swiftly and unexpectedly as possible. This saved their own country from the ravages of war. Second, they took the offensive at the beginning, and kept it, because they knew that an attacking enemy is always much more terrifying than an enemy attacked. Third, during even those early days their supreme command gave them the necessary power to reduce fortified cities, which they reduced as they came to them and carried the spoil home to enrich their own nation. Fourth, they possessed the police power to levy and collect taxes and to administer and enforce a code of laws.

Many of the founders of this Republic came from sections where the town meeting was in vogue, most of them were acquainted with the history of former pure democracies, yet they gave to us a representative form of government. They believed that this was the form of government best calculated to preserve the liberties of the people and the security of the Nation. Our experiences during the past 150 years have proven the wisdom of their judgment. When we examine the records of the Constitutional Convention in respect to the power to declare war, we find a remarkably harmonious chapter. The question regarding where this power should reside provoked almost no discussion, as opinion was almost unanimous that it should reside in Congress. Practically all of these men had actively participated in the Revolutionary War and were only too well aware of the difficulties of waging war without a supreme head empowered to act swiftly at all times.

Now, I am perfectly aware of the argument advanced by the proponents of this measure that times have changed and modern means of communication have made it possible to dispense information much more rapidly than was possible 150 years ago. That is very true, but this argument is builded upon the supposition that misinformation will not be dispensed as well. After all, the question is not one of communication. It is one of the exercise of unbiased judgment, based upon the consideration of concrete facts analyzed in a dispassionate manner. A decision to go to war or not to go to war must be arrived at only after viewing the present and future interest of the Nation as a whole, and not from the viewpoint of any class, color, or creed. It is a solemn, awesome responsibility, the most momentous decision a statesman can make, and one only to be arrived at by the most careful and prayerful consideration of all facts, foreign and domestic.

This is, to say the least, an experiment; and one which if given a trial might very easily result in national disaster in more ways than one. The loyalists of Spain tried operating by a method of remote popular control. They had two wars going on at the same time—one with the forces of Franco and one within their own ranks. While they had a chance to win against Franco they were too busy fighting among themselves to take advantage of the situation. When Franco had them decisively defeated for a year they were so occupied fighting over who should be allowed to make peace that they could not end the war.

The proponents of this referendum plan maintain that there would be very little delay occasioned by submitting this question to the people. They claim, with our modern facilities of communication, an election can be held almost overnight. No one denies the truth of that statement. Unfortunately, the matter is not as simple as that. It is not a matter of mechanical achievement at all. The claims of the proponents as to the speed with which the ballot can be taken is ample proof of their highly theoretical viewpoint and their lack of understanding of the matter. Some of the real questions involved are as follows:

How long would it require to correctly inform the voters regarding the true facts, in order that they would be qualified to vote upon the question? Such questions must not be decided by snap judgment. There are many facts bearing on such issues which it is not wise to make public. It is not possible for the general run of voters to meet and talk with the other officials of government, diplomatic officials, and officers of the Army and Navy, as it is for Members of Congress. Neither is it as possible for the general public to view the question from all angles as it is for the Members of Congress to keep up to date on such situations all the time.

To what extent would false and misleading information enter into the question? Under our Constitution we would have no way to prevent any irresponsible demagogue from getting into the fight on either side. There could be no means of controlling what was said on the subject. Since the issue was being fought out along this line first, what a fertile field it would furnish for paid propagandists. What a riot such a vote would cause among our population of such heterogeneous origin. The men of military age who would survive the referendum would be experienced in a domestic guerrilla warfare. The National Guard of the various States would be exhausted and depleted before they met the common enemy.

What percent of the voters would be able to cast their ballot without giving purely personal reasons undue consideration? It is almost unnatural to expect a mother to vote for a war in which she knows her son must fight, however pressing the need may be. The same would be true of many men of military age, who would make splendid soldiers once in the army. It would be just as reasonable to expect the electorate to vote unbiased upon the taxes to be raised within the Nation. Everyone knows that it is always the other man and his effects which should be taxed.

What would be the psychological effect upon a potential enemy? It would amount to an open invitation to any nation seeking conquest to harass our national interests, just as did the Barbary pirates. Wars are not declared today. They are fought. Any indecision or wavering is certain to be fatal, as has been proven by Hitler's advances since the Munich conference. Does anyone believe that Japan would have invaded China had she not believed that China was lacking a strong central government capable of making war swiftly and surely? They thought that China was much more handicapped than the ordinary democracy in the matter of making war. When confronted by a war, a democracy, by virtue of the fact that by the very theory of democracy the war must meet popular approval or it cannot be successfully prosecuted, is handicapped when confronted by a monarchy or dictatorship, which can make war to satisfy a whim or ambition. The adoption of a constitutional amendment such as this would hopelessly cripple a democracy.

To what extent would we be able to divorce the question from partisan politics? Not at all. We are a political people, and any or all parties would begin to jockey for position in the next Presidential election immediately upon the rise of the issue.

From an examination of the hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress upon this subject, which hearings were very complete, the idea behind this referendum seems to be predicated upon the entirely unwarranted assumption that there exist in this Nation influences which would drag the Nation into war in order that they might profit financially by the sale of munitions. This has often been implied, and, indeed, has been made as an assertion so often that it is generally believed to be true. This in itself is a good illustration of the power of propaganda, where, without one iota of proof being advanced, an often-repeated statement begins to be accepted as truth. Certainly such procedure is detrimental to the public interest. It seems to me that the testimony is an impeachment upon our system of government, because the thought there prevails that Congress would act wholly as a result of insidious pressure and be carried off by theory. Those in favor of the proposition seem to believe themselves to be very practical and above being influenced by any sentimental ideas. Our witness admits that war was once "strictly necessary and even helpful." She says, however, that various devices for settling disputes by peaceful means have developed, but she does not say what these means are. She also cites the pledges of all civilized nations to use peaceful means to settle disputes. She is one who fears Congress will be "carried off by theory" or yield to insidious pressure.

The opinion seemed to prevail among the proponents of this plan that the attitude of the press would be influenced by only the worst motives. The question of why we entered the World War comes into the hearings colored by the sympathies of the witnesses. Indeed, those who appeared in favor of this resolution seem to suspicion the good faith, good judgment, and good intentions of everyone except themselves and those whom they call the people. They assume from the start that the officials of the Government, those concerned with the press and radio, the industrialists, and all foreign nations will be actuated only by unworthy motives. One witness believed that the vote should be restricted to those men of military age plus one woman for each. It was generally admitted that the proposition was an experiment. There was a general haziness regarding what might constitute war and the manner in which the plan would function. The statement of every witness showed that they were giving more consideration to the hysterical and sentimental side of the question than they were to the extent which it might hamper the defense of the Nation.

There has been entirely too much irresponsible talk regarding this country being led into war by industrial interests, international bankers, or by an imperialistic-minded President, Secretary of State, or Congress. There is nothing in our history, past or present, to bear out such imputations. From a practical viewpoint and from the history of similar lines of action in other nations in various times throughout the past, there is every reason to believe that the amending of the Constitution in this respect would not be a deterrent to war and that it would seriously threaten our national security. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a statement of Dr. Baker, of the Audubon Society.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPARKMAN). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] is recognized for 30 minutes.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances, I am not going to detain my colleagues for the full 30 minutes which have been assigned to me.

On July 5, 1935, when President Roosevelt signed the so-called Wagner Act he issued a formal statement covering his interpretation of its terms and his understanding of the policy of the act and the function of the National Labor Relations Board.

It is interesting now, after the lapse of almost 4 years, to consider how this Board has operated and whether it has adhered to the purposes in the minds of Congress and the President, and whether it has done anything to secure the results contemplated by the legislation.

Primarily the purpose of the Wagner Act, and even the constitutional theory upon which it was adopted and upon which, in the Jones & Laughlin decision, the Supreme Court of the United States upheld it, was that—

> Industrial disputes precipitated by the denial of employers of the right of their employees to organize and bargain collectively created a "burden upon interstate commerce."

The administration of the act by the National Labor Relations Board has not been satisfactory. There is insistent demand to investigate the Board to ascertain whether the increasing volume of criticism and protest from employers and the general public, and even the American Federation of Labor, against the activities of the Board and its members is justified.

Admittedly the act is not reciprocal. It provides no opportunity for the employer to make a complaint to the Board covering alleged unfair practices in connection with labor-union activities; furthermore, there is great criticism as to the provision of the act under which, in the event of there being "evidence" in a record to sustain the finding of the Board—without specification as to its being reasonably preponderant—the findings of the Board as to facts are to govern and control in any appeal to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

The purpose of an investigating resolution would not be to get at, or to consider possible defects in, or amendments to, the Wagner Act itself. This is properly the function of the House Committee on Labor. Even if the act were quite perfect, and substantially fair as regards all parties considered from the standpoint of the general public welfare, and the promotion of industrial peace, there would still arise the question as to how the act had been administered by the National Labor Relations Board. This is also a question which the Committee on Labor might handle if it so desired.

Of course, I realize the difficulties of a new Board endeavoring to organize on a national basis, especially in a field as difficult as labor conflict throughout all the industries—with a few exceptions—and giving attention to major items of importance in the entire United States.

But the charge and criticism of recent years has been directed chiefly against the Board itself, and its employees, and mainly at the point of their nonjudicial and prejudicial attitude toward employers indiscriminately. It is even claimed that the Board and its various employees have used the opportunities and authority of their official position to promote the organizing efforts of the C. I. O. against pre-existing unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

And I think it is highly important that an investigation be had, either by the Committee on Labor, acting upon its own responsibility, or by a special committee of the House, as a result of which the fairness of these criticisms and the actual facts may be ascertained, thereby throwing considerable light upon the proposition as to whether or not the act itself should be amended.

If the House Committee on Labor should promptly open hearings on proposed amendments to the Wagner Act, in which full consideration is given to alleged defects in the law and maladministration by the Board, the demand for investigation by special committee would probably lighten up. Of course, as to what the Committee on Labor might do is for the determination of the committee itself. I am making no suggestions.

As stated previously, when the National Labor Relations Act was signed by the President he issued a statement covering his interpretation of its objective and of the functions of the National Labor Relations Board. Here is what the President said:

> This act defines, as a part of our substantive law, the right of self-organization of employees in industry for the purpose of collective bargaining and provides methods by which the Government can safeguard that legal right. It establishes a National Labor Relations Board to hear and determine cases in which it is charged that this legal right is abridged or denied and to hold fair elections to ascertain who are the chosen representatives of employees.
> A better relationship between labor and management is the high purpose of this act. By assuring the employees the right of collective bargaining it fosters the development of the employment contract on a sound equitable basis. By providing an orderly procedure for determining who is entitled to represent the employees, it aims to remove one of the chief causes of wasteful economic strife. By preventing practices which tend to destroy the independence it seeks for every worker within its scope that freedom of choice and action which is justly his.
> The National Labor Relations Board will be an independent quasi-judicial body. It should be clearly understood that it will not act as mediator or conciliator in labor disputes. The function of mediation remains, under this act, the duty of the Secretary of Labor and of the Conciliation Service of the Department of Labor. It is important that the judicial function and the mediation function should not be confused. Compromise, the essence of mediation, has no place in the interpretation and enforcement of the law.
> This act, defining rights, the enforcement of which is recognized by the Congress to be necessary as both an act of common justice and economic advance, must not be misinterpreted. It may eventually eliminate one major cause of labor disputes, but it will not stop all labor disputes. Accepted by management, labor, and the public with a sense of sober responsibility and of willing cooperation, however, it should serve as an important step toward the achievement of just and peaceful labor relations in industry.

It is my opinion that the objectives have not been realized, and that the functions of the Board have been maladministered by its members and their employees. However, this is simply my own impression, and it would appear to me that a fair and impartial investigation by a committee of the House of Representatives, with its facilities for investigation, could very easily ascertain whether the charges have any basis or are justified.

And now it may be well to state some of these specific criticisms, which are in increasing volume being made throughout the country, as regards the operations of the Labor Board. These criticisms are in such volume and are so numerous and diverse, that in order to clarify them and at the same time to emphasize the necessity of the proposed investigation, I think they should be analyzed and grouped.

As I have endeavored to study the field, it seems to me the criticisms boil down somewhat as follows:

(1) Against the Board itself and its membership:

A. That it and they are prejudiced against the employers.

B. That it and they, by their activity and decisions, display and evidence partiality in favor of one type of union organization as against another.

C. That it and they are avowedly hostile to what is called an "independent union," regardless of the fact as to whether or not such union is dominated by or organized through pressure by the employer.

D. That it and they, by their public announcements, do not display a correct or respectful attitude toward courts and the decisions of the courts.

(2) That in the existing set-up of regional offices and directors the Board, through its employees:

A. In certain areas actively fosters and promotes C. I. O. organization.

B. Allows or permits its employees to attend organization meetings and to advocate strikes and other methods as a means of promoting union organization.

C. Actively collaborate with C. I. O. organizers, not only in the preparation of complaints to be filed before the Board itself but in the creating of incidents and situations which, in the opinion of the Board's attorneys and employees, would be sufficient proof to justify the decision of the Board adverse to the particular employer.

D. That in the conduct of hearings the attorneys and employees of the Board do not exhibit a fair and impartial attitude, but are partisan, arbitrary, and prejudiced against the respondent employers, and particularly also against independent unions, or attorneys and others representing them.

E. That it is the manifest policy of the trial examiner and attorneys of the Board, after a case is closed, and in connection with the work of preparing a report and recommended findings, to search the record for items of supposed evidence which would justify a ruling adverse to the employer, and to entirely ignore in general the weight of evidence to the contrary.

F. The regional directors are frequently engaged in politics in their localities, and are zealous in so using their authority as to influence and compel political activities—satsfactory to them—on the part of union leaders and others; and even in the case of the prospect of consideration by Congress of amendments to the National Labor Relations Act these regional offices and their employees are zealous in suggesting and promoting resolutions of protest and such political conflict and activities among union leaders in the endeavor to discredit the movement for amendment, and to prevent consideration by the Congress on the merits of such suggestions.

While incidents could be cited which would tend to justify criticisms of the nature just outlined, it would seem to me that they should not be considered as of any very great importance at the present time. It seems to me that if an investigation by a special committee should be authorized by the House, it goes without saying that it should be fair and impartial and in the effort to seek the truth, realizing the manifest difficulties under which the Board has had to act. On the other hand, I feel sure that it is proper that I should suggest—largely from the standpoint of an endeavor to show the probable cause—a number of incidents in various proceedings throughout the country where, in the public press and otherwise, illustrations appear of rather flagrant conduct on the part of trial examiners and Board attorneys in the badgering of witnesses and in the effort to prevent attorneys for respondents from making proper records. We have all read about the long protracted Wierton Steel case, the Ford Motor case, the Electric Boat case, the Fansteel case, and numerous others.

Equally, we are all familiar with political speeches and activities in our own localities on the part of regional directors and their employees. As regards members of the Board, of this—and especially as regards their attitude of indicating prejudice against employers, also against courts—we need but to cite a few instances shown by releases of various speeches and addresses by members of the Board and their employees.

And, finally, as a part of the investigation, it would seem to me there is a very considerable field to cover in ascertaining who these employees of the Board are, and what their background and experience or prejudices may be, and what general political trends they may be seeking to serve.

The pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD throughout the last 2 years contain sufficient claims or statements and criticism by Members of Congress to indicate how justifiable a general investigation of the members of the Board itself, and all their employees and all their activities is.

And an investigation of the facts and details as narrated by the Board itself in their own annual reports will show a field of investigation which it seems to me is necessary in the effort to determine whether or not the things they have been doing, and the methods which they have used have been in any sense those expected of them by Congress and granted to them by the National Labor Relations Act itself. The President said:

> It should be clearly understood that it—the Board—will not act as mediator or conciliator in labor disputes; compromise, the essence of mediation, has no place in the interpretation and enforcement of the law.

I make bold to say a major portion of the work of this Board has been directed at forcing settlements and the granting of union recognition by employers who, subject to the threat of the expense, publicity, and disruptions of business by Labor Board proceedings, have seen fit to yield to the demands of the employees of the Board rather than to subject themselves to the vicissitudes of a proceeding, or to such other industrial conflict as is threatened them, even by the employees of the Board, in the event they do not yield. The various statistics of the Board, shown by their annual reports, show how numerous these compromises and adjustments have been.

If this Board has been impartial in its enforcement of the act, and if its results have been in the public welfare and toward peaceful industry, an investigation would present an opportunity for the Board and its members to clear up the many doubts and criticisms which are being so constantly presented to us.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question.

Mr. COX. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FISH. I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows any reason why proper consideration and proper amendments of the National Labor Relations Act should be blocked in the committees of the House?

Mr. COX. None whatever, sir. I am not charging that any committee of the House is blocking consideration of such amendments, but I do join with others in declaring that there is great need for amendment to the law and that they ought to come without further delay.

Mr. FISH. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not true that William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, has stated that the actions of the Board were unfair and prejudicial to the interests of the American Federation of Labor?

Mr. COX. I am not prepared to make answer one way or the other to the gentleman's question. I may say, however, that it is not necessary that I consult what Mr. Green may have said with regard to the behavior of the Board for me to know that their performances have been shameful. In other words, if anyone wants a true picture of that Board, let him read the releases they have given, the reports that the Board have made, the speeches that members have made, the orders they have issued, the decisions they have rendered; and if he is not prepared to admit that they are plain highjackers then I shall have serious concern as to the state of his health. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. FISH. I am sure the gentleman will agree with me that employers of labor who have also claimed that this Board has been discriminatory and unjust in its dealings have a right, through their spokesmen, to be heard and propose proper and adequate amendments. I am sure the gentleman will agree that there will be no restoration of business confidence in America until this act is properly modified.

Mr. COX. Answering the gentleman, let me say that I feel that some forum ought to be set up where complaining parties might have the right to be heard. Will the gentleman not accept that as my answer to his question?

Mr. FISH. One more question. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the headlines in this afternoon's paper, which are to the effect that peace talks have been indefinitely postponed by labor. It goes on to say that C. I. O. President John L. Lewis announced today that resumption of peace conferences between the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L. have been postponed indefinitely because of the Senate hearings on the Labor Act amendment to begin next Tuesday.

I ask the gentleman, in view of the fact that the Senate is to take up consideration of this issue, if there is any reason why the Rules Committee should not report out the Anderson resolution for investigation?

Mr. COX. I refer the gentleman to the remarks I have just made and shall ask him to accept them as my answer to the question he now propounds.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPARKMAN). Under the special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE FIFTY MILLION DOLLAR DRY EDIBLE BEAN INDUSTRY

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, in the States of Michigan, California, New York and Nebraska, Minnesota and Oregon, Idaho and Kansas, Montana and New Mexico, Vermont and Wisconsin, Colorado and Maine, and Wyoming and Arizona we are growing the principal portion of the dry edible beans produced in the United States. In many States of the South, however, we find the production of the delicious black-eyed pea which is consumed in both the green and dried form.

LOCATION OF PRODUCTION

In the classification we find among others, the pea and medium white beans, the pintos, the great northerns, standard limas, baby limas, red kidneys, pinks, black eyes, and California small whites. Approximately 90 percent of pea beans, the most important commercial class, are grown in Michigan. Pintos are grown mainly in Colorado and New Mexico. About 58 percent of great northerns are produced in Idaho, with Wyoming, Montana, Nebraska averaging, respectively, 21, 14, and 6 percent of great northern production. With the exception of red kidneys most of the other named commercial varieties are grown in California and we find New York, Michigan, and California averaging 56, 32, and 9 percent, respectively, of red kidney production.

METHOD OF MARKETING

Most of the dry beans are sold through established trade outlets, from grower to consumer, and usually on fairly uniform grade bases. We find that in the principal bean-producing States fairly large numbers of growers and dealers belong to their respective cooperative and marketing organizations. The associations and Mr. Reed K. Pond, economist of the general crops section, United States Department of Agriculture, and Mr. K. T. Wright, of the Michigan State College, and Mr. William P. Smith, of Washington, D. C., have been very helpful in furnishing information contained in this presentation and in preparing publications for reference of those who are interested in obtaining data on this $50,000,000 industry.

BEANS AND SUGAR BEETS

To many of the Members of the House it will be of interest to know that a very high proportion of the dry edible beans are grown in States which constitute important sugar-beet areas. To a great extent the production of beans can be substituted for sugar beets and in turn sugar beets for beans. Therefore, those who are interested in the production and marketing problems of sugar beets are certain to be concerned about the conditions which govern the production, processing, and marketing of dry beans. Out of an average—5-year, 1932–36—crop of beans of 12,179,000 bags Colorado produced 1,327,000 bags and California 3,547,000 bags and Michigan 5,374,000 bags. In the production of beet sugar in the year just closed Colorado produced 6,184,596 bags of sugar—100 pounds—and California 6,742,150 bags, and Michigan 3,427,364 bags. We also find that Utah, Idaho, Oregon, Montana, Nebraska, Minnesota, Iowa, and other States which grow beans contributed considerable sugar beets and beet sugar.

PRICES RECEIVED FOR BEAN CROPS

This is a $50,000,000 industry. In some localities it is one of the most important cash farm crops and has a definite place in rotation. The acreage planted ranges from one and five-tenths million to 2,000,000 acres annually, and on this acreage there are from 12,000,000 to 15,000,000 bags of 100 pounds each produced, practically all for domestic consumption. There are some 20 distinct types, so "beans" are not just "beans." These commercial types are produced in fairly well-defined areas and consumed by persons with a preference for the respective types. Per capita consumption annually is about 10 pounds. The leading type is the white navy or pea bean, 90 percent produced in Michigan, most of the remainder in New York State. This type comprises about one-third of the total supply of all beans and is sold largely to canners and then to consumers in the form of pork and beans or canned baked beans. A total production of 15,839,000 bags of dry edible beans in 1937—being an all-time high production record—followed by another crop of 15,268,000 bags in 1938 has contributed to a price decline which is averaging far below past price levels. The 5-year average, 1927–31, amounted to $5.20 per bag of 100 pounds and for the 5-year average, 1932–36, the price was $3.32, while the 1938 average price was only $2.63. The March 1939 price was only $2.54 with no material improvement indicated in the market at the present time.

FARMERS' MARKETING METHODS

Throughout the bean-producing areas there are located processing plants and elevators. The farmers deliver their beans to the receiving stations and the beans are then processed through having foreign substance, such as dirt, gravel, clay, and defective beans, screened and hand-picked out of the product that is to later move into the channels of commerce. The beans, when threshed, contain stems, pods, pellets of earth, and cracked, misformed, and discolored beans—this foreign substance and imperfectly formed beans the trade calls "dockage." The service of elevators and processing machinery and hand pickers are required to remove the dockage before the beans are ready to pass into the regular bean trade. The elevators and processing equipment are required to be located within both the economic and geographical area of production, as that term is commonly used and understood. It is of prime importance to have the product free of foreign substance, and accordingly strict grading policies are followed.

The State of Michigan, producing approximately 90 percent of the total navy beans grown in the United States—and this type bean constitutes about 93 percent of Michigan's total bean crop—is the only bean-producing State which has adopted standard grades for dry, edible beans differing from the Federal standards of the United States Department of Agriculture. Other bean-producing States have adopted the Federal standards. For example, Michigan navy beans are graded as Choice Hand Picked, Prime Hand Picked, Choice Recleaned, and Fancy Screened Navy Beans.

The official United States standards for beans, effective elsewhere for grading requirements, are United States No. 1, United States No. 2, United States No. 3, and United States Sample Grade. Handbooks of Official United States Standards for Beans are available for the trade. In all cases official inspection certificates, certifying as to the grade of each car of beans shipped, are issued by the agency in charge within each State. Without this official certificate, and, hence, without the grading, the beans could not be moved to the consumptive market. This is absolutely compelled everywhere by the consumer demand, but, in addition, in Michigan, the recent order of the commissioner of agriculture makes such a certificate, as to navy beans, mandatory.

In the first place, beans, unlike other farm products such as cotton, butter, tobacco, and the grains, have only a single grade upon which the price is quoted in the market news and by which the commodity is known. The market price per hundredweight for top-grade beans becomes the basis in arriving at the price of beans paid to the farmers. The consumptive trade buys beans only on the basis of this grading, starting with the top-grade price and scaling the price as the certified grades descend in the quality scale.

The farmers of the State of Michigan are prohibited by the regulations of the State department of agriculture from even moving their picking stock or field-run beans outside the State of Michigan for use by consumers in that condition. Michigan beans are sold all over the eastern half of America, from Canada to the Gulf, and few devices have helped this distribution more than the system of grades established some 40 years ago. Buyers have learned they can rely on the grading maintaining a high class of beans in the market. The Michigan State Agricultural Department maintains a system of inspection which is so rigidly enforced that field-run beans cannot get into the channels of interstate commerce. In view of the competition of beans from the several States in the trading market it is clear to a demonstration, that the grade and, hence, the handpicking, of beans is an essential prerequisite to the farmer's crop having any market at all in the present day and age. Elevators do not buy the beans for their own use. The farmer does not prepare his crop for sale to the elevator but of necessity, must take whatever steps as are necessary to see that the quality and type of bean shipped meets the demand of the consuming trade. For this work in preparing the crop, the farmer must pay.

The operations are performed by the elevator on behalf of the farmer—for his account—at his expense. This often occurs in an elevator in which the actual bean grower is a part owner. The beans, we may say, are prepared for the market in their raw and natural state and the proportion of the product which moves beyond the elevator screens and the hands of the pickers, is not changed in form or substance. This is a physical condition which all House Members from bean-producing States should consider in the light of recent rulings which have been made by the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division.

AMENDMENTS NECESSARY TO WAGE AND HOUR ACT

For the purpose of assisting House Members to get a grasp of discriminatory rulings which have been made against bean growers, and in my opinion in violation of the intents and purposes of the Wage and Hour Act, I wish to submit the following information which deals specifically with the Michigan situation. By using this formula other Members of the House can inform themselves with reference to their own State's bean industry:

Quotations from page 15 of Memorandum Submitted by the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division to Senator THOMAS, Chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, in the Senate as a Report on S. 2008:

"In general the application of the minimum wage rates to employers engaged in such operations (i. e., agricultural industries) will not decrease the price paid the farmer for his produce."

This broad statement is not applicable to the dry edible bean industry, where the amount paid for handpicking or sorting the beans to standard commercial grades required for marketing is directly deducted from the price paid the farmer for his beans, delivered by him in "thresher run" condition.

But the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division further says:

"Even if most of the increased cost were theoretically to be deducted from the price paid the farmer, the proportion of the increased cost to total cost is so minute that it could not be practically translated into a lower price to the farmer per unit expressed in normal fractions of a cent."

In the dry edible bean industry it does not require the use of fractions to show the lower price the farmer will receive for his beans.

Recently posted farm price for pea or navy beans in Michigan and New York State, $1.70.

But this price is for choice hand picked, and the beans are delivered by the farmer in "thresher run" or "field run" condition. This means they have a certain percentage of culls which must be sorted out before the beans can enter the consuming market.

This percentage of culls, known as "pickage," may run from 2 percent to 10, 15, or 20 percent, depending upon the weather during the growing season and harvesting. In Michigan in 1936 it averaged 10 percent for the entire State.

Women bean pickers are paid 7 cents per pound for the culls they pick out, and this amount is deducted from the price paid the farmer. That is, if his beans have 10 pounds of culls per hundredweight, the sum of 10 times 7 cents, or 70 cents, will be deducted from the posted farm price, and he will receive $1.

Marketing specialists of the economics department, Michigan State College, after careful study, have computed that application of the minimum-wage provisions to these bean pickers will have the following results:

If required to pay 25 cents per hour, the elevator must deduct 9.6 cents per pound of culls. On a 10-pound pick this means the farmer will have deducted the sum of 96 cents per hundredweight, and will receive 74 cents.

If required to pay 30 cents per hour, the elevator must deduct 11.5 cents per pound of culls. On a 10-pound pick this means the farmer will have deducted the sum of $1.15 per hundredweight, and will receive 55 cents.

If required to pay 40 cents per hour, the elevator must deduct 15.4 cents per pound of culls. On a 10-pound pick this means the farmer will have deducted the sum of $1.54 per hundredweight, and will receive 16 cents.

THE LAW, REGULATIONS, AND LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

The Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 provides in section 13:

"(a) The provisions of sections 6 and 7 shall not apply with respect—

* * * * * * *

(10) to any individual employed within the area of production (as defined by the Administrator), engaged in handling, packing, storing, ginning, compressing, pasteurizing, drying, preparing in their raw or natural state, or canning of agricultural or horticultural commodities for market, or in making cheese or butter or other dairy products."

Under authority of the above congressional direction to define the "area of production," the Administrator on October 20, 1938, issued part 536 of his regulations, which, insofar as pertinent here, provide:

"SEC. 536.2. 'Area of production' as used in section 13 (a) (10) of the Fair Labor Standards Act: An individual shall be regarded as employed in the 'area of production' within the meaning of section 13 (a) (10) in handling, packing, storing, ginning, compressing, pasteurizing, drying, preparing in their raw or natural state, or canning of agricultural or horticultural commodities for market, or in making cheese or butter or other dairy products.

* * * * * * *

"(b) If the agricultural or horticultural commodities are obtained by the establishment where he is employed from farms in the immediate locality and the number of employees in such establishment does not exceed seven."

In the first place, it must be conceded by all concerned that there is no basis provided anywhere in the act for that portion of the above-quoted regulation limiting application of the exemption to establishments within the "area of production" which have not in excess of seven employees.

The fallacy of such a numerical restriction is well illustrated by this exact proceeding. The testimony at the public hearing showed numerous instances wherein there were from 5 to 10 or more elevators located within a radius of 10 miles and all drawing beans to some extent from that single area. None of them employed as few as seven individuals in picking beans; but assuming one of them did, what possible justification is there in law, equity, or reason to say that such elevator is within the area of bean production, while the elevator located across the street, perhaps, or next door, but having eight employees, is outside the area of production? The mere statement of the question is itself sufficient to show the answer; any argument is wholly specious. Obviously, the Administrator has no power, under the direction given him by Congress, to alter, amend, or render meaningless the statutory provisions. But this certainly is what he has done here, for the "area of production" of agricultural commodities patently has no reference to number of employees. An executive officer cannot write into a statute something which is not there.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. Is the gentleman familiar with the so-called Barden amendments to the Wage Hour Act?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am referring only to the amendments offered by the Labor Committee.

Mr. HAWKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. I have seen the Barden amendments, and they will correct this situation almost entirely. What applies to beans, I am sure the gentleman from Michigan will agree with me, applies to every farm product that comes within the provisions of this act?

Mr. CRAWFORD. And particularly those farm products which are passed from the processing plant to the consumer's table without material change in form.

Mr. HAWKS. And the farmer is the one who is going to suffer the most?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Exactly.

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of the special orders today, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of the address by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of the address by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GRISWOLD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes at the conclusion of the address by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GRISWOLD].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order previously entered, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

T. V. A. VINDICATED

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain data which I have had prepared.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, at last the T. V. A. has been vindicated.

The Joint Committee Investigating the Tennessee Valley Authority, after 9 months of critical scrutiny, has filed its report, giving the T. V. A. a clean bill of health.

Unfortunately three minority members of the committee, Senator JAMES J. DAVIS, of Pennsylvania, Representative CHARLES A. WOLVERTON, of New Jersey, and Representative THOMAS A. JENKINS, of Ohio have filed a minority report, which attacks the T. V. A. yardstick. It is principally a rehash of the propaganda that has been spread by private power interests and holding-company propagandists ever since the Tennessee Valley Authority was created.

It is even charged by certain news writers that this minority report was prepared by a utility ghost writer. Whether that is true or not, I do not know, but it certainly sounds like it.

Its attack on the T. V. A. yardstick ought to carry the heading "The Hand of Esau and the Voice of Jacob." From this minority report it is plain that these gentlemen would destroy this yardstick and deliver to the Power Trust the birthright, not only of the people of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Ohio, but that of all the people of the entire United States who have to pay electric light and power bills, now and for generations to come.

Let me repeat what I have said before: The T. V. A. is the greatest development of ancient or modern times. Its yardstick is a golden wand for the protection of the electric light and power consumers in every State of this Union.

That is the reason the Power Trust wants to get rid of it; it is showing the American people what electricity is really worth, and by its very example is forcing reductions of light and power rates in every community in America.

It is saving the American people now $625,000,000 a year on their light and power bills, which is more than twice the amount of all the money expended, or to be expended, in the construction and development of the T. V. A.

Here is the proof of that statement: In 1932, the year before the Tennessee Valley Authority was created, the American people used 62,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity for which they paid $1,803,000,000.

In 1933 the Tennessee Valley Authority was created, and its yardstick rates were promulgated. The Power Trust went into a frenzy of excitement. For the first time in history a yardstick had been established to show the people of this country what electricity is really worth. The people began to demand relief, with the result that rates were gradually forced down.

In 1937 the American people used 99,446,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity for which they paid $2,229,922,000. Under the rates paid by them for the 62,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours in 1932 the cost of this 99,446,000,000 kilowatt-hours would have been $2,854,000,000—or $625,000,000 more than they actually paid.

This saving of $625,000,000 a year was brought about by the rate reductions for which the T. V. A. yardstick is more responsible than all other influences combined.

At the rates paid in 1937 these 62,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours which cost the American people $1,803,000,000 in 1932 would have cost only $1,393,410,000, or $410,000,000 less. What a pity we could not have had a T. V. A. yardstick back in those days.

If there had been no increase in consumption, the rate reductions brought about by this yardstick and its influence would have saved the American people $410,000,000 a year on their light and power bills in 1932.

I am breaking these savings down by States in order that the people in every State in this Union may understand what the T. V. A. is doing for them. I hope everyone who reads this RECORD will scan these figures carefully and see just what these reductions mean to him. Then he can understand why the Power Trust is willing to spend millions of dollars annually for propaganda purposes and for campaign expenses of subservient politicians in order to try to destroy the T. V. A. yardstick—the greatest weapon ever placed in the hands of the American people for their protection against a ruthless, greedy monopoly that reaches into every home and every business establishment that uses electric power, and levies a tax in the form of overcharges that amounts, even now, after all these reductions, to approximately $1,000,000,000 a year.

As I said, the electric consumers of this country save $625,000,000 a year on their light and power bills. I am breaking that down by States in a table which I am inserting at this point:

Electric rate savings, 1937, by States

Alabama	$8,350,000
Arizona	1,640,000
Arkansas	3,740,000
California	36,400,000
Colorado	5,500,000

Vermont	1,315,000
Virginia	2,640,000
Washington	7,900,000
West Virginia	7,215,000
Wisconsin	17,750,000
Wyoming	515,000
Total	625,000,000

These are the amounts saved on their electric light and power bills by the people of each State during the year 1937, as compared with the amounts they would have paid under the rates in effect in 1932—the year before the T. V. A. was created.

No wonder the Power Trust is trying to destroy the T. V. A. yardstick.

I have been surprised at the attacks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] on this yardstick, which is doing more for the people of Ohio than any other one thing that has been done by this Government in his day and mine.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio for a question.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman surely cannot claim, without regard to any iniquities that the power people might practice——

Mr. RANKIN. I yielded for a question. I do not yield for a speech.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. All right; the gentleman surely cannot claim that anything that has been done in the T. V. A. has reflected itself yet in the power rates in the State of Ohio.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I have just showed that. You did not have any power-rate reductions until the T. V. A. was created and its yardstick rates put into effect and published throughout the country.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield a little further there?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman is a great power expert. Is it not true that the power rates in every corner of the United States have been gradually coming down in the last few years?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; ever since the T. V. A. was created and its yardstick rates promulgated; up to that time they had not.

At this point I am inserting a table showing the number of kilowatt-hours of electricity used in each State in 1937, the amount paid for it, and the amount of overcharges according to the T. V. A. rates, the Tacoma, Washington rates, and the Ontario, Canada rates. Even with all the reductions that have been made in light and power rates since the creation of the T. V. A., you will note from this table that the American people are still overcharged from $920,973,700 under the T. V. A. rates, to $1,172,612,900 under the Ontario rates.

The table referred to follows:

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If the gentleman will permit just one other question: If on cross-examination I made the principal T. V. A. power man state that there was no such thing as a T. V. A. yardstick, then what would the gentleman say about all these speeches he has been making about the T. V. A. yardstick when they admit themselves that there is no such thing?

Mr. RANKIN. I do not know what the witness may have admitted, but I do know that there is a yardstick, and we are using it in the T. V. A. area and it is going to spread to Ohio, and all over Ohio, and all over the whole country. It will save the people of Ohio, in the purchase of this power for all purposes, $53,839,300 a year. That is the amount the people of Ohio were overcharged for electricity during the year 1937 as the table which I have just inserted will show. That is according to the T. V. A. rates. According to the Ontario rates they were overcharged $72,866,000.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. But that is just the same as saying that if you could raise oranges in Ohio at the same cost you raise them in Florida, you could have them cheaper.

Let me ask the gentleman one further question. Is it not true that practically every town in the T. V. A. territory has a different rate?

Mr. RANKIN. No.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Do not many of the towns down there that get power from the T. V. A. have different rates, and therefore how can you have a yardstick?

Mr. RANKIN. No; that is where "the gentleman has misinformed himself incorrectly," as the darkey said.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The record shows they do.

Mr. RANKIN. The record does not show anything of the kind.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Then we disagree, do we not?

Mr. RANKIN. Certainly; and if the gentleman had come to me I would have shown him the facts, but the trouble is this ghost writer or someone else has evidently misled the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me right there?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I did not intend to stop the gentleman in his discourse about the ghost writer, but if the gentleman from now on ever wants to tell the truth, he would have to say that no ghost writer or anybody else wrote that report except Mr. CHARLES WOLVERTON, of New Jersey; Mr. JAMES J. DAVIS, of Pennsylvania; and myself. That is the truth, and if the gentleman makes any other statement, he makes it with the knowledge that that is the truth.

Mr. RANKIN. If you gentlemen wrote that report, with as little as you know about the subject, then I am not surprised at these errors, because I do not know of three men who apparently know less about the power question than the three gentlemen he has named, judging from their utterances on the floor.

I am not charging that a ghost writer wrote that minority report, but it certainly sounds like it. It is the same propaganda and in the same verbiage that has been spread by the friends of the Power Trust ever since the T. V. A. was first created.

Now, let us get back to this question of the T. V. A. and the different rates at home and elsewhere.

I invite everyone who hears me or reads this RECORD to send to the Federal Power Commission in Washington and get a copy of the electric rates, one for Mississippi, one for Pennsylvania, and one for Ohio, and other States, at a cost of only 10 cents each, and figure these rate comparisons out for himself. He will find that, based upon the rates in his home town or community, the overcharges are at least as great as these tables indicate. Even one of those Power Trust professors, who had been teaching in Ohio during the Harding-Coolidge-Hoover regime and was writing schoolbooks for the State of Ohio, which the gentleman possibly studied if he had not got out of school by that time—even one of those Power Trust professors could figure these comparisons out and show that the people of Ohio are overcharged every year that rolls around, according to the T. V. A. rates, $53,839,000. Yes; even a school child can do it.

Now, I am going to insert a table showing the overcharges to residential consumers by States.

For instance, we will take the home State of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], who signed this minority report. You will note there are 1,437,395 residential consumers of electricity in the State of Ohio, and that during the year 1937 they used 1,140,613,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy. That was an average of 66 kilowatt-hours a month, which cost a consumer in Ohio on an average $2.94 a month. Under the T. V. A. rates it would have cost $1.82, or a difference of $1.12 a month, or an annual difference of more than $18,000,000, whereas the table I am inserting shows an annual overcharge of only $15,932,000.

I make this comparison to show you that the figures contained in this table are extremely conservative.

Cleveland, Ohio, has one of the finest municipally owned and operated power systems in America. In Cleveland this municipally owned and operated system sells 66 kilowatt-hours of electricity a month to residential consumers for $1.92, or $1.02 a month less than is charged by the private power companies, on an average, throughout the State. If the residential consumers throughout the State of Ohio received their power at the rates charged by this municipal system in Cleveland, the savings would be more than $17,000,000 a year.

I invite everyone who hears me or who reads this RECORD to send to the Federal Power Commission, Washington, D. C., and get a copy of the Electric Rate Survey for Mississippi, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and for his own State, at a cost of only 10 cents each, and figure these rates out for himself. He will find that based upon the rates in his home town or home community the overcharges are at least as great as these tables indicate.

Even one of those Power Trust professors that the utilities had on their pay roll in Ohio and in other States a few years ago can figure this out and substantiate the overcharges indicated by these tables.

I ask any man with common sense and common honesty to read this table carefully and tell me how the domestic consumers of electricity in his State can continue to bear the enormous burden of these exorbitant overcharges.

Oh, I know the utilities and their spokesmen will come back and raise the question of taxes. Let me call your attention to the fact that the city of Tacoma, Wash., which has its own generating plant and distribution systems, pays more taxes for the amount of power produced and distributed than any private power company in America. Look at these tables and see what the overcharges in your State amount to compared with the Tacoma rates.

The T. V. A. pays 5 percent of its gross earnings to the States in which the dams are located in lieu of taxes, and the municipal plants invariably give to the city in lieu of taxes, either in money or service, more than the taxes amount to if their power were supplied by a private company.

Besides the taxes paid by private power interests for all purposes, including taxes, amount to only about 1 mill a kilowatt-hour. One mill a kilowatt-hour for all the power used last year would amount to $99,000,000, which taken from the overcharges of $1,172,000,000, according to the Ontario rates, would still leave an overcharge of $1,073,000,000.

The gentleman from Ohio said we had different rate schedules for different localities in the T. V. A. area. The only difference in the rates is this——

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. There is a difference then, is there?

Mr. RANKIN. No; there is no difference in the rates, but in the towns that did not own their distribution systems and had to buy them, they pay 1 cent extra a kilowatt-hour up to 100 kilowatt-hours a month to amortize their distribution systems.

That is all the difference there is, and if the gentleman had even made a casual examination, he would have found that out.

But the utilities spokesman always raises the question of taxes. Let me call attention to the fact that the city of Tacoma, Wash., which has its own generating plant and distribution system, pays more taxes for the amount of power produced and distributed than any private power company in America. Any private power company in America can reduce its rates to the Tacoma levels and make a profit if it will get rid of the useless holding company that usually controls it and eliminate the waste and graft. Let us see what the State of Ohio would pay if it had the Tacoma rate. Run down the list and you will find that under the Tacoma rates the people of Ohio are overcharged $69,825,100 a year. Pennsylvania is overcharged $108,000,000 a year and New Jersey is overcharged $53,330,000 a year, according to the Tacoma rates.

In other words, the city of Tacoma, with an enormous overhead, $23,000,000 of investment, a little town of only 110,000 people, is paying more taxes for the amount of power sold than any private power company in America, and sells the power at rates that not only amortize the investment but, if applied in the State of Ohio, would save the people of the State of Ohio $69,000,000 in 1 year and would save the people of other States in proportion. The T. V. A. pays 5 percent of its gross earnings to the States in which these dams are located in lieu of taxes, and municipal plants invariably give to the city in lieu of taxes more than the taxes would amount to if they were supplied by any private power company in America.

Take my own town, the town of Tupelo. We own our distribution system. We are gradually paying it out. The average taxes for all purposes of all power companies amount to only about 1 mill per kilowatt-hour. Last year we used about 10,000,000 kilowatt-hours and paid in lieu of taxes $12,000, more than any power company paid in any town of that size in that part of the country. In addition to that, we have raised the domestic consumption from 35 kilowatt-hours per month on an average in 1932 to 215 kilowatt-hours a month during January of this year. We have also increased the average use of electric refrigerators by residential consumers from 19 percent in 1933 to 90 percent in 1938.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How much of a subsidy did the gentleman's town of Tupelo get?

Mr. RANKIN. It does not get a penny.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How much did it get?

Mr. RANKIN. It did not get a dime.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How much did it get from the R. F. C.?

Mr. RANKIN. It did not get a cent for its electric plant. Tupelo did not get a dime for its power system from anybody except from the taxpayers of Tupelo. Further, I shall show that the coal-mining people in the gentleman's district who are paying these enormous charges could be furnished power at T. V. A. rates, generated by the very coal they are digging from the ground. The Tupelo system made a net profit of $40,000 last year, after paying $12,000 in lieu of taxes, paying all operating expenses, paying interest on its debts, and the installments due on its sinking funds. Not only that but a few years ago we had a cyclone that destroyed a large portion of our distribution system, and we went out and got the money and built it back ourselves, and it did not cost anybody a dime.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; because I want to refer to the gentleman's State of Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. I would like to know where Tupelo is.

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman is that badly behind, his education is very incomplete. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAWKS. But I would like to know where it is. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. RANKIN. Tupelo is my home town in Mississippi, the first one to get T. V. A. power. I thought all the well-informed Members knew that. But I will tell the gentleman where Wisconsin is, it is in the dark. Last year the people of Wisconsin used 2,043,641,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity for which they paid $51,181,600. Under the T. V. A. rates it would have cost them $29,246,300, a saving of $21,935,300. In Tacoma, Wash., under the rate in force in Tacoma, where they paid a higher rate of taxes than the power companies do in Wisconsin, the saving would have been $25,947,100. I suggest that the gentleman do not ask where Tupelo is, but that he ask where Wisconsin is being driven to by the Power Trust, and ask where it is going to end. How can the people of Wisconsin survive under a burden of $25,000,000 of overcharges for electricity every year?

Wisconsin adjoins Ontario. In Ontario the electricity that costs the people of Wisconsin $51,180,600 would have cost $21,692,200, which shows an overcharge to the overburdened people of Wisconsin of $27,489,400 a year.

I promised I would refer to the State of Michigan a moment ago. Under their rates in Michigan, which also adjoins Ontario, the overcharges for electricity in the State of Michigan during 1937 were $51,892,200 according to the Ontario rates, $39,798,400 according to the T. V. A. rates, and $47,566,200 according to the Tacoma rates.

This morning we had men from Massachusetts and Connecticut before the Rivers and Harbors Committee. Some of them seemed to be surprised to learn of the overcharges the people in those States are compelled to pay for electric lights and power. According to the T. V. A. rates, the people in Connecticut are overcharged $18,616,700 a year. According to the Tacoma rates, they are overcharged $22,500,500. According to the Ontario rates, $23,463,500.

The people of Massachusetts last year, according to the T. V. A. rates, were overcharged $44,537,200, and according to the Tacoma rates, where, as I have said, they bear all the burdens and pay all the taxes that any power company pays, the savings in Massachusetts alone would have been $49,439,900. Under the Ontario rates, the savings would have been $53,133,500.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is one group of electric consumers that I do not wish to overlook, and that is the commercial consumers, the merchants, the hotel, restaurant, and filling-station operators, and all others who pay commercial rates for electric lights and power.

I am inserting a table showing the number of commercial consumers in each State, the amount of electricity used, and the overcharges according to the T. V. A. rates, the Tacoma rates, and the Ontario rates.

I wish every merchant, every hotel operator, and every other commercial consumer of electric energy throughout America could read this table and see what an enormous burden of overcharges they have to bear.

The table referred to follows:

If their rates were reduced to the proper levels, these commercial consumers would not only save the enormous amount indicated but they would increase the consumption of electricity, as well as the use of those appliances necessary for the successful operation of their establishments. Now, let us see what happens to the industrial consumers. There were 1,559,888 industrial consumers of electricity in this country during 1937. I am inserting a table showing the number of them in each State, the amount of electricity they consumed, together with the overcharges, according to the T. V. A. rates, the Tacoma rates, and the Ontario rates.

The table referred to follows:

No wonder Canada has an advantage over us from an industrial standpoint. You will note that the industrial consumers in this country pay on an average of twice the rate their competitors have to pay in Ontario.

Did the gentleman from Kentucky arise to ask me a question?

Mr. MAY. Since the gentleman has called on me, I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. RANKIN. I did not call on him, but I shall be glad to answer.

Mr. MAY. I would like to ask the gentleman to explain to the House, if he will, the reason why he did not tell them when he was discussing the Ontario rates in connection with the Minnesota rates and the rates in other States of this country, that Ontario has built up at a loss over the last 10 years $300,000,000, or $30,000,000 a year, that has been subsidized by the Government, and that is why they have such cheap rates up there.

Mr. RANKIN. Do you want to know why I did not tell the House that?

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Because it is not true; that is why.

Mr. MAY. I knew the gentleman would say that.

Mr. RANKIN. Ontario is paying its way. Now, since the gentleman has gone that far, let us look at Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. All right, but before you get to Kentucky——

Mr. RANKIN. I do not yield further. Kentucky used 978,131,000 kilowatt-hours in 1937, and the overcharges according to the T. V. A. rates, were $9,208,600. According to the Tacoma rates, the overcharges in Kentucky were $10,882,300. According to the Ontario rates, they were $13,659,000. Those were the overcharges the people of Kentucky had to pay in 1 year.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I am sorry, but my time is limited.

Mr. MAY. Well, the gentleman ought to yield for just an explanation.

Mr. RANKIN. These are conservative figures.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman give us the figures for the State of Georgia?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I shall be glad to. During the year 1937——

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman let me explain to him why we have these rates in Kentucky and how we meet them?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I already know.

Mr. MAY. We can just have one horse race in Kentucky and get enough money off of Mississippians to pay that excess bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is likely to take a hay ride next year, but it will not be off Mississippi. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, the State of Georgia used 1,550,000,000 kilowatt-hours last year, for which they paid $32,315,300. According to the T. V. A. rates, that was an overcharge of $12,084,000. According to the Tacoma rates, it was an overcharge of $15,251,200. According to the Ontario rates, it was an overcharge of $15,659,900.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I will yield for a question.

Mr. MAY. I just wanted to advise the gentleman that if he will examine the hearings before the House Military Affairs Committee held when the T. V. A. was under consideration in 1935 he will find that the chief engineer for the city of Tacoma testified that the tax rate there was 7 mills per dollar, or $7 per hundred, and that the increase in the tax rate was added to pay the costs of the municipally operated system.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman evidently misunderstood him. I said that Tacoma pays several hundred thousands of dollars in taxes. If the people of Kentucky had got the Tacoma rates last year, even after paying those taxes, if the people of Kentucky had got the Tacoma rate, they would have saved last year $10,882,300.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. I do not feel that the gentleman from Washington can allow that statement to go unchallenged, that the tax rate is 70 mills in Tacoma.

Mr. MAY. I did not say 70.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman did not say 70, he said 7.

Mr. LEAVY. Seven mills per dollar or 70 mills on $10. Our assessment basis, however, is not a full-value-assessment basis; it is from 40 to 50 percent of the value instead of full value.

Mr. MAY. That makes it that much worse.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman explain how much we are being soaked in New York City by the power gang?

Mr. RANKIN. I cannot give the figures for New York City just at this moment, but I will give them for New York State, if the gentleman will allow me to take Pennsylvania first.

In Pennsylvania they use 10,700,000,000 kilowatt-hours, and are overcharged, according to the T. V. A. rates, $88,425,200. According to the Tacoma rates, where they pay these taxes the gentleman from Kentucky talks about, they were overcharged $108,001,000. According to the Ontario rates the people of Pennsylvania were overcharged $110,083,000 in that 1 year.

I submit that, instead of attacking this yardstick which we are using to try to bring justice to the power consumers of America, it behooves every man to study this question and get behind this great movement. Now, you cannot hurt the T. V. A. One of those old farmers down there, when he heard that you gentlemen were attacking the T. V. A., you who are on the minority side, said: "Well, thank God, they can't repeal a dam." [Laughter.]

Those dams will be there when you are dead and gone, and we are going to see to it that you do not take away from the American people the benefits of their operation.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] asked about the overcharges in the State of New York. In 1937 the people in the State of New York used 13,511,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity, for which they paid $292,669,000, or $142,284,900 more than it would have cost them under the T. V. A. rates, and $154,761,400 more than it would have cost them under the Tacoma rates, and $172,833,700 under the Ontario rates.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Now, what county is that I am hearing from?

Mr. SHORT. Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. In just a minute, when I have finished with New York. According to the Ontario rates—and let me remind you that New York is right across the river from Ontario—only the thread of the Niagara River between them. If the people of New York had paid the same rates that are paid on the other side of the river for the same power, if you please, generated in the Niagara River by Niagara water, if they had paid those same rates the people of New York would have saved $172,833,700 in one year.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri for a question.

Mr. SHORT. I merely wanted to say that it seemed to me that the long list of comparative rates the gentleman is quoting means very little.

Mr. RANKIN. It does to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. No; because even the gentleman from Mississippi should know that in a country as vast and diversified as the United States the same uniformity of price is not paid for beans, gasoline, automobiles, potatoes, or even kilowatt-hours.

Mr. RANKIN. I know that those potato growers in the district represented by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] are rich. I know that those sheep growers in his district are rich, I know that those corn farmers are rich, I know that those who milk dairy cows are rich. They can afford to pay these enormous rates, but let me show you what these overcharges in Missouri amount to: The overcharge for electric lights and power in Missouri according to the T. V. A. rates amounted to $24,649,400 in 1937. According to the Tacoma rate the people of Missouri in 1937 were overcharged $28,737,100; and according to the Ontario rates they were overcharged $31,533,200. It would take practically the entire wheat crop of Missouri to pay those overcharges.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. We are trying to save them from the gentleman from Missouri. Instead of supporting us, he is constantly resisting this onward approach of modern progress. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I disagree with the gentleman's position in favor of Government operation of the electric business. I want to ask the gentleman what the solution is. I have recently received hundreds of letters from Mississippi and from Tennessee indicating that by reason of the T. V. A. operations so much taxable property has been taken off the tax rolls that the treasuries of the local communities are about bankrupt.

Mr. RANKIN. If they do not get any more help from the gentleman from Wisconsin than do the power consumers of his own State they might as well save their stamps.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am serious about this.

Mr. RANKIN. I sympathize with the gentleman. There have been a great many such letters from Tennessee and Mississippi written in New York and mailed out to certain people. The answer is, there is not a word of truth in them. The people down there are enjoying the great blessing of cheap electricity, and besides, the gentleman from Wisconsin is about the last man on earth they would call on for help.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. To clear up this question, may I say that it might be all right now while Mississippi and Tennessee knocks at the door and get hand-outs from the Federal Treasury, but what are you going to do after the New Deal has departed from Washington in 1940?

Mr. RANKIN. In 1940 we are going to take the light to Wisconsin and to Ohio. [Laughter.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not think the gentleman wants to answer that profound question in the way he has.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman call that question a profound question?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Then I should decline to yield further.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The people in Tennessee are very serious people, and the officials are about to pass legislation on the very subject that the gentleman from Wisconsin referred to.

Mr. RANKIN. I will answer that.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman cannot dismiss that with a wave of the hand.

Mr. RANKIN. That propaganda has gone all over the country.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It is true just the same.

Mr. RANKIN. Why, the Power Trust has even gone to the State of Washington and tried to get them to put a heavy tax on municipal plants and on cooperative associations so that they could be destroyed. That is what they want to do. It is not the people of Mississippi, and it is not the people of Tennessee or Washington who are asking for this. All they are asking for is that you let them alone and permit this law to be carried out.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ELSTON. The gentleman has stated that Ohio would be benefited if it had the T. V. A. rates. Can the gentleman tell us what the T. V. A. has cost the taxpayers of Ohio to date?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. It has not cost them anything, and will not cost them anything as far as power is concerned.

Mr. ELSTON. Where did the money come from?

Mr. RANKIN. The amount allocated to power will be paid for out of the sale of electricity.

Mr. ELSTON. Do not the taxpayers have to pay the bill?

Mr. RANKIN. As I stated, the amount charged to power will be amortized by the sale of electricity. As I have just explained to the House, the T. V. A. has more than paid for itself in the reduction of light and power rates to the people in every State in the Union. This reduction in 1937 amounted to $625,000,000, of which amount the people of Ohio saved $59,700,000. The people of that State are still overcharged $53,839,300 a year according to the T. V. A. rates, and $72,866,000 according to the Ontario rates.

If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ELSTON] and his colleague [Mr. JENKINS] and all other Members of the Ohio delegation, as well as Members from other States, would join in this movement, instead of criticizing and trying to destroy the T. V. A. yardstick, we could spread these rates throughout the entire State of Ohio, and bring to the people of that proud Commonwealth, as well as to the people of the rest of the country, relief from the overcharges they now have to pay.

Let me repeat, the majority report of the Joint Investigating Committee, headed by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], is a complete vindication of the T. V. A.

I repeat again, that the T. V. A. is the greatest development of all times. It marks the beginning of a new day for the masses of the American people who have heretofore been denied the liberal use of electricity, the greatest natural resource on earth outside of the soil on which we live, and one of the greatest gifts of God to man.

As the old farmer said, "You cannot repeal the dam." The T. V. A. will be there long after these carping critics have passed away and long after the dreams of its founders have been realized in the consummation of a Nation-wide program under which our people will enjoy the glorious blessings of an electrified America. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order heretofore entered, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, those of us who think in terms of realism must be deeply concerned at the results of the recent Gallup breadline poll. When 52 percent of the people of the Nation are either on relief or feel themselves so insecure that they could hold out less than 6 months on their present savings before seeking relief, we have reached a dark era in the Nation's history. For no matter how zealously we may preach the doctrines of true democracy and personal liberty, we know full well that dictatorship and tyranny are bred from the ranks of human insecurity. Where men and women cannot obtain food, clothing, and shelter in sufficient quantities to care for themselves; where they find it impossible to accumulate sufficiently large reserves to provide a safe margin of living for some considerable time in the future, economic security becomes a hollow jest, and continuity of democracy is in danger.

But there is more in the fruits of the Gallup poll than this abstract philosophy. For 6 years our Government has been in the hands of a group of men whose constant proclamation has been their concern for the needy. They have preached early and late their love for the underprivileged, their deeply sentimental attachment for the lowest third. Yet at the end of the better part of a decade of almost incessant social experimentation in the name of human betterment the Nation finds itself no better off than it was at the outset. If anything, the figures indicate that the 6 long years have resulted in the deepening and aggravation of the depression. In spite of N. R. A., A. A. A., S. E. C., T. V. A., C. W. A., P. W. A., and W. P. A., the lot of the average American citizen and his family must be described as desperate. No milder term will do.

Seventeen percent of the people interviewed by the investigators of the American Institute of Public Opinion declared that they were already receiving assistance, either from W. P. A. or direct relief sources. Another 19 percent of those questioned declared themselves just 1 month away from the relief office. Sixteen percent more of those seen informed the investigators that they could maintain themselves for a period not exceeding 6 months if they were suddenly thrown out of work.

To these people the only salvation between disaster and security is their present job. Most of them are convinced that if they were to lose their jobs today finding another to take its place would be a difficult, not to say impossible, achievement. Those over 45 know that the argument of advanced age is all too frequently raised to bar them from all employment. The young men and women under 25 know equally well that their youthful inexperience is no less frequently urged as a reason for barring them. All of us recognize that a job has suddenly become the most prized possession of millions of Americans.

This amazing and staggering insecurity of the people of our Nation cannot be lightly ignored. It presents the most damning indictment conceivable against the workings of the present national administration. It is absurd to speak of the end of the depression when over 20,000,000 people depend upon some form of public assistance to keep body and soul together.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman, of course, has heard the cryptic statement, "We planned it that way"?

Mr. BENDER. Yes; I heard about that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman is pointing out that there has been an increase in unemployment. There are 10,000,000 people unemployed?

Mr. BENDER. I did not state the number. Nobody knows the number. Some say it is 10,000,000, others say it is 12,000,000, while still others say 13,000,000. I do not know. The present administration refuses to have a survey of unemployment made. They are afraid to tell us how many people are out of work.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. At any rate, the gentleman contends the number of unemployed is increasing?

Mr. BENDER. The number of unemployed is either increasing or remaining the same.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman explain, then, why he opposed adequate appropriations for the unemployed?

Mr. BENDER. We did not oppose adequate appropriations for the unemployed. We were in favor of adequate appropriations. We were against the wastefulness, the chicanery, the duplicity, and the excessive spending on the part of these agencies for things that were not essential.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Even if that be true, you took it out on the unemployed.

Mr. BENDER. We did not take it out on the unemployed.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. They are getting nothing.

Mr. BENDER. No one is taking it out on the unemployed. There is $47,000,000 that Colonel Harrington said he had as a cushion in reserve. Now, as I understand, the administration has given in and is agreeing to the $100,000,000 appropriation over on the other side of the Capitol today.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In order to keep the record straight and expose the insincerity of our colleague, the gentleman from New York, let me say that the administration admits that at the peak only 3,000,000 people were employed on W. P. A.

Mr. BENDER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. They also admit, and the American Federation of Labor admits, there are more than 12,000,000 unemployed, so these sob sisters who are continually complaining about taking it out on the unemployed have at no time asked for adequate appropriations to take care of the 9,000,000 who are out of work and who have not been able to contact the W. P. A. pay roll.

Mr. BENDER. The gentleman is absolutely right. In America you cannot possibly live like a decent American citizen on $10 or $15 a week. All this administration has to offer a fellow who is out of a job is a measly $10 or $15 a week on W. P. A., and that is not the kind of thing this country was founded for.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. But they offer that to only 3,000,000 of the 12,000,000 unemployed, and the sob sisters who are always speaking in the Well of the House in favor of the unemployed have never asked appropriations to take care of the 9,000,000 of the 12,000,000 unemployed who have been unable to get on the W. P. A. pay roll.

Mr. BENDER. The gentleman is right.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield, inasmuch as that remark was directed at me?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman from Wisconsin, however, who was complaining that the United States employs only 3,000,000 persons on W. P. A., was opposed even to continuing the employment of those 3,000,000, because he voted against the appropriation to continue their employment. The gentleman wants fewer people on W. P. A.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I voted for W. P. A. appropriations. I want fewer politicians on the pay roll. I want to take the politicians off the W. P. A. pay roll who are not entitled to be on it.

Mr. BENDER. Frankly, the sooner you take a lot of these pap suckers off the pay roll down here in Washington and elsewhere the sooner you are going to have relief from this sort of thing and the sooner you will have regular jobs at regular pay. [Applause.] You cannot have business functioning in this country until you take government out of business. Thomas Jefferson, a man whom both the Republicans and Democrats honor, said that the less government you have the better government you have, or words to that effect; that that government governs best which governs least. I agree with this philosophy. If our Government would take itself out of business and take itself out of everything except those enterprises in which it ought to engage, we would get along a lot better than we are now. We have tried this course of conduct for years. Some of the Republicans tried it before the Democrats tried it. After these many years it has proven a failure, so why not forget it?

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. Going back to the gentleman's statement that a man cannot live on $10 or $15 a week, I wish to point out that the highest wage a W. P. A. worker would draw in my district is $6.50 a week, which is one-tenth of the amount the men draw who are working on the airport in the city of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. BENDER. The people of Tennessee should not tolerate that condition.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. With regard to the money paid to the workers at the airport, let me say that every penny over and above security wages is paid out of the treasury of the city of New York itself. This was explained on the floor of the House during the debate, and the gentleman from Tennessee should now be fully informed on the matter.

Mr. BENDER. What difference does it make if the money comes out of Peter's pocket or Paul's pocket?

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes. These gentlemen have taken a great deal of my time and I want to finish my statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Let me give you this illustration: I recall that a taxi driver once called at the home of a relative. This relative called the Yellow Cab Co. but a green cab drove up in front of the house. The person who called the yellow cab kept looking out of the window and saw the green cab drive up. Finally he stepped out and said to the driver of the green cab, "I did not call you, I called a yellow cab." The driver of the green cab said, "It does not make any difference, Ginsberg owns them both." [Laughter.] And so it is. Irrespective of whether the city of New York, the State of New York, or the Federal Government pays the money, it comes out of the pocket of the taxpayer and the individual is soaked irrespective of where the money comes from.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. The gentleman said, "The people of Tennessee should not submit to it." They do not condone it, they fight against it. [Applause.]

Mr. BENDER. I congratulate the gentleman.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I want to finish this statement, but I yield.

Mr. ELSTON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] if he had any $500,000 buildings presented to his State by W. P. A.

Mr. GORE. I will answer the gentleman in the negative.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BENDER. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. May I say that in Tennessee, and in other States, W. P. A. has left roads, buildings, and other improvements behind them.

Mr. BENDER. It is folly to talk of improving business conditions or of the possibility of raising our national income to $80,000,000,000 annually by methods which have produced nothing but terrible uncertainty in 6 years of trial.

To thinking Americans the loyal support which has been given to the New Deal by the most insecure people in our Nation seems a grim irony. The men and women who are on relief, or whose lives are overshadowed by the harrowing fear of being forced upon relief at any moment, have lined up enthusiastically behind President Roosevelt. To them he sounded the challenging trumpet of the reformer who was going to provide them with all they needed. Let us give the President his due. He moved energetically. He preached eloquent sermons on the more abundant life. But he has failed in his primary objective. Those of our people who live in insecurity but who continue to follow him blindly wherever he leads have been hypnotized by his oratory. They have been bewitched by his promises. But they are not looking at the facts realistically.

Roosevelt has failed them. Every American who loves his fellow men must recognize this failure. He must realize that the major task before our Government today is not political. It is economic. The responsibility which any government assuming public office in our Nation today must accept is the stimulation of industrial recovery. People must be given the assurance that there is work waiting for them; not unreliable, unsteady, temporary work, but regular employment at good wages. To meet this basic requirement of government today, the Roosevelt administration has marshaled theorists, statisticians, doctrinaires. They have worked out no formula for prosperity. Their most charitable critics can claim no more for them than the ability to meet constantly recurring crises with frantic desperation.

The 52 percent of our people who are 6 months away from the bread line or who have already joined its growing ranks have demonstrated long suffering and patience. There are unmistakable signs that they are at long last awakening from their slumber. Today they are beginning to recognize that their futures are tied up inseparably with the future of American business, American commerce, American agriculture. When business declines, insecurity spreads throughout the land. When business prospers, men and women work, save, and turn their faces toward the future with courage.

The Gallup poll has given us cause for reflection. Roosevelt has brought the Nation to the brink of universal insecurity. The Republican Party must be given the opportunity to restore it to the prosperity it deserves. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPARKMAN). Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to insert therein the table prepared by Dr. Goldenweiser and which is referred to in my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

HOW SURPLUS GOLD AND SURPLUS COTTON CAN BE USED TO PROMOTE THE GENERAL WELFARE BY PROVIDING PARITY PAYMENTS TO FARMERS, HELPING TENANTS BECOME HOME OWNERS, PROVIDING ADEQUATE NATIONAL DEFENSE, AND BY ACQUIRING FROM FOREIGN COUNTRIES NEEDED RAW MATERIALS WHICH WE DO NOT HAVE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I asked E. A. Goldenweiser, Director of Research and Statistics of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, to furnish me certain information regarding the total amount of business transactions for the years from 1919 to 1938, inclusive; also the same information relative to demand deposits in banks, the turn-over of these deposits, annual farm income, factory pay roll, and other information.

VELOCITY OF MONEY

It will be noticed in this information, which is inserted herewith, that in 1929, when the amount of bank deposits was smaller than it is now and when the amount of currency outside of banks was $2,000,000,000 less than it is now, that there was twice as much business done in the country as during the year 1938. This was due to the fact that each dollar in demand deposits turned over 26½ times during the year 1929, whereas it turned over slightly more than 13 times during the year 1938.

This computation does not include turn-over of currency, as such figures are not available from any source. It has been estimated, however, by people who have a knowledge of this subject that 10 percent of the business transactions are paid by currency and coin and the other 90 percent by check, an accurate account of which the table discloses.

EVERY TIME DOLLAR PAID TO FARMER WAGE EARNERS ARE BENEFITED A DOLLAR

It is interesting to note that factory pay rolls follow closely the farm income. The people today realize more than ever before that in order to make the wage earners prosperous the farmers must be made prosperous. There is one way that this prosperity can commence, and that is to place added purchasing power in the hands of the farmer. For every dollar that is placed in the farmer's hands, the wage earner will also receive a dollar.

ABNORMAL YEARS IN TABLE

In studying these figures special consideration should be given to the amount of business transactions in New York City in 1928 and 1929, which was an unusual period, and the enormous amounts were caused largely by speculation. The year 1932 was also an unusual year, due to abnormal conditions.

ANNUAL INTEREST BURDEN

Interest payments have remained steady. Approximately $5,000,000,000 a year is paid in interest. If a farmer borrows money when his cotton is worth 20 cents a pound, and he expects to produce cotton with that money for which he will receive 20 cents a pound, he is required to pay twice as much in what he has to pay with if the cotton is reduced in price to 10 cents a pound, and instead of him paying 8 percent interest, he will be required to pay 16 percent interest in what he has to pay with.

FIXED CHARGES BURDENSOME

There are certain fixed charges which can be made less burdensome only by good prices and good wages. If the farmer receives good prices and the wage earner receives good wages, the amount that is paid for these fixed charges is reduced in proportion. I refer particularly to railroad freight and passenger rates; utility services, such as electricity, gas, water, and telephone; interest; and all debts and taxes. If we reduce prices and wages 50 percent, it has the effect of doubling these fixed charges in what the people have to pay with. Therefore it is in the interest of the country that the farmers and wage earners be made prosperous in order that the enormous debts, taxes, and other fixed charges may be paid without reducing the labor of the masses to drudgery.

It is in the interest of those who have so much control over our monetary system to make money high and dear in order that everything else may be relatively cheap, because it gives them greater power and control over the economic system of our country and causes their money to buy more. It is in the interest of those who receive their income from bonds and securities and other fixed charges herein named to keep prices low and wages cheap.

The tables prepared by Dr. Goldenweiser are as follows:

Figures on banking and business statistics

Year	Bank debits	Demand deposits adjusted	Deposit turn-over (annual rate)	Currency outside banks	Farm income	Farm prices	Factory pay rolls (index Nos., 1923–25 average = 100)	Interest payments: National Bureau	Interest payments: U. S. Department of Commerce

Bank debits: These figures are a rough estimate of the annual volume of check payments. They include the charges made to deposits, except interbank deposits, at all commercial banks and thus reflect (1) payments for goods in various stages of production and distribution, (2) payments for services, i. e., wages, salaries, rents, dividends, taxes, etc., (3) payments arising out of financial transactions, such as property transfers and security trading, and (4) mere transfers of funds, as in gifts, in making and repaying loans, and in shifts of deposits between accounts. Demand deposits adjusted: Demand deposits, other than interbank and U. S. Government deposits, less cash items reported as in process of collection. Figures are for call dates as follows: For June through 1927, average of June and December for 1928, and averages of June and December of year indicated and of previous December beginning with 1929. Deposit turn-over: Annual rates of turn-over of deposits, excluding interbank deposits, at all commercial banks. Currency outside banks: Partly estimated.

Farm income: Cash farm income including Government payments published by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics; no figures available for years prior to 1924. Farm prices: Wholesale prices of farm products published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Factory pay rolls: Total wage payments in manufacturing industries published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Interest payments: Index is based on data published by the National Bureau of Economic Research for the years 1919–29 (Simon Kuznets, National Income and Capital Formation, 1919–35, p. 24, National Bureau of Economic Research, 1937) and by the U. S. Department of Commerce for the years 1929–38 (Income in the United States, 1929–37, p. 22, U. S. Department of Commerce, November 1938). These data on interest payments represent part of estimated total national income paid out.

GOVERNMENT OWNS ALL GOLD

Under existing law the title to all gold in the United States, except that held for foreign governments and foreign central banks, is in the Government of the United States. Excluding the gold that is earmarked for foreign banks and foreign governments, the United States Treasury has in its charge and the Government owns today more than $15,000,000,000 in gold. If this gold were to be used as a reserve for the issuance of currency or Government credit on a 40-percent gold base, it is sufficient to support an issue of $37,500,000,000.

INFLATION NOT DESIRED

No one is advocating inflation of the currency or credit. I believe that most of the students of this problem are advocating reasonable expansion, within reasonable limitations, of the currency and credit.

LONG-TIME PROGRAM TO PAY NATIONAL DEBT

It is my belief that we should commence now on a long-time program, one that will probably take 20 years to safely complete, that will cause the Government to eventually liquidate the national debt through the purchase of this debt with the Government's credit and thereby save the taxpayers approximately $1,000,000,000 a year.

GOLD FOR PARITY PAYMENTS AND FARM-TENANT PURCHASE PROGRAM

At this time I believe that Congress should seriously consider setting aside $1,000,000,000 of this gold, or even more, for a farm-tenant purchase program and for parity payments to farmers. The money could be loaned to tenants to become home owners as outlined in a bill which has been introduced by the Honorable MARVIN JONES. The law should not require a down payment of any kind and should be for at least 40 years, at a rate of interest not exceeding 3 percent, and I believe it could safely be done at 2 percent or even less. Such a program would permit several hundred farm tenants to purchase homes the next year, and as they make payments on their loans this money could be used by other tenants to buy homes. The reason that no down payment should necessarily be required is that the property which secures one of these loans will immediately become much more valuable because of the favorable terms of repayment of the mortgage. Therefore the Government will not be in any danger of standing a loss.

CLOUD CAN BE REMOVED FROM GOVERNMENT TITLE TO GOLD

It will be contended that the Government has issued gold certificates to the Federal Reserve banks on this gold. That is true, but it is merely a bookkeeping transaction. Congress can, by the passage of a law containing only a few lines, remove the cloud from the title of this gold caused by the issuance of these so-called gold certificates. All that is needed is for Congress to reimburse the private banks for the $134,000,000 that they have invested in the 12 Federal Reserve banks and to take them over in the public interest. The surplus that would be obtained by such acquisition is about twice the amount of $134,000,000 stock, and all the assets of these banks would become the property of the Government.

I do not advocate the Government going into the banking business, but I do believe that the banks should be compelled to get out of the Government's business—that is, exercising the power of control over the monetary system that sets the price of all goods and services. This great system should be an arm of the Government. As it is, the Board and all of the officials connected with this system receive their pay indirectly—if not directly—from the private banks.

TRADE COTTON FOR NEEDED RAW MATERIALS

We have on hand an enormous cotton supply. The Government has loans on 11,500,000 bales of cotton. Cotton never deteriorates. It will last for thousands of years. For that reason, it should not be destroyed, but something should be done to take a substantial portion of this cotton off the market. There are many raw materials that are needed by the industries in our country in peacetime and in wartime that we do not have, cannot produce, and cannot obtain except from foreign countries. These minerals and raw materials, if obtained, could be stored for future use without deterioration, waste, or loss. Therefore, it occurs to me that we should set aside to the Secretary of State or to some suitable official or commission four or five million bales of this cotton, or at least a large amount to be used over a long period of time to exchange in an orderly way for these different raw materials, and especially minerals that we use and need and do not have. There is no reason that I know of why we should not undertake a program of this kind that would extend over a long period of time.

USE PART OF GOLD FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

We do not know what is going on between other countries of the world and their leaders. The information we receive cannot always be relied upon. We do know that our Nation should be adequately prepared to resist any attack that is made upon it by any country in the world. I am opposed to sending our soldiers to foreign countries to engage in a war, but I am in favor of using all means at our command to properly protect our country at all times and under all conditions if it is attacked. If we were to set aside a billion dollars of this gold for the purposes of national defense, using it to pay a large Army and Navy, including the National Guard and other Reserves, and to build proper and adequate fortifications and instruments of defense, an upturn in business would be caused immediately and we would be accomplishing something worth while for our country, not only now but for the future as well.

STOP ISSUING BONDS WILL HELP COUNTRY

If Congress should cause to be passed a resolution to the effect that no more interest-bearing bonds will be issued during the next 2 years, and that all payments that are necessary to be made by the Government will be made through the issuance of the Government's credit, which may be based upon an adequate gold reserve, our depression would be over.

There is only one way to increase the amount of business transactions in our country and the velocity of money, and that is to put money into circulation to take the place of the enormous demand deposits that are now being hoarded and are not in active use.

CONCLUSION

Summing up, I believe the following should be done:

First. Congress should adopt the policy of not issuing any more bonds or securities of any kind that are interest bearing during the next 2 years.

Second. One billion dollars of gold or more should be set aside to enable tenants to purchase homes on long terms at a low rate of interest and to make parity payments to farmers. This would provide at least two and one-half billion dollars for those purposes and permit several hundred thousand tenants to become home owners and restore prosperity to the farmers through parity price payments.

Third. Set aside a very large amount of our enormous gold supply to be used for national-defense purposes, which is not only needed for national defense but to give people work, thereby reducing unemployment and relieving distress.

Fourth. Set aside several million bales of surplus cotton to be used by the Secretary of State or some other official or commission to exchange for raw materials, and especially minerals that can only be obtained from foreign countries, and which we need and use in this country every day, both in time of peace and in time of war.

Let us put this gold into use. A small part of the gold our Government owns is sufficient to restore prosperity to our people.

Millions of our people want work. They need goods and services. Our country is in need of a well-financed program for adequate national defense. Millions of farmers can become home owners without cost to our Government. A supply of raw materials sufficient to last a quarter of a century, a half century, or longer, which our people need and which can be obtained only from foreign countries, can be acquired.

All these benefits can be obtained by properly using our surplus gold and our surplus cotton.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. PACE. In the bill reported out of the Committee on Military Affairs there is a provision permitting and directing the exchange of surplus agricultural commodities for these necessary war materials.

Mr. PATMAN. To what extent?

Mr. PACE. One hundred million dollars.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I am in agreement with that proposition, providing it means getting these strategic war materials at once, so that we can have them in a comparatively short time, but to me that as a permanent policy I believe to be very unwise, for we ought to begin to produce everything that can possibly be produced in our own land as a measure of national security.

Mr. PATMAN. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman, but some things we have not been able to produce and I have reference to them, and it is not likely that we will be able to produce them in the future.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. PACE. There were two questions I wish to ask the gentleman. How does the gentleman propose to get this money, the extra issue of money, into the hands of the people today who have no purchasing power? What would be the method of getting it out of the United States Treasury, we will say, and into the hands of the man who is in want?

Mr. PATMAN. I think there are many ways of doing that. Of course, one way is through the W. P. A., another P. W. A., but I think if the farmers receive parity prices, and we had an adequate defense program on which to spend the money that should be spent, that most of our people would be employed. I do not think we would need very much of W. P. A. There are many ways by which we can get the money into circulation.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I do not know whether the gentleman saw the picture, but a man was here showing certain changes in our monetary system and he suggested that the Federal Reserve turn over to the Government a sufficient amount of currency to be used exclusively for public works, the W. P. A., and old-age pensions.

Mr. PATMAN. I saw the picture, and it was interesting and instructive. It suggested a fine way to get the money in circulation. The picture is based upon a book, In Defense of Capitalism, written by James H. R. Cromwell and Hugo E. Czerworsky. The picture was made by these gentlemen and is being shown by them to Members of the House and Senate.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is one way to get it out, and easily.

Mr. PATMAN. And in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I insist that this gold should be used for a good and useful purpose and not hoarded.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. LEAVY. I am generally in accord with the gentleman's statement with reference to making use of the tangible gold that we have, a real utility use, but would not every argument that is advanced be equally an argument for silver?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes. We should use both gold and silver.

Mr. LEAVY. We are using silver now.

Mr. PATMAN. Yes. We use both gold and silver. That would include silver, but it just happens that we have such an enormous gold supply. We have over half the gold of the entire world.

Mr. LEAVY. We are now using silver to the extent of $1,700,000,000 in certificates.

Mr. PATMAN. I did not discuss silver since there is so much gold and a sufficient amount for all purposes I have discussed.

Mr. LEAVY. The gentleman would be favorable to making full use of silver at the present time?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes. It should be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GRISWOLD] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include a letter from Mr. James R. Law, mayor of the city of Madison, Wis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PUTTING MEN TO WORK

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago we had under consideration an additional appropriation to the Works Progress Administration of $100,000,000, and before this session is over we shall probably have under consideration additional appropriations for the same purpose. Our average annual appropriation for the W. P. A. over the last 4 years will exceed a billion and a half dollars. It is one of the major items in the building up of our constantly increasing national debt. I do not believe that any Member feels these appropriations can be continued much longer.

THE FALLACY OF BUYING POWER

When the original appropriations were under consideration much was said about increasing the buying power, but when great appropriations were made and no material change in buying power resulted, this argument was dropped. The truth is that we cannot take money from one class, either by borrowing or by taxation, and increase our total buying power. We merely transfer it. Taxes and borrowed money decrease buying power faster than the money so taken can give employment. We cannot create wealth by borrowing and taxation. Labor and the materials which labor produces are our only form of wealth.

MILLIONS OUT OF WORK

The argument for W. P. A. appropriations now comes down to the fact that there are millions of men out of work who must be provided for. The vote of Members in this House on further W. P. A. appropriations seems to be largely determined by the number of unemployed in their district. Legislation is for the present only and we operate in a period of constant emergency.

PROVIDING PRIVATE EMPLOYMENT

The argument is advanced that we must provide work until such time as private employment provides jobs for our unemployed. So far as I know, however, Congress has not introduced or considered any legislation that would take from the private employer the excessive burden placed on him by previous legislation. Congress has refused to consider legislation that would encourage and promote industry and the employer of labor to the end that all men would have employment at reasonable wages. The employer of labor and the industry he represents must mark time until proper legislation releases him to go forward. The unemployed must walk the streets or depend on W. P. A. or relief until such time as industry is allowed to operate at capacity.

THE REMEDY

The rule adopted for the consideration of the last W. P. A. appropriation prevented the introduction of the following amendment which I proposed:

Provided, That the Works Progress Administrator may, in his judgment, use a portion of this appropriation toward the encouragement in private employment of persons carried on the rolls of the Works Progress Administration.

At the first opportunity an amendment in this or other form will be presented. It is an endeavor to place in private employment those now unemployed. In operation it would allow the Works Progress Administrator to pay a portion of the relief cost to the private employer who would find employment for men now on the W. P. A. rolls. It would stimulate employment in industry of every kind. It would put men to work in private employment. It would be the beginning of the transfer to private employment of the men now on the relief rolls. It would reduce the W. P. A. appropriation and be a step toward the return of normal employment. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, in this connection I wish to call your attention to the following letter from Mr. James R. Law, mayor of the city of Madison, Wis., and president of the Wisconsin League of Municipalities:

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR,
Madison, Wis., March 15, 1939.

Mr. PAUL V. BETTERS,
Executive Director, United States Conference of Mayors, Washington, D. C.

DEAR PAUL: In this morning's mail I received a letter from Mayor Hoan with enclosure of recommendations of the United States Conference of Mayors on Senate bill 1265. I read this through very carefully and again, as in former years, I feel that the United States Conference of Mayors has missed an opportunity to be of service to this country. If the roof of my house is leaking, I do not continually year after year repair the damage to the rooms underneath; first I make an effort to repair the leak.

On the last page of your report you say, "It is high time that we cease talking about work-relief needs as a temporary problem of government. Those who face the problem frankly know that relief is and will be a continuing job of society."

I agree with this statement because this was true since our country was formed 150 years ago. We have always met this problem, and I do not suppose anyone has ever starved in this country. The point at issue is, How great a problem is this to be, and do we want to admit that the problem we speak of contemplates the present 10,000,000 of unemployed? If we do, I feel this is an admission of defeat, and if we are to admit this then we must revise our entire mode of living. Our standard of living in this country must be reduced one-half. We cannot support schools, universities, churches, government, and other similar institutions on the basis upon which we are now operating them. We have done this for the past 6 or 7 years by borrowing; we all recognize this borrowing cannot be continued forever. To have done it on a "pay-as-you-go" basis, as you suggest, would have caused a reduction in the standard of living which I mentioned above. However, I do not agree that this is necessary.

This country is not now greatly different than it was in 1925 and 1926 and 1927; and in those years, right here in Madison, conferences used to be held between industrialists and contractors, and at those conferences the work was scheduled so that one group would not compete with the other for the available labor. In other words, there was more work projected than there were men available to perform. In the building industry, with which I was affiliated, men were working Saturday afternoons and Sundays at double pay. Everyone who wanted a job had one. Given the proper encouragement and incentive, millions of our unemployed today can again be employed by private industry. I would not ask the return of boom conditions in 1925, 1926, and 1927, and this would not be necessary.

I recognize the need for aid to the unemployed until this correction in industry is made. I should like to see a paragraph in your report urging Government assistance to business and industry so as to reduce the relief load. So far we have tried to lick the depression without this aid; does it not seem reasonable to devote a couple of years in at least trying the other method? Others are apparently thinking of this. I offer the speech, Stimulation of Private Industry, by Hon. HARRY W. GRISWOLD before the House of Representatives February 23, 1939, and recommend careful reading of this speech.

I would like to see the conference of mayors endorse some such suggestion in their report.

Very truly yours,

JAMES R. LAW.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] had to say about the actions of the National Labor Relations Board. I hope that the Congress of the United States will not adjourn without considering proper amendments and modification of the National Labor Relations Act. It is the duty of the proper committee in this House to hold open hearings. I believe on both sides there are many Members who are convinced that the best way to restore confidence among business elements, if not also with labor, is to amend and make this law workable and fair to all elements of our population; and I predict if they do that, confidence will be partially restored and we will again be on the highway to recovery. It is one of the main stumbling blocks. The great difficulty with the country at the present time is that there is fear and lack of confidence. I hope that the Committee on Labor will agree to open hearings and I hope that the Rules Committee, of which I am a member, will report out next week the Anderson amendment, proposing an investigation of the actions of the National Labor Relations Board, their personnel, their qualifications, and their capacity to carry out the laws and the intent of the Congress to diminish the cause of labor disputes and to promote recovery.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. I think it is generally agreed throughout the country that the National Labor Relations Board has acted as investigator, prosecutor, judge, and jury at the same time, and that very little regard has been given to the established rules of procedure. But does not the gentleman feel that bad as the administration has been, they have been forced to labor under a rather bad law itself that should be amended?

Mr. FISH. I agree thoroughly with the gentleman from Missouri that it is a bad law, an unfair law, and should be amended. Probably the personnel of the Board should be changed.

I would like to know who is blocking consideration of these proposed amendments. I am inclined to believe that word has come down from the White House. I have seen it repeatedly stated by spokesmen of the New Deal that there would be no consideration or modification of the Wagner National Labor Relations Act at this session of Congress. Apparently there is somebody blocking a hearing and action by the House of Representatives, and I assume that it must be on order from the White House. I know it is from his spokesman. It is not only a matter that affects business interests but today's paper reports that the peace conference between the American Federation of Labor on the one side and the C. I. O. on the other has been indefinitely postponed until this matter is considered by the Congress.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. Could the administration possibly be influenced by the $500,000 raised by John L. Lewis from the United Mine Workers of America and contributed to Mr. Roosevelt's campaign fund for reelection in 1936?

Mr. FISH. They apparently have been influenced by that $500,000 for the last few years, and I anticipate that, expecting some more contributions, they will continue to be influenced in that direction.

I also want to say a few words in my limited time regarding the remarks made by Henry L. Stimson, former Republican Secretary of State under the Hoover administration, before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee this morning.

Mr. Stimson, speaking for himself and within his own rights, advocated collective security, economic sanctions, aggressor nation powers, and delegating away from the Congress practically the power to declare war. It is not unusual for Secretaries of State and former Secretaries of State to be obsessed with the idea that they must have all the power to determine our foreign policies; that the Congress is in their way; therefore, the Congress should give up the power to declare war and turn that power over to the President and the Secretary of State.

Mr. Stimson in his remarks does not speak for the Republican Party. [Applause.] I say without fear of contradiction here or elsewhere that there are not two Republicans in the House or in the Senate that agree with the international doctrines of Mr. Stimson. [Applause.] He is an internationalist and an interventionist. He seeks to take away these war-making powers from the Congress and turn them over to the President. He has been repudiated by his former chief, ex-President Herbert Hoover. He has been repudiated constantly by almost every authority in the Republican Party on international affairs. Nevertheless—and this is what I resent—he is being used by the present New Deal administration, he is being produced as exhibit No. 1 to appear before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to uphold the internationalist and interventionist policies of the administration because he is a Republican and has been a former Secretary of State.

I do not believe that the Republicans throughout the country will be misled into believing that he represents in any degree the foreign policies of the Republican Party. But to make sure, let me reiterate them. We believe in our American traditional policies of neutrality, nonintervention, peace, and no entangling alliances.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman indicated that Mr. Stimson was a star witness because he is a Republican. Would not the gentleman more correctly state the facts if he indicated that he was a Republican but that now he is a New Deal Charlie McCarthy?

Mr. FISH. I understand the sentiments and the motives of the gentleman from Wisconsin, and so far as his remarks are directed at the views of Mr. Stimson on international affairs I am thoroughly in accord with him. On domestic policies Mr. Stimson is 100 percent against the New Deal. But he is being used, and he is permitting himself to be used—in fact, he is encouraging the use of his views before the administration committee in the Senate.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. I conclude that the administration is making use of him to influence the rank and file of the Republican Party to believe that maybe, after all, the President is right in his interventionist policies and that Mr. Stimson speaks for the Republican Party. I want to insist, above all, that, outside of Mr. Stimson, Mr. Nicholas Murray Butler, and a few other internationalists who advocated the League of Nations in the past, and who have not changed their minds, and who are still internationalists and interventionists, do not represent the foreign policies of the Republican Party, which seeks to keep us out of all entangling alliances, military or naval commitments, and foreign wars. [Applause.]

ROOSEVELT URGES SOUTH TO COMPETE WITH NORTH

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, on July 5, 1938, President Roosevelt called the South "the Nation's No. 1 economic problem."

On March 31 he urged the South to take itself "out of hock to the North" by establishing its own enterprises with its own capital and by going into competition with the North in dairying, apple culture, and meat and shoe production.

Speaking of noisy milk trains passing his cottage at Warm Springs, Ga., Mr. Roosevelt said:

> That milk and cream for Florida came from Wisconsin and Minnesota and Iowa and Illinois. * * *
> You and I know * * * the [Southern] States can produce perfectly good milk and cream.
> I went * * * to buy some apples. * * * The only ones I could find came from Washington and Oregon.
> I went to buy meat. * * * The only meat I could buy came via Omaha and Kansas City and Chicago.
>
> I wanted * * * a pair of shoes. * * * The only shoes I could buy had been made in Boston or Binghamton, N. Y., or St. Louis. * * *
> I don't believe that the South is so broke that it cannot put its own capital into the establishment of its own enterprises.

On March 29 the President wrote to Senator HARRISON opposing increased tariffs on certain imported vegetable oils competitive with southern oils. He said these increased tariffs would interfere with the reciprocal-trade treaties.

Here was a chance to help the South. Instead the President opposed this measure.

Industrial and agricultural chemists and economic experts know positively that there are many products peculiarly adaptable to the southern soil and climate which, with Government help, would take the place of cotton. These include development of plastics industries; the synthetic-resin industry; southern slash pine for the manufacture of print paper, now imported from Canada; raising of tung nuts for tung oil, now imported from China; cultivation of southern sweetpotatoes for starch, now imported as tapioca; the use of cotton fabric on secondary highways; the use of cotton bagging instead of jute; the production of power alcohol from agricultural raw materials; the reservation of domestic markets for peanuts, peanut oil, and cottonseed oil; and the development of a large number of other noncompetitive crops and industries.

These new crops and new industries are prevented today by the reciprocal-trade policy. There is no reason for the South to compete with northern producers while neglecting these new crops and new industries, which are not competitive with the North and which would not draw factories from the North to southern low-wage areas—as in the case, to a very great extent, of the textile mills of New England.

In other words, the solution of this problem is not to encourage southern production of commodities which the Government is now paying northern producers to limit, but to find new markets and new uses for products which the South can raise without competing with the North. The northern farmer cannot produce the crops peculiar to the South, while the South can produce all of the northern crops. If the South should follow President Roosevelt's advice, it would create the greatest dislocation of agriculture ever experienced in any nation. The inevitable result would be to utterly ruin the northern diversified farmers, and the North would then become the Nation's No. 1 economic problem.

ROOSEVELT WRITES ONE-WAY TICKET FOR SOUTH

Possibly the final and greatest of all New Deal experiments is found in the President's latest attempt to unbalance the economy of a united nation by his advocacy of complete industrial and agricultural self-containment for the South. This has been his goal for the past 6 years. And what are the results?

Before the New Deal "the noisy milk trains from Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Iowa" carried cream, milk, butter, and cheese to our friends and neighbors in the South and returned to the North full laden with cotton, cotton goods, cottonseed oil and cake, peanuts, tobacco, sugar, molasses, oranges and other citrus fruits, petroleum, and scores of other products produced exclusively in the South. Now, under the New Deal experimentation, the noisy milk trains from the North have been silenced. They run no more, for the New Deal has subsidized and financed the South to become self-contained in dairy production. But the Northern States continue to buy more and more products from the South, and the trains run back empty.

The events of the past 6 years under New Deal planning have brought about more than self-sustaining production of corn, pork, beef, and dairy products in the South. In fact, records disclose that surpluses of these products are being produced, and high southern officials boast of trainload shipments to markets of the North in direct competition with northern producers engaged in similar production at a higher cost. The New Deal has succeeded in silencing the "noisy" corn, pork, and beef trains from the North. But the people of the North continue to buy the ever-increasing supply of products from southern producers.

THE SOUTH LURES NORTHERN INDUSTRY

Under extraordinary inducements from Southern States and communities to give free rent, free buildings, no taxes, and low labor costs, industry is being lured away from Northern States. The South now leads in the following industrial fields: Heavy chemicals, pulp and paper, rayon, textiles, tobacco, and petroleum. Two-thirds of all new industrial investments for 1936 and 1937 went to the South. The amount spent south of the Mason and Dixon's line for new industry in those years approximated $186,000,000.

Packing plants, creameries, tire factories, furniture factories, shoe factories, and scores of other lines of industrial activity are springing up over the entire South. Does the President recommend that all industry move south? And does he want only empty trains returning to the South? No parity freight rates can be allowed on one-way empty trains.

Neither North nor South can long survive on a one-way ticket. Planned economy under Government subsidy and regimentation will, in the last analysis, bring ruin to all sections, create trade and other barriers between North and South, and a general disintegration of the Union.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN, Mr. SHANLEY, and Mr. BENDER asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DEROUEN (at the request of Mr. GRIFFITH), for 5 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BOEHNE, for 1 week, on account of business.

To Mr. POLK, for 5 days, on account of important business.

SENATE

THURSDAY, APRIL 6, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. Zebarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal gracious Father, whose presence comforteth like sunshine after rain: Our hearts are burdened with thanksgiving at the thought of all Thy mercies, for the blessings of this mortal life, for health, for reason, for learning, and for love; but, far beyond all thought and thankfulness, is the story of Thy great redemption.

It was no painless travail that brought us to the birth, nor common patience that could bear with us the while, for long-suffering love and the breaking of the eternal heart were necessary to reconcile us to the life to which Thou hast ordained us. And, as we gaze upon the Saviour's cross, whence sorrow and love flow mingled down, bring us back, dear Father, to the things we have neglected, the common tasks and the stern commands of conscience to live the higher, purer life, for our weakness and our need are more than we can bear. Heal us though by pain, save us though by death, and reveal to us Thy glory in the face of the Man of Sorrows, the shadow of whose cross is better than the sun. In His holy name we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, April 4, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

ENFORCEMENT OF THE NARCOTICS AND CUSTOMS LAWS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act of March 28, 1928 (45 Stat. 374), as amended, relating to the advance of funds in connection with the enforcement of acts relating to narcotic drugs, so as to permit such advances in connection with the enforcement of the Marihuana Tax Act of 1937 and to permit advances of funds in connection with the enforcement of the customs laws, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

AGRICULTURAL SURPLUSES AND RESEARCH LABORATORIES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, in reference to the four regional research laboratories, one in each major farm-producing area, to conduct researches into and to develop new scientific, chemical, and technical uses and new and extended markets and outlets for farm commodities and products and byproducts thereof, which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

E. DEVLIN, INC., AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, his report and recommendation concerning the claim of E. Devlin, Inc., against the United States, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Legislature of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to revise the tariff laws of the United States relating to the classification of brushes of the type used in the application of fingernail polish

Whereas the United States Customs Court, first division, in New York City, N. Y., has held that small brushes of the type used in the application of fingernail polish are camel's-hair pencils and not toilet brushes; and

Whereas the tariff on camel's-hair brushes is only 40 percent, while the tariff on toilet brushes is 1 cent per brush plus 50 percent; and

Whereas under this ruling brushes of this type made in Japan can be sold in the United States at 46 cents per gross, duty paid, while such price will not even pay for the materials and labor that go into the making of such brushes in the United States; and

Whereas the amount paid for labor in such industry in the United States is approximately 25 times greater than that paid in Japan; and

Whereas, under the decision of said court, such industry in the United States will be completely ruined; and

Whereas many thousands of United States citizens will be deprived of their jobs; and

Whereas nearly 200 employees of the United States Brush Co. in Omaha, Nebr., alone will lose their jobs: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Nebraska in fifty-third regular session assembled:

1. That this legislature respectfully petitions, memorializes, and urges the Congress of the United States to enact such measures as will correct the objections recited in the preamble of this resolution; and that the tariff laws of the United States be so revised that brushes of the type used in the application of fingernail polish shall be classified as toilet brushes rather than as camel's-hair pencils.

2. That this resolution be spread at large upon the journal of this legislature, and that the clerk of this legislature is hereby ordered and directed forthwith to forward a copy of this resolution, properly authenticated and suitably engrossed, to the President of the United States, to the Vice President of the United States as Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each of the United States Senators and Congressmen representing the State of Nebraska in the Congress, to the end that representatives in the Government and in the Congress of the United States may be advised that this legislature considers as imperative remedial Federal legislation to revise the tariff laws of the United States with respect to the classification of brushes used in the application of fingernail polish.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of New Jersey, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Assembly Concurrent Resolution 1

Whereas the power to tax the devolution of property of decedents is justified as a prerogative of the sovereign States, by whose grace the transfer of estates from decedents to beneficiaries is permitted and controlled; and

Whereas inheritance taxation has for many years been regarded as a necessary State function for the raising of revenue; and

Whereas the revenue derived by this State from the operation of its inheritance-tax laws constitutes an extremely important item in the finances of this State; and

Whereas this State is now faced with the immediate problem of raising approximately $20,000,000 for the support of persons on its relief rolls; and

Whereas during the year 1925 the then Governor of New Jersey and the Governors of several of the other States suggested that efforts be made to persuade the Federal Government to abandon the field of inheritance taxation, so that this source of revenue could be employed by the States to a more beneficial degree; and

Whereas during the same year the then President of the United States advised that such action be taken; and

Whereas the Federal Revenue Act of 1926, through the inclusion therein of a credit provision, was designed as a protection and aid to the States; and

Whereas by the Federal Revenue Acts of 1932, 1934, and 1935 the rates of death duties have been substantially increased, but with no corresponding increase in the credit allowed for inheritance taxes paid to the State; and

Whereas, as a result of the development of Federal legislation, the Federal Government is now collecting annually from estates of New Jersey decedents an amount approximately twice that of inheritance taxes received from the same estates by this State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Assembly of the State of New Jersey (the senate concurring):

1. That the Congress of the United States be urged to combine into one act the several Federal estate-tax acts now prevailing, and that provision be made therein for the allowance, as a credit on account of the Federal estate tax, of an amount equal to the death duties paid to any State or States, said credit to amount to at least 50 percent of the Federal estate tax assessed; and

2. That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Member therein representing the State of New Jersey.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the General Court of Massachusetts, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolution urging Congress to consider and discuss the provisions of the Townsend national recovery plan, so-called, and the provisions of bills of similar import

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts hereby urges the Congress of the United States to forthwith consider the provisions of the Townsend national recovery plan, so-called, and the provisions of bills of similar import, and to subject said provisions to a thorough discussion and open debate by its members; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent forthwith by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the presiding officer of each branch of Congress, and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Common Council of the City of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring an additional appropriation of $150,000,000 for the Works Progress Administration, as requested by the President, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Federal Personnel Association, Washington, D. C., favoring the holding of open hearings on all legislation affecting the Civil Service Classification and Retirement Acts, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Cy Pres Club, National University School of Law, Washington, D. C., favoring the enactment of the bill (S. 1610) to prevent discrimination against graduates of certain schools, and those acquiring their legal education in law offices, in the making of appointments to Government positions the qualifications for which include legal training or legal experience, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the secretary of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, Washington, D. C., transmitting resolutions adopted by the thirty-fourth annual convention of the Congress, March 23–24, 1939, together with a report of its projects committee, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by a meeting of the supervisors of elementary schools in the State of Utah, favoring the enactment of Senate bill 1305 providing Federal aid to education in the States, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by several labor organizations of Juneau, Alaska, protesting against amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of a special committee of Square Deal Lodge, No. 40, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, Huntington, W. Va., protesting against amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Freeport Council, No. 57, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Freeport, Long Island, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of legislation to admit into the United States, outside of existing quotas, 20,000 refugee children, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Fourth General Assembly of the Council of State Governments, Washington, D. C., favoring adherence to the policy of free trade among the States of the Union, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Alabama, praying for the prompt enactment of the so-called Wagner-Van Nuys-Capper antilynching bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I present and ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD without the names and appropriately referred a petition signed by over 2,000 residents of New Jersey and submitted to me by the National Temperance and Prohibition Council.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be received and properly referred, and, without objection, will be printed in the RECORD without the names attached thereto.

To the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

We, the undersigned citizens of Union City and Weehauken, county of Hudson, State of New Jersey, do respectfully petition you to help promote the general welfare of the people of the United States by securing the passage of legislation which will stop, so far as is possible by Federal law, the great advertising campaign for the sale of alcoholic beverages now going on by press and radio.

The States cannot adequately regulate or prohibit the advertising of liquor so long as Congress permits such advertising through the medium of interstate commerce. Therefore we most earnestly urge your assistance in securing this proposed legislation in order that State regulations and laws upon the subject may thereby be made more adequate and effective and that radio advertising of alcoholic beverages may be stopped entirely.

Mr. ASHURST presented petitions of 980 citizens of the State of Arizona, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. ELLENDER presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Louisiana praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. GREEN presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Rhode Island praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

ANNEXATION OF KLAIPĒDA-MEMEL TERRITORY, LITHUANIA

Mr. WAGNER presented a resolution adopted at a mass meeting in New York City held under the auspices of the American Lithuanian Council, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution unanimously adopted at the mass meeting held at the McCaddin Hall in the city of New York under the auspices of the American Lithuanian Council on Sunday, the 26th day of March 1939

Whereas the Government of the United States, backed by the public opinion of the entire Nation, has consistently withheld recognition of the territorial acquisitions or subjugation of free peoples by military invasion or under threats of force, even though veiled by the semblance of formal juridical procedure;

Whereas the present Government of the German Reich has recently, in willful disregard of the sanctity of international treaties, abrogated the Klaipēda-Memel covenant of 1924 and seized Lithuanian territory with the only maritime port of Lithuania and its Lithuanian population;

Whereas this seizure was preceded by a characteristic German interference in the internal affairs of Lithuania and the fomentation of racial antagonisms, and culminated in compelling the Government of Lithuania to surrender the Klaipēda-Memel territory: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we protest and condemn this annexation of the Klaipēda-Memel territory of the Republic of Lithuania by the German Reich; be it further

Resolved, That we pledge our moral and material support to all the efforts of Lithuania in defense of its independence and territories; be it further

Resolved, That we appeal to the Government of the United States to deny recognition to the seizure of the Klaipēda-Memel territory, and to use its good offices in influencing other governments to adopt a similar policy and to render all possible assistance to the Lithuanian Republic against threatened dangers to its sovereign independence; be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the President, Secretary of State, and Members of Congress of the United States of America; to the Governments of Lithuania, Latvia, Estonia, Great Britain, France, Soviet Union, and Poland; to the Secretariat of the League of Nations; and to the press.

ADMISSION OF GERMAN REFUGEE CHILDREN

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Immigration various editorials and letters supporting Senate Joint Resolution 64, to authorize the admission into the United States of a limited number of German refugee children, which I introduced and which is pending in the Committee on Immigration.

There being no objection, the editorials and letters were referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Boston Herald of March 22, 1939]

TO SAVE 10,000 CHILDREN

The heartless sequence of contests which Adolf Hitler has brought to a climax through the extension of his "protection" to the groups which once constituted Czechoslovakia will have its most disastrous effects upon the lives of the children now brought under Nazi rule. Their minds are young enough still to be warped into an ideology which glorifies slavery to the state and the repression and persecution of liberty. Most unfortunate of all are the German children of Jewish parentage who have nothing now to look forward to but a life filled with the terrors which are the lot of the despised and the hunted.

In an effort to alleviate to some small degree the dismal fate of these German children without a future, Mrs. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS, our Republican Congresswoman from Lowell, has introduced, in conjunction with Senator WAGNER, Democrat, of New York, a bill which would permit 10,000 of these children, 14 years of age or younger, to emigrate to this country during the next year. The bill strictly provides that before they may come here, satisfactory assurances must be given that the children will be supported and properly cared for by responsible citizens or private agencies. Financial guarantees have already been provided by a large group of people, including Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, of Northampton, and arrangements have been completed for the placement of the children in families throughout the 48 States. About half of the children will be of Jewish parentage and about half of Catholic and Protestant background.

Such a proposal cannot but appeal to the humane instincts of a Nation that is still free, and its nonpartisan character should hasten its enactment by Congress. Mrs. ROGERS, who will always be remembered for her generous service during the war with the Red Cross, and since then the veterans' organizations, is to be commended for having taken the lead once again as a humanitarian. The bill, which has been endorsed by former President Hoover, is backed by the Non-Sectarian Committee for German Refugee Children, of which Cardinal Mundelein, of Chicago, Canon Stokes, of Washington, and Governor Lehman, of New York, are cochairmen. It deserves immediate passage.

[From the St. Petersburg (Fla.) Evening Independent of March 24, 1939]

Germany's conquest of Bohemia, Moravia, and now Memel may hasten hearings on the Wagner-Rogers bill. This measure would allow 20,000 German refugee children to enter the United States in the next 2 years. The proposal is now before the Immigration Committees of each branch of Congress.

The refugee-children bill sponsored by Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER, Democrat, of New York, and Representative EDITH N. ROGERS, Republican, of Massachusetts, would apply only to German children of 14 years of age and under. Since this Government refused to recognize the German conquest of Czechoslovakia, there might be some question of whether refugee children from that area would be considered German, but the bill may be changed to clarify this point. When Germany took over Austria, the Austrian immigration quota (1,413) was officially added to the German (25,957), but so far the combined quota (27,370) has not been augmented by the Czechoslovakia quota (2,874). The annual quota for Lithuania, including Memel, is 386.

In the fiscal year 1937–38 only 17,868 (65 percent) of the 27,370 immigrants allowed under the present German quota were admitted, but the Czechoslovak quota of 2,874 was almost competely filled. Under the present immigration laws, children of American citizens are given preference for entry; also children under 21 of aliens who have been admitted to the United States for permanent residence. Of the 42,494 total immigrants admitted last year (out of a total quota allowance of 153,774), approximately 20,000 were under 21 years of age.

The Wagner-Rogers bill would admit above the quota 10,000 German children a year for 2 years. The bill specifies that satisfactory assurance must be given in each case that the entrant will not become a public charge. The intent is that the children will be chosen by Quakers and by groups cooperating with the Friends and will go into foster homes of the same religious faith as the children. Presumably the homes selected would be scattered throughout the country, so as to avoid undue congestion in particular geographical areas.

Children admitted would be required to have visas from American consuls abroad, who now in practice select and restrict immigration under the quotas; and each consul would be expected to assure himself that the intent of the act had been complied with before issuing a visa.

The children who would be admitted under the Wagner-Rogers bill would be sent in groups, and brothers and sisters would be kept together wherever possible. Since under the provisions of the proposal the children would not compete in the labor market, both the American Federation of Labor and the Congress for Industrial Organizations have endorsed the bill.

Following the intensification of the anti-Jewish measures in Germany last fall, Great Britain admitted 2,800 German refugee children, irrespective of immigration and visa requirements, within 6 weeks and since then has taken more. Several thousand more are being taken care of in the Netherlands. The parents of most of these children will never see them again.

[From the Bluefield (W. Va.) Daily Telegraph]

REFUGEE CHILDREN

The resolution, sponsored by Senator WAGNER to change the immigration laws to permit refugee children of Germany admission to this country, has all good and nothing harmful in its objectives. Under the plan 10,000 children under 14 years of age could enter the country during this year and 10,000 more during the year 1940. Those qualified for entry are children who have resided in "any territory now incorporated in Germany" since January 1, 1933, and for whom "satisfactory assurances are given that (they) will be supported and properly cared for through the action of responsible cititzens or responsible private organizations * * * and * * * will not become public charges." The resolution also provides that "children of every race and creed" are eligible.

There are many thousands of little children in Germany and its new territories whose adult relatives are imprisoned, or who have been slain, despoiled, or driven out, and their admission to this country "would release them," as Senator WAGNER has pointed out, "from the prospect of life without hope and without recourse, and enable them to grow up in an environment where the human spirit may survive and prosper." This is a splendid plea and it comes from a man who himself is German born, but whose life in America is a reflection of the spirit of love for fellow men, compassion for the oppressed, and effort for the welfare of humanity, which brought to America the best citizen material from every land. The coming of these little refugees will not crowd nor inconvenience, nor work a hardship on anyone. These 20,000 children would be but one to two thousand children here. They could be assimulated, cared for, educated, and made into useful men and women and good Americans.

From news items we notice that religious, social, industrial, labor, financial, and many other groups favor the adoption of the resolution. Of course, they do, but if they hadn't said a word, it would not matter, for there is a higher endorsement than can be made by men, for such an action as this will partake of the spirit of the great Father who has "been our dwelling place in all generations."

[From the Portland (Oreg.) Oregonian of March 24, 1939]

LET THEM IN

The proposal expressed in a joint resolution in Congress, to authorize the admission into the United States of a limited number of German refugee children, affords that opportunity for practical benevolence and aid which the heart and conscience of America have been seeking. The lot of those that are politically and racially persecuted is bitter enough for the adult, but for the helpless child it becomes an experience in terror and misery beyond all mature conception. The impulse to aid the refugee children of Germany is broadly humanitarian.

The provisions of the joint resolution should allay any misgivings for the future of the children so admitted. The number would be comparatively minor, with 10,000 admitted in 1939 and as many more in 1940. Existing provisions for entrances from Germany permit the issuance of 27,370 immigration visas to Germans of all ages. Twenty thousand children could well be adopted and absorbed by a nation of our magnitude without perceptible difference. Nor would any child refugee, under the resolution, be given an immigration visa until ample assurance, by a responsible American citizen or private agency, had been received in guarantee of the care and education of the small fugitive from hate. This assurance is waiting on the opportunity, and is offered by a large number of the more eminent Protestant and Catholic churchmen of the United States.

The most pitiful plight of those who confront exile in Germany is that of the children. Outcast and friendless, and often deprived of their parents, these waifs are such an indictment of Nazi ruthlessness and inhumanity as shall stand while the page of history endures. The young of the cattle, of the beasts of the field, know more of compassion and care than these children receive from their strutting, intolerant masters. Not long ago there appeared in Collier's an article by Quentin Reynolds, descriptive of the condition of the proscribed, so-called "non-Aryan" children of Germany. As an instance he told of the arrival of a company of juvenile Jewish refugees on English soil. At first they could not believe that in England children of their blood might approach the grass:

"When they heard the incredible news that no 'verboten' signs existed at Dovercourt they gave happy cries and rushed out onto the grass, and rolled in it like kittens rolling in catnip. They tore tufts of it and pressed it against their cheeks. This was the first freedom any of them ever had known."

Surely America has green fields and good homes to which some few of these children shall have admittance, there to dwell and play while the memory of what has been becomes a fading nightmare. We can do no less than welcome them to a land where nothing is forbidden them, under conscience, and where the green grass and the flowers grow for all children alike. In their urgency and despair it is we, curiously enough, who need them more than they need us. Open the heart of America and let them in.

[From the Stamford (Conn.) Advocate of March 24, 1939]

TWENTY THOUSAND GERMAN CHILDREN

Since early in February there has been before Congress the so-called Wagner-Rogers bill to admit 20,000 German children into the United States above the regular German immigration quota. These children would be admitted over a period of 2 years. The bill in identical terms is before the Immigration Committees of the two branches of Congress. It is expected that Germany's conquest of Bohemia, Moravia, Slovakia, and now Memel may hasten the hearings on these bills.

The purpose of the bill is well set forth in the "whereases" that precede the bill itself. These read in part as follows: "Whereas there is now in progress a world-wide effort to facilitate the emigration from Germany of men, women, and children of every race and creed suffering from conditions which compel them to seek refuge in other lands; and whereas the most pitiful and helpless sufferers are children of tender years; and whereas the admission into the United States of a limited number of these children can be accomplished without any danger of their becoming public charges, or dislocating American industry, or displacing American labor, and whereas, etc."

It is interesting that both the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations have endorsed the bill. They feel that under the provisions of the proposal the children would not compete in the labor market.

This Wagner-Rogers bill would apply only to German children of 14 years of age and under. Since this Government refused to recognize the German conquest of Czechoslovakia, there might be some question of whether refugee children from that area would be considered German. When Germany took over Austria, the Austrian immigration quota (1,413) was officially added to the German (25,957), but so far the combined quota (27,370) has not been augmented by the Czechoslovak quota (2,874). The annual quota for Lithuania, including Memel, is 386.

The bill specifies that satisfactory assurance must be given in each case that the entrant will not become a public charge. The intent is that the children will be chosen by the Friends, and by groups cooperating with the Friends, and will go into foster homes selected for them. Catholic and Protestant children would be admitted as well as Jewish, and all would go into homes of their respective religions. Presumably, the homes selected would be in all parts of the country, so as to avoid undue congestion in certain cities or in certain geographical areas.

The children to be admitted would be required to get visas from American consuls abroad, who now in practice select and restrict immigration under the quotas; and each consul would be expected to assure himself that the intent of the act had been complied with before issuing a visa. However, before actually coming out of committee the Wagner-Rogers bill will probably be made more specific on these points, and might be amended so as to include additional safeguards.

The safeguards that have been thrown around the proposed admission of the children seem to be ample enough to quiet the criticism of the most careful stickler for protecting Americans from any least disadvantage. Even the numbers named in the bill, 10,000 for each year of a 2-year period, are minimum enough to seem almost ridiculously small. The bill ought to go through both branches of Congress unanimously.

ABOVE POLICY

Senate Joint Resolution 64 was introduced by Senator WAGNER, of New York, a Democrat; but the plan it embodies has received the endorsement of such unmistakable non-Democrats as Herbert Hoover and Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, who broke her own rule of never commenting on proposed legislation in order to support this resolution.

The reason is plain. Although the resolution suspends temporarily a national policy, it is not political. What it proposes is to relax United States immigration laws enough to permit the reception in this country of 10,000 German children under 14 in each of the years 1939 and 1940.

There are individuals and organizations in this country prepared to care for the children, so they would not become public charges. They are all under 14, so they would not compete in the labor market with American workers. The children, in short, can do us no harm, and their reception would accomplish something toward reducing the sum total of human misery. It is no wonder that Republicans support it as readily as Democrats, for humanitarianism is above party lines. It will be a sad day for us if the time ever comes when we consider any national policy too sacred to be touched in the name of humanity.

[From the Mount Vernon (N. Y.) Daily Argus of March 27, 1939]

UNTO THE LEAST OF THESE

There is no need to recount the plight of hundreds of thousands of citizens of Germany. The civilized world is familiar with the economic abuses which have been heaped upon them and with the cruelty of the concentration camps in which many of them have been incarcerated.

Yet, despite their admitted suffering, the United States of America can do little for them beyond aid extended through private charitable organizations to those who have been exiled. Our present internal economic condition is such that to lower the immigration laws and permit entry of these hundreds of thousands above the legal quotas would only add to unemployment and relief problems which already burden taxpayers to the breaking point.

But, fortunately, there is an avenue of mercy which this Nation can travel—a path which any kind, understanding, charitable country must take. It is to the rescue of some 50,000 children under 14 years of age whose parents have been either placed in concentration camps or who, through some unnatural events, have been thrown upon the mercies of the rest of the world.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER, of this State, and Representative EDITH NOURSE ROGERS, of Massachusetts, have introduced at Washington a bill which would allow the entrance into this country this year of 10,000 of these children and a similar number in 1940. That bill is now in committee awaiting public reaction.

These 20,000 children will not be competitors for employment since they are of tender age; they will not add to our own problems of child care since they are to be placed in homes carefully selected by the American Friends Service Committee (Quakers); and they are of years which will permit assimilation easily into American manners of life.

There is no religious element involved—about one-half of the children are Jewish and the other one-half Catholic or Protestant, whose forebears committed the unforgivable—to Hitler—crime of intermarriage with Jewish people. They are, admittedly, of a type which would become good American citizens.

Someone has said that God sends children into the world for another purpose than to maintain the race—to enlarge our hearts and to make us unselfish and tolerant and understanding and sympathetic.

Here is then a God-given duty to a nation which can still afford these virtues.

[From the Burlington (Vt.) Press of March 29, 1939]

REFUGEE CHILDREN

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER, of New York, has introduced in the Senate a joint resolution authorizing the admission into the United States of 10,000 German refugee children of every race and creed, during each of the calendar years 1939 and 1940.

He points out that children are, in many cases, the most serious sufferers from the persecutions inflicted upon their parents in Germany. He says that admission of a limited number of these children into the United States would release them from "the prospect of life without hope and without recourse, and enable them to grow up in an environment where the human spirit may survive and prosper."

Senator WAGNER points out that this resolution does not suspend existing quota restrictions on the immigration of adults. It merely authorizes the admission during a limited period of a limited number of refugee children, 14 years of age or under. He says this could readily be accomplished without their becoming public charges and without any danger of dislocating American industry or displacing American labor. Their admission would be predicated on satisfactory and voluntary undertakings by responsible American citizens or private organizations that adequate provision would be made for their maintenance and care, in homes of their own faiths.

It is said that thousands of American families have already expressed their willingness to take refugee children into their homes. The plan was endorsed recently by 49 of the outstanding Catholic and Protestant leaders in the United States.

In doing this, we would be following the precedent of England and Holland which have already given sanctuary to many of these unfortunate victims of persecution. Senator WAGNER declares that it would constitute our most immediate and practical contribution to the cause of human freedom.

There is much to be said for Senator WAGNER'S resolution. Guarding as it does against the haphazard immigration of children who might have no place to go when they arrived here, we believe it should be adopted as an expression of the purpose of the United States to offer a haven for those persecuted by intolerant government.

As the New York Herald Tribune said recently, the United States cannot succor all the victims of race prejudice, but the children are a special case. There are estimated to be about 50,000 German children under the age of 14 whose parents are in concentration camps, or who, for one reason or another, have been thrown on the mercy of the outside world. About half of these are Jews, the rest being Catholic or Protestant children "who committed the crime of having a Jewish grandparent or were guilty of being born to purely Teutonic parents of too liberal or independent a cast of mind."

It may be assumed that these children come from families which are among the most worth-while citizens in Germany, as we would judge them. If that is the case, we would be doing ourselves a service by admitting them to the United States and thus helping to enrich American life of the next generation.

[From the Herald-Advertiser of March 26, 1939]

THAT THE CHILDREN MAY NOT SUFFER

Last week we saw a pathetic letter written by a German mother to a relative in Huntington. It told of the sufferings she and her family had endured under the Nazi regime and pleaded that a refuge be found in America for her son—a handsome, curly-haired boy whose photograph was attached.

This mother, like thousands of other German-Jewish mothers, can resign herself to any fate; but she prefers cruel separation from her child to the crueler alternative of watching him wither under Nazi persecution.

There are at least 50,000 of these helpless boys and girls in greater Germany today. From broken homes and concentration camps their childish voices come to us in supplication—to us, the fortunate who live in peace and comfort and freedom under the protecting arms of the great Uncle Sam.

Shall we heed their cries? If so, we must lose no time in making known to Senators and Congressmen that the joint resolution now before Congress, calling for admission of 20,000 young refugees during 1939 and 1940 should be adopted.

For those who would quibble over details the following reservations are appended to the resolution—presented and championed warmly by Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER, and approved by all labor organizations as well as the resettlement committee of the National Coordinating Committee, composed of leading members of all churches and professions:

Undesirables would be barred, as would those likely to become public charges. Visas would be issued only as satisfactory assurances were received that the children would be sheltered either in private homes or in private institutions.

Since they would be between the ages of 8 and 14, no dislocation of American industry or displacement of American labor would result. (Racially only about half of Germany's refugee children are Jews; the others are from Catholic and Protestant families shattered by the Nazi thunderbolt.)

Twenty thousand children—10,000 this year and 10,000 in 1940—could be absorbed by this Nation without disturbance of any kind; they would, almost without exception, go into the homes of folk well able to provide for them, educate them, and train them in the ways and traditions of democratic self-government. (Already a half dozen Huntingtonians have offered to care for a child, and in other cities the same spontaneous response has been made to Senator WAGNER'S proposal.)

Here is an opportunity for Americans to place before the world a practical example of that humanitarian creed of which they boast so frequently. Your only cost is for a few postal cards to your representatives in the Congress. Will you do your part?

[From the Parkersburg (W. Va.) News of March 25, 1939]

FOR YOUNG REFUGEES

To alleviate one of the more tragic of the appalling problems of oppressed humanity in so-called greater Germany, a joint resolution has been introduced in Congress to modify the immigration laws as they apply to children of the age of 14 or younger. The proposal would permit an additional 10,000 children of those ages to enter the United States during each of the calendar years of 1939 and 1940.

The resolution states that children who have since January 1, 1933, resided "in any territory now incorporated in Germany" and for whom "satisfactory assurances are given that (they) will be supported and properly cared for through the action of responsible citizens or responsible private organizations * * * and * * * will not become public charges" will be eligible. Those provisions are designed to preclude any unfortunate experience with refugee children such as England suffered when thousands were removed from war territories in Spain.

To assist in carrying out the terms of the joint resolution, the resettlement division of the National Coordinating Committee, composed of leading members of all churches (Protestant, Catholic, and Hebrew) and professions, has begun to operate.

The committee informs us that there will be no dislocation of the employment of American citizens, a restriction that will remove a serious possible criticism. The C. I. O. and the A. F. of L. have placed their enthusiastic approval upon the provisions of the joint resolution and the committee's work. Every possible precaution will be taken to prevent refugees from depriving Americans of their employment.

The provisions in the resolution concerning eligibility of refugee children should insure the elimination of any undesirables or those who would become public charges. Some of the most loyal and patriotic citizens we have today in this country are of foreign birth who escaped to this country from oppressive governments and who therefore more fully appreciate what our form of government means to humanity.

The local organization of the resettlement division already has started to work and first reports indicate that splendid accomplishments have been made. To support the joint resolution and the work of the National Coordinating Committee is to give concrete evidence of America's determination to keep alive the principles of civilization and enlightened humanity.—(Charleston Daily Mail.)

OUR CHANCE TO HELP

Today, in the lands where the swastika rules, there are between 50,000 and 100,000 children whose future is very dark and whose present existence is one of misery and terror.

Some are Jews, some are Protestants or Catholics with a Jewish ancestor, and some are 100 percent German-Nordic-Aryans whose parents have offended the powers that be by having dangerous thoughts and in other ways. Their parents are dead, or penniless, or have been sent to concentration camps or have been swallowed up as so many are in revolutions, without anyone really knowing what has happened to them. This winter Britain took 2,800 of these children and the great heart of Nazidom was melted to the extent of letting them take 40 cents apiece out of the country.

Senator WAGNER, of New York, and Representative EDITH NOURSE ROGERS, of Massachusetts, have introduced a joint resolution to let 10,000 of these children come in this year and 10,000 next year, in addition to the quota numbers. They would be 14 or under, and the Government would insist upon assurances that they would be supported and cared for at no expense to the public.

Because of our own delayed recovery there is a limit to what we can do for the refugees from the Nazi countries. But these children are too young to compete for jobs. They are young enough to be taken into the homes of people of their own faiths and to adapt themselves quickly to American ways. If it proves necessary for them to stay here they should make excellent citizens. And the number, 20,000, is not very great. About half the children, it is estimated, would be Jews; Protestants and Catholics would make up the remainder. Representatives of all these faiths are on the Nonsectarian Committee for German Children which asks support for this joint resolution.

Here is a well-thought-out way in which this country can help. The plan proposed by Mr. WAGNER and Mrs. ROGERS ought to be adopted.

NATIONAL COMMITTEE OF CHURCH WOMEN,
Princeton, N. J., March 31, 1939.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: I have been instructed by the National Committee of Church Women which represents the three national agencies of church women listed above to convey to you the approval of this committee of church women of the bill for the admission of 10,000 refugee children under 14 years of age which you introduced into the Senate in February. It is Senate Joint Resolution 64.

The above committee which represents the thinking of representative leaders of Protestant church women believes that the bill which you are sponsoring should appeal to all who are eager in some way to help solve this terrible problem of caring for the refugees from German oppression without dislocating our own economic life. We hope very much that this bill will be passed by the Congress and become law.

Very sincerely yours,

ELINOR K. PURVES,
Chairman, Committee on International Relations.

HARVARD COLLEGE OBSERVATORY,
Cambridge, Mass., March 29, 1939.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: During the past year I have had a good deal to do officially as well as personally with the problems of exiles from Central Europe. I am associated with two or three committees and have done something to relieve the situation especially for academic exiles.

But the situation is, of course, very serious for nonacademic people for whom there is not even the occasional respite through the nonquota admission to the United States.

I am therefore particularly pleased to know that you have introduced a bill for the admission of children from Germany. It will be important to rescue some of these young people before they become too bitterly soured by persecution or too completely absorbed into the abnormal ideology of authoritarianism.

Respectfully yours,

HARLOW SHAPLEY,
Director of the Harvard College Observatory.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, by unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations, I report back favorably from that committee without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 246) making a further additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and I submit a report (No. 250) thereon.

I will say that later, at an appropriate time, I shall ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. TAFT, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the bill (S. 1275) to amend the United States Housing Act of 1937, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 251) thereon.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1487) for the relief of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 252) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 891. A bill for the relief of J. C. Grice (Rept. No. 253); and

S. 1688. A bill for the relief of Joseph W. Parse (Rept. No. 254).

VIOLATIONS OF FREE SPEECH AND RIGHTS OF LABOR (REPT. 6, PT. 4)

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. From the Committee on Education and Labor, pursuant to Senate Resolution 266, Seventy-fourth Congress, I file a report in connection with the investigation of the subcommittee entitled "Labor Policies of Employers' Associations: Part 1, The National Metal Trade Association."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and printed.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on April 4, 1939, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 917. An act authorizing the Library of Congress to acquire, by purchase or otherwise, the whole, or any part, of the papers of Charles Cotesworth Pinckney and Thomas Pinckney, including therewith a group of documents relating to the Constitutional Convention of 1787, now in the possession of Harry Stone, of New York City;

S. 1019. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to pay certain expenses incident to the training, attendance, and participation of the equestrian and modern pentathlon teams in the Twelfth Olympic Games; and

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD AND OTHER AGENCIES

Mr. WAGNER. I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, and so forth. I ask consent that the bill, together with a statement relative thereto, may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and properly referred, and, without objection, the bill and statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2098) to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, title IV of the National Housing Act, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the first two sentences of subsection (a) of section 10 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, are amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. (a) Upon such terms and restrictions as the Board may impose, each Federal home-loan bank is authorized to make advances to its members, upon the security of first mortgages, obligations of, or fully guaranteed as to principal and interest by, the United States, subject to the following limitations as to amount:"

(b) Paragraph (3) of subsection (a) of section 10 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(3) If secured by a first mortgage given in respect to any other mortgage loan, the advance shall not be for an amount in excess of 50 percent of the unpaid principal of the mortgage loan; but in no case shall the amount of such advance exceed 40 percent of the value of the real estate securing the mortgage loan."

SEC. 2. The first sentence of subsection (b) of section 10 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(b) No mortgage shall be accepted as collateral security for an advance by a Federal home-loan bank if, at the time such advance is made (1) the mortgage loan secured by it has more than 25 years to run to maturity, or (2) is past due more than 6 months when presented, unless the amount of the debt secured by such mortgage is less than 50 percent of the value of the real estate with respect to which the mortgage was given, as such real estate was appraised when the mortgage was made; each Federal home-loan bank may make advances to its members secured by obligations issued pursuant to this act, the National Housing Act, or other obligations acceptable to the Board which a member may lawfully have available, but no such advance shall exceed the market price or face value of such obligation, whichever is lower, and no such obligation shall be accepted as collateral security for an advance if such obligation is in default."

SEC. 3. Section 11 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is further amended by the addition of a new subsection, as follows:

"(i) The Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is authorized to purchase any obligations issued under the provisions of this act or title IV of the National Housing Act, and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds of the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include such purchases. The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of the obligations acquired by him under this subsection. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of such obligations shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States."

SEC. 4. Section 17 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"For the enforcement of its rights and powers and of its orders, rules, and regulations, the Board shall have power by resolution, in its own name or in the name of the United States through the Attorney General, or using its own attorneys subject to the direction of the Attorney General, as the Attorney General may determine, to institute or otherwise voluntarily participate in and to prosecute to final satisfaction any action, suit, or other proceeding in any State, Federal, or other court. Any such action, suit, or other proceeding instituted in a district court of the United States shall be deemed to have been instituted by an officer of the United States authorized by law to sue, within the meaning of section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended."

SEC. 5. (a) Section 20 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is amended by inserting at the beginning thereof the letter "a" in parentheses, by striking the word "twice" where it appears in the first sentence, and by adding at the end of such section, the following additional sentence:

"Such examiners shall not use their powers, privileges, or position, directly or indirectly, for personal advantage."

(b) Section 20 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is further amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(b) The Board shall have power to require each member of each Federal home-loan bank to make an annual report of its affairs to the Board as of the end of each calendar year, or as of such other date as the Board may permit, upon forms prescribed by the Board and to require such additional information as the Board by resolution may request. The Board shall have power to examine, audit, and supervise: (1) Federally or State-chartered institutions insured under title IV of the National Housing Act; and each such insured institution, by accepting the benefits of such insurance, agrees to permit and pay for such examinations, audits, and supervision by the Board; (2) other members of the Federal home-loan banks, if such members are not subject to State examination and supervision or if, in the judgment of the Board, State examination and supervision is inadequate for the protection of such banks, other members, and the public; and each such member, by the acceptance of the benefits of membership in a Federal home-loan bank, agrees to permit and pay for such examinations, audits, and supervision."

(c) The third sentence of section 8 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 6. Section 21 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Whoever makes any statement, knowing it to be false, or whoever willfully overvalues any security, for the purpose of influencing in any way the action of a Federal home-loan bank or the Board, a member of a Federal home-loan bank, or the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation upon any application, advance, discount, purchase, or repurchase agreement, or loan, or any extension thereof by renewal, deferment, or action or otherwise, or the acceptance, release, or substitution of security therefor, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both.

"(b) Whoever (1) falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits any note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or coupon, or share account, in imitation of or purporting to be a note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or coupon, or share account, issued by the Board, a Federal home-loan bank, a member of a Federal home-loan bank, or the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation; or (2) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to pass, utter, or publish, any false, forged, or counterfeited note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or coupon, or share account, purporting to have been issued by the Board, a Federal home-loan bank, a member of a Federal home-loan bank, or the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation, knowing the same to be false, forged, or counterfeited; or (3) falsely alters any note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or coupon, or share account, issued or purporting to have been issued by the Board, a Federal home-loan bank, a member of a Federal home-loan bank, or the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation; or (4) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to pass, utter, or publish, as true any falsely altered or spurious note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or coupon, or share account, issued or purporting to have been issued by the Board, a Federal home-loan bank, a member of a Federal home-loan bank, or the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation, knowing the same to be falsely altered or spurious, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

"(c) Whoever, being connected in any capacity with the Board or a Federal home-loan bank, a member of a Federal home-loan bank, or the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation, (1) embezzles, abstracts, purloins, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, securities, or other things of value, whether belonging to or pledged or otherwise entrusted to said Board, a Federal home-loan bank, a member of a Federal home-loan bank, or the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation; or (2) with intent to defraud the Board, a Federal home-loan bank, a member of a Federal home-loan bank, or the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation, or any other body politic or corporate, or any individual, or to deceive any officer, auditor, or examiners of the Board or a Federal home-loan bank, a member of a Federal home-loan bank, or the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation, makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of or to the Board, a Federal home-loan bank, a member of a Federal home-loan bank, or the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation, or, without being duly authorized, draws any order or issues, puts forth, or assigns any note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or draft, mortgage, judgment, or decree thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

"(d) It shall be unlawful for any individual, firm, partnership, association, or corporation (1) which is not such an institution to use the words 'Federal home-loan bank,' 'Federal savings and loan association,' or 'Federal savings insurance corporation,' or a combination of the word 'Federal' with any of such words, as a name or a part of a name under which he or it shall do business (except in the case of a name under which business is being done at the time of the enactment of this act); (2) which is not such an institution to advertise or represent in any way that he or it is a Federal home-loan bank, a Federal savings and loan association, or Federal savings insurance corporation, or to publish or display any sign, symbol, or advertisement reasonably calculated to convey the impression that he or it is a Federal home-loan bank, a Federal savings and loan association, or Federal savings insurance corporation; or (3) which is not a member of a Federal home-loan bank to advertise or represent in any way that he or it is such a member, or to publish or display any sign, symbol, or advertisement reasonably calculated to convey the impression that he or it is such a member. Every association, partnership, firm, or corporation violating any provision of this subsection shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be subject to a fine of not exceeding $1,000. Any individual violating any provision of this subsection, or any officer or director of any association or corporation, or any member of any firm or partnership violating any provision of this subsection, who participates in, or knowingly acquiesces in, any such violation shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be subject to a fine of not exceeding $1,000 or to imprisonment not exceeding 1 year, or both. Any violation of any provision of this subsection may be enjoined by the United States district court having jurisdiction, at the instance of any United States district attorney, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, or a Federal home-loan bank, a Federal savings and loan association, or the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation.

"(e) The provisions of sections 29, 30, 32, 35, 37, 39, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117 of the Criminal Code of the United States (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 73, 74, 76, 80, 82, 83, 88, 91, and 202 and 207, inclusive), insofar as applicable, are extended to apply to Federal home-loan banks and members thereof, and to Federal Savings Insurance Corporation and to contracts or agreements of any Federal home-loan bank and members thereof, and the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation, which, for the purposes hereof, shall be held to include advances, loans, discounts, insurance, and purchase and repurchase agreements; extensions and renewals thereof; and acceptances, releases, and substitutions of security therefor.

"(f) Any person who willfully and knowingly makes, circulates, or transmits to another or others any statement or rumor, written, printed or by word of mouth, which is untrue in fact and is directly or by inference derogatory to the financial condition or affects the solvency or financial standing of a Federal home-loan bank, a member of a Federal home-loan bank, or the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation, or who knowingly counsels, aids, procures, or induces another to start, transmit, or circulate any such statement or rumor is guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment of not exceeding 1 year, or both.

"(g) As used in this act, the term examiner means any person employed by the Board, a Federal home-loan bank, or by the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation to make examinations. No such institution, no member of a Federal home-loan bank, no institution which is insured by the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation, and no officer, director, employee, attorney, or agent thereof, shall hereafter knowingly make any loan or grant any gratuity to any examiner who examines or has authority to examine it. Any such officer, director, employee, attorney, or agent violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not exceeding 1 year or fined not more than $5,000, or both, and may be fined a further sum equal to the money so loaned or gratuity given. Any examiner who shall accept a loan or gratuity from any institution examined by him, or from any officer, director, employee, attorney, or agent thereof, or who shall steal or unlawfully take, or unlawfully conceal, any money, note, draft, bond, share account, or security, or any other property of value in the possession of any such institution, or from any safe deposit box in or adjacent to the premises of such institution, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States, be imprisoned for not exceeding 1 year or fined not more than $5,000, or both, and may be fined a further sum equal to the money so loaned, gratuity accepted, or property stolen, and shall forever thereafter be disqualified from employment by the Board, a Federal home-loan bank, or member thereof, or the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation, or any institution insured by it. No examiner shall perform any other service for compensation, while holding such office, for any institution which he has authority to examine or for any officer, director, employee, attorney, or agent thereof. No examiner, officer, director, employee, attorney, or agent of the Board, a Federal home-loan bank, or the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation shall disclose the names of borrowers or investors or the collateral for loans of, or other facts confidential to the management and not otherwise publicly disclosed regarding any institution examined by him to any person other than the Board, a Federal home-loan bank, or the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation, their officers and employees, or to the proper officers of such institution, without first having obtained express permission in writing from its respective employer, or from the board of directors of the institutions examined, except when ordered to do so by a court of competent jurisdiction or by direction of the Congress of the United States, or of either House thereof, or any committee of Congress, or of either House duly authorized. Any person violating any of the provisions of the last two sentences shall be imprisoned not more than 1 year, or fined not more than $5,000, or both."

SEC. 7. The ninth sentence of subsection (c) of section 4 of Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, is hereby amended by striking the period at the end thereof and adding a colon and the following:

"Provided, That any building now or hereafter owned by the Corporation in the District of Columbia and used principally as an office building of the Corporation, together with the land upon which the same stands, and all appurtenances, buildings, and land used principally in connection therewith, shall be exempt from any and all taxation heretofore or hereafter imposed."

SEC. 8. Subsection (c) of section 5 of Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(c) Such associations shall lend their funds only on the security of their shares or on the security of first liens upon homes or combination home and business properties, as defined by regulations of the Board, within 50 miles of their home office: Provided, That not more than $20,000 shall be loaned on the security of a first lien upon any one property upon which there is located a dwelling or dwellings designed principally for residential use for not more than four families in the aggregate, irrespective of whether such dwelling or dwellings have a party wall or are otherwise physically connected with another dwelling or dwellings. However, not exceeding 15 percent of the assets of any association may be loaned on any improved real estate which by reason of its condition is not only marketable but is capable of producing income reasonably in relation to the payment of interest upon and the amortization of the loan secured thereby and all other loan charges, without regard to said limitation on amount of loan, and without regard to said 50-mile limit, but secured by a first lien thereon. Subject to regulations of the Board, associations upon application to and authorization by the Board, because of their size or location, may lend within the 50-mile limit and without regard to said $20,000 limitation, up to an additional 15 percent of their assets on any improved real estate upon which there is located one or more structures designed principally for residential use, irrespective of whether such structures have a party wall or are otherwise physically connected with other structures. All real estate owned as a result of the foreclosure of loans previously made within any such percentage of assets shall be included in computing such percentage of assets. Any portion of the assets of such associations may be otherwise invested only in obligations of, or fully guaranteed as to principal and interest by, the United States, the stock of a Federal home-loan bank, or obligations issued pursuant to the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, or the National Housing Act, or in other securities which are legal investments for fiduciary and trust funds and are approved by regulations of the Board. Also, upon application to and approval by the Board, an association may make loans under title I of the National Housing Act as now or hereafter amended. Subject to regulations of the Board, any association which is converted from a State-chartered institution may continue to make loans in the territory in which it made loans while operating under State charter."

SEC. 9. Subsection (i) of section 5 of Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, is amended by striking the period at the end thereof and inserting a colon and the following:

"Provided, however, That said conversion shall not be in contravention of the State law. Any association chartered as a Federal savings and loan association may convert itself into a thrift and home-financing institution or mutual savings bank incorporated under the laws of the State (hereinafter termed a 'State-chartered institution') in which the home office of such Federal association is located, upon the vote, cast at a legal meeting called to consider such action, specified by the law of such State as required for a State-chartered institution to convert itself into a Federal association, but in no event less than 51 percent of the votes cast at such meeting, provided legal titles are protected by such conversion or provided proper conveyances of legal titles are made, and provided further, that if any shares of such Federal association are held by the Secretary of the Treasury or the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, such conversion shall be subject to approval by the Board."

SEC. 10. Subsection (c) of section 401 of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(c) The term 'insured account' means any investment or interest in an insured institution whether in the form of a share of capital or a deposit or investment certificate, which investment or interest may be withdrawn by the holder or repurchased by the insured institution in whole or in part and the value thereof paid to the holder prior to the liquidation and payment of all of the liabilities of the institution upon the winding up of the institution, less any part thereof which is in excess of $5,000. The total insurance which any insured member may obtain in any one insured institution is $5,000, whether the insured member has one or more withdrawable or repurchasable accounts in such insured institution; and if such accounts are of a different priority, the Corporation shall have the right to determine upon the payment of insurance which of such accounts shall have the benefit of the $5,000 aggregate amount of insurance. Investments or interests in an insured institution which cannot be withdrawn or the value thereof paid to the holder until all of the liabilities of the institution have been fully liquidated and paid upon the winding up of the institution are not insurable, being nonwithdrawable accounts. The total amount of all accounts of the insured members of an insured institution is the total amount of withdrawable or repurchasable accounts credited or apportioned to all insured members, whether or not such withdrawable or repurchasable accounts are subject to a pledge and whether insured in full or only in part."

SEC. 11. Subsection (a) of section 402 of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof, the following: "On the effective date of this amendment to subsection (a) of section 402 of the National Housing Act, as amended, the name of the 'Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation' shall be changed to 'Federal Savings Insurance Corporation.'"

SEC. 12. The last sentence of subsection (b) of section 402 of the National Housing Act is repealed, and the following inserted in lieu thereof: "The Corporation shall issue to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation receipts for payment for or on account of such stock, which shall serve as evidence of the ownership thereof, and when the reserve fund of the Corporation established under the provisions of section 404 of this title equals 5 percent of all insured accounts and creditor obligations of all insured institutions, such stock shall be entitled to the payment of dividends out of net earnings at a rate equivalent to that currently paid by the Government on its last issued bonds having a maturity of 10 years or more. Such dividends shall not be cumulative. Dividends heretofore accumulated but unpaid are hereby waived."

SEC. 13. Subsection (a) of section 403 of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 403 (a). It shall be the duty of the Corporation to insure the accounts of all Federal savings and loan associations, and it may also insure the withdrawable or repurchasable accounts of all local thrift and home-financing institutions of the types eligible for membership in a Federal home-loan bank as provided in the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, organized and operating according to the laws of any State, the United States, any District or Territory thereof, which make application for such insurance and which meet the standards of insurability prescribed in subsection (c) of this section and are approved by the Corporation."

SEC. 14. (a) Subsections (a) and (b) of section 404 of the National Housing Act, as amended, are amended by striking the word "one-eighth" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof the word "one-twelfth."

(b) Subsection (c) of section 404 of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(c) The one-twelfth of 1 percent per annum insurance premium rate shall be effective as of January 1, 1939. If an insured institution has paid a premium at a higher rate for any period of time beyond such date, it shall receive a credit upon its future premiums in an amount equal to the excess premium so paid for the period beyond such date."

SEC. 15. Subsection (b) of section 405 of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(b) In the event of a default by an insured institution the Corporation shall promptly determine the insured members thereof and the amount of each insured account, and shall make payment of the insured accounts in such insured institution to each insured member as soon as possible upon surrender and transfer to the Corporation of each insured account free and clear of any lien or other encumbrance either (1) by making available to each insured member a transferred insured account in an insured institution not in default in the same community in an amount equal to the insured account so transferred, or (2) in such other manner as the board of trustees may prescribe: Provided, That the Corporation may require proof of the ownership of insured accounts, and that in any case where the Corporation is not satisfied as to the ownership of an insured account it may require the final determination of a court of competent jurisdiction before paying such insured account."

SEC. 16. Subsection (f) of section 406 of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(f) In order to prevent a default in an insured institution, restore an insured institution in default to normal operation as an insured institution, or minimize loss which the Corporation might otherwse suffer by reason of the liquidation of an insured institution in default, the Corporation is authorized, in its discretion, to make loans to, purchase the assets of, or make contributions to, any such institution."

SEC. 17. Section 407 of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 407. (a) Any insured institution other than a Federal savings and loan association may vote to terminate the insurance contract by a majority vote of all of the members of its board of directors or other similar governing body, unless under State law, the charter, constitution, or bylaws of any such institution, the shareholders only are entitled to vote on such question; provided that where such vote is reserved to the shareholders by State law, the charter, constitution, or bylaws they shall have the sole power to vote to terminate the insurance contract. Upon a legal vote for the termination of the insurance contract, a notice of termination of such contract shall be sent to the Corporation at its office in Washington, D. C., by registered mail, together with evidence satisfactory to the Corporation that the procedure required by this section has been duly complied with. The contract of insurance shall terminate at the close of business on the ninetieth day after the date of the registration of such notice of termination: Provided, however, Final termination of all insurance of accounts shall take effect as provided in subsection (d) of this section.

"(b) For any violation by an insured institution of any provision of this title, any rule or regulation made thereunder, or any agreement made pursuant to section 403, or otherwise, the Corporation, after allowing such insured institution an opportunity to be heard, may give such institution by registered mail a notice of termination of the insurance contract, the contract of insurance shall terminate at the close of business on the ninetieth day after the date of the registration of such notice of termination: Provided, however, Final termination of all insurance of accounts shall take effect as provided in subsection (d) of this section.

"(c) In the event such institution votes to terminate the insurance contract, written notice of such termination shall be given within 10 days to each insured member at the last address shown on the books of the institution. In the event the Corporation shall exercise its power to terminate the insurance contract of any insured institution at any time, such institution shall, within 10 days after receipt of the notice of termination provided in subsection (b) of this section, give written notice to each insured member as above provided of the fact of such termination of the insurance contract. In all cases, a copy of the notice sent to insured members in reference to the termination of the insurance contract of any institution shall be furnished to the Corporation, together with evidence that such notice was given as herein provided. In the event that, in the judgment of the Corporation, such notices given by an insured institution do not give adequate notice, the Corporation shall have the right, for the protection of insured members and the public, to give such additional notice as it deems to be appropriate.

"(d) In the event of termination of the insurance contract of any insured institution under the provisions of this section, no shares, certificates of deposit, investment certificates, or other accounts issued or created by such institution after the ninetieth day after the registration of such notice of termination of the insurance contract shall be insured; but the insured accounts of such institution, to the extent that they were insured on the ninetieth day after the registration of such notice of termination, less any amounts thereafter withdrawn or repurchased, shall remain insured for a period of 2 years after such date, which date shall be the effective date of the termination of insurance for all purposes. No payments on account of such insured accounts and no additions thereto by way of the credit of dividends or otherwise made or accrued after the ninetieth day after the registration of such notice of termination shall be insured. Such institution shall be obligated to pay within 30 days after the effective date of the termination of the insurance contract, as a final insurance premium, twice the annual rate of premium last paid by such institution applied upon all accounts of the insured members of such institution plus all creditor obligations of such institution on the ninetieth day after the registration of such notice of termination of insurance, as shown by a sworn statement of financial condition accompanying such payment of the final insurance premium. If such institution fails to furnish such sworn statement, the Corporation may assess and collect a final insurance premium as above provided, calculated upon the accounts of insured members and creditor obligations shown upon the latest statement of financial condition submitted to the Corporation, or at its option the Corporation may by court process compel the production of the sworn statement of financial condition hereinabove required to accompany the payment of the final insurance premium.

"(e) No institution which has voted to terminate the insurance contract under the provisions of subsection (a) of this section or which has been notified by the Corporation in accordance with the provisions of subsection (b) of this section that its contract of insurance is terminated, shall thereafter advertise or represent by any means that it is an insured institution, nor shall it advertise or represent by any means that any new account created after such termination of the insurance contract or any sum thereafter received by such institution on any account or credited thereto by way of dividends or otherwise, are insured. After the effective date of the termination of insurance as provided in subsection (d) of this section, no such institution shall advertise or represent in any manner that any of its accounts or any part of the same are insured under this title. The Corporation is authorized to make reasonable rules and regulations with respect to the procedure herein prescribed governing the termination of insurance."

SEC. 18. Notwithstanding any other evidences of the intention of Congress, it is hereby declared to be the controlling intent of Congress that if any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of this act, or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

The statement presented by Mr. WAGNER is as follows:

SUMMARY AND JUSTIFICATION OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION AFFECTING THE FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD AND THE AGENCIES UNDER ITS DIRECTION

Prior to making specific comments on the respective sections, the following general explanations are made regarding those sections which the Board considers of vital importance and which involve basic matters of public policy as distinguished from those sections which are by their nature clarifications or minor amplifications of existing provisions.

The following public policies are sought to be effectuated by several of the sections:

1. PROVISION FOR AN ADEQUATE COLLATERAL BASIS FOR ADVANCES IN EMERGENCIES BY FEDERAL HOME-LOAN BANKS TO THEIR MEMBERS

By sections 1 and 2 it is proposed to adjust the types of collateral which Federal home-loan banks may lawfully accept as security for advances to their members, and conform more accurately with the legal lending powers of such member institutions. At the present time, only mortgages secured by one- to four-family dwellings are acceptable collateral even though other housing mortgages, which are insured by the Federal Government through the Federal Housing Administration, are held by member institutions. Such provisions are so narrow as seriously to impair the usefulness, particularly in some future emergency, of the reserve of home mortgage credit provided by the Federal home-loan banks.

Congress clearly intended to enable the member institutions to make use of this Federal reserve of home-mortgage credit in future emergencies. Such intent is evidenced both by the creation of the Federal home-loan-bank system and by the investment by the Secretary of the Treasury of approximately $125,000,000 in the capital of such banks.

Section 1 would permit the banks to accept as collateral from members mortgages secured by real estate other than one- to four-family dwellings, but advances so secured may not exceed one-half of the unpaid balance of the mortgage loan, or 40 percent of the value of such real-estate security.

The principal effect would be to make acceptable as collateral F. H. A. insured mortgages, which cover residential properties of more than four families. The present section 10 (b) of the Bank Act allows institutions which are not members to borrow from these banks on such insured mortgages 90 percent of the unpaid principal, but the act at present denies such privilege to the same kind of institution if it is a bank member, even though it tenders such a mortgage insured by the F. H. A. The proposed amendment would remove such discrimination against bank members who aid the national housing program.

The amendment does not, and could not, however, increase the power of any bank member to make a different kind of mortgage loan than Federal or State law as presently constituted now authorizes. It does not, therefore, empower bank members to engage in any form of commercial banking.

Savings and loan associations would still be limited principally to making loans on one- to four-family houses. Some of them may now use a limited part of their assets to finance small apartment or rental residential properties for which there is a moderate demand in the smaller cities. Federal savings and loan associations can use only a limited percentage of their assets for loans and property other than one- to four-family homes. Savings banks and insurance companies can make insured loans on multi-family residential properties. If the Federal home-loan-bank system is to serve them effectively as a reserve system, it must be in a position to make advances against the type of collateral which constitutes a considerable part of their investment portfolio.

Section 2 would authorize the banks to accept as collateral mortgages having a maturity of 25 years instead of the present 20-year maturity limit. The recent amendments to the National Housing Act provide for the insurance of mortgages maturing up to 25 years. That statute permits all types of approved mortgagees, which include all types of members of these banks, to make such mortgages. But as the Bank Act now stands, if such insured mortgages are made, they are not acceptable collateral.

The same situation now exists with regard to mortgages in excess of $20,000. At present members of the bank system have made, and may legally make, types of mortgages which are not acceptable collateral merely because the maturity is more than 20 years, or the amounts more than $20,000. Of course, Federal savings and loan associations and most other savings and loan associations may use only a limited part of their assets in making multifamily housing mortgages. But savings banks and insurance companies which are bank members are not so limited. This anomalous situation requires correction. The amendment would merely permit the use as collateral with the Federal home-loan banks of such insured mortgages as the bank members are already empowered to make.

The section would make Federal home-loan-bank debentures and debentures issued by the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation eligible collateral for advances from Federal home-loan banks, carefully limiting the collateral value to market or face, whichever is lower.

It appears unreasonable for the Government to provide a home-credit-reserve system in which the Government has invested about $125,000,000, and on the other hand impose such narrow restrictions on acceptable collateral that the members of the system cannot when emergencies require use for credit the lawful and sound collateral which they have available.

2. PROVISION FOR SUPPORT OF THE FEDERAL HOME-LOAN-BANK SYSTEM BY THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT IN TIMES OF EMERGENCY

By section 3 it is proposed that the Secretary of the Treasury will be authorized in his discretion in times of emergency to purchase debentures issued by the Federal home-loan banks or by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. Such purchases by the Secretary of the Treasury would avoid the freezing of home-mortgage credit in a future emergency, and thereby prevent another deflationary avalanche of home-mortgage foreclosures, such as made necessary the creation of Home Owners' Loan Corporation. The Treasury now has similar discretionary power to support the farm-loan system and the commercial banking structure. Other modes of governmental support protect both the Farm Credit Administration and the Federal Reserve System.

It should be noted that the proposal would leave the determination of the necessity for governmental support of the home-mortgage system during any future depression solely to the Secretary of the Treasury.

It seems clear that Congress in creating the Federal home-loan-bank system intended that this reserve agency for home-mortgage credit be adequate for times of emergency. The subsequent creation by Congress of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation (involving the use of Government credit in direct home loans to individuals) is clear evidence, however, of the necessity of further implementation of the Federal home-loan-bank system as a precaution against future deflationary periods. Permanent implementation for protection against future crises should now be provided. Experience has taught us that precautionary measures of this character can best be provided during normal times.

The power of the Federal home-loan banks to issue consolidated debentures to provide funds for home-mortgage credit to member institutions is comparable to the power of the Federal land banks to issue consolidated bonds for farm-loan purposes. It was demonstrated, however, that Federal land-bank bonds could not be marketed advantageously in the open market during the recent depression and that governmental support was necessary to prevent the collapse of farm-mortgage credit. That situation caused Congress to create the Farm Mortgage Corporation with $2,000,000,000 of Government-guaranteed bonds with which to purchase and support Federal land-bank bonds.

To forestall such a dangerous situation arising in the Federal home-loan system in a future depression, the Board is requesting that the Secretary of the Treasury be now given such discretionary power to protect the Federal reserve of home-mortgage credit. It is easier to prevent deflationary tendencies which arise from fear than it is to remove the fear after the deflationary cycle has begun.

It is obviously to the advantage of the Treasury and to each of the other Federal systems of credit for the Treasury to have such discretionary power. If the Federal home-loan-bank system was unable to extend necessary help in the event of unexpected difficulties in the urban mortgage field, such a development could not fail to disturb public confidence and have a detrimental effect upon the other financial systems and thereby greatly embarrass the Treasury. In a recent brief (brief for the United States, Intervenor, Loomis, et al., v. First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Wisconsin, No. 277, U. S. Sup. Ct., October term, 1938) the Department of Justice has stated:

"The urban home mortgage plays an extremely important role in the general credit structure, both because of the volume of such mortgages which are held by financial institutions generally and because of its increasing use as a mobile form of credit instrument. * * * It requires no argument to show that foreclosures and frozen credit in this (home mortgage) field threatened the solvency of institutions, such as the banks, which were the bulwark of the commercial credit structure, and of other institutions, such as the insurance companies, which comprised a major market for long-term loans. So delicately intertwined are the credit markets of the Nation that a collapse in one field of investment must inevitably jeopardize all other parts of the credit structure."

3. PROVISION FOR MAINTAINING MORE ADEQUATE GOVERNMENTAL INSURANCE OF SAVINGS FOR HOME FINANCING

(a) Noncumulative dividend on Government capital

At the present time the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation is required to pay a cumulative dividend of 3 percent to Home Owners' Loan Corporation on $100,000,000 of Government capital. It has been clearly demonstrated that until adequate reserves have been established by the Corporation the payment of such dividend is unsound. The present statute makes such dividends cumulative; such accumulation tends to weaken the credit position of the Corporation.

Section 13 would change such 3-percent cumulative dividend to a noncumulative dividend payable only after the 5-percent statutory reserve has been established. It does not request that the Corporation be wholly relieved from paying dividends on its Government capital in the same way that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is now wholly relieved from paying any dividends on the Government capital provided through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Treasury, and the Federal Reserve banks. The section merely requests that the Corporation be required to pay noncumulative dividends on its Government capital at a rate equal to the cost of money to the Government when the 5-percent statutory reserve has been accumulated.

This amendment will not cost the Government any money. The dividends will simply be accumulated within the Corporation to create the 5-percent reserve as a protection of the Government's investment. The reserve belongs to the Government, which owns all the capital. The creation of such reserve will tend to insure the future payment of dividends.

(b) Reduction of premium

To enable the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation to fulfill the purposes intended by Congress and to encourage the accumulation of private savings as widely as possible in order to provide adequate home-mortgage credit, section 15 is amended to reduce the insurance premium from one-eighth of 1 percent to one-twelfth of 1 percent.

At present the Corporation charges a premium of one-eighth of 1 percent. It also may assess an additional one-eighth of 1 percent, making possible a total annual premium of one-fourth of 1 percent of the total assets of an insured institution. The amended section would reduce both the premium and the additional assessment to one-twelfth of 1 percent.

It is not proposed to give up the right to make this additional assessment of one-twelfth of 1 percent. The Corporation would thus have power to collect a total premium of one-sixth of 1 percent of the total assets of an insured institution in any year.

The reduction of the premium rate is in the public interest. In every section of the country institutions which have been insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation have shown, almost immediately, a surprising increase in small savings. During the last 2 years the rate of growth of such savings has been greater than in any other class of institutions in the country.

The experience indicates not only that insurance of accounts increases public confidence and savings but brings into active use large sums previously in hoarding. As the number of thrift institutions protected by insurance has grown, the beneficial influence upon housing developments, as a result of the increase in mortgage funds available, has become more marked. This is especially true in the smaller communities where the development of housing is of great importance, and which do not command the credit facilities of the larger cities.

The larger the number of savings institutions which can be encouraged to insure the greater will be the amount of private funds available for housing purposes.

Because the present premium and assessment rate is considered unduly high, many institutions hesitate to provide insurance protection for their savers. The interest rates on home mortgages have been coming down steadily. This has, of course, reduced the income of lending institutions. They must, at the same time, pay a reasonable return to savers or they will not get funds freely from the public. Out of their income they must accumulate reserves and pay for intelligent management. They are today operating so closely that the cost of insurance at the present rate is a matter of real importance to them. The reduction of the rate will undoubtedly result in a substantial increase in the number of insured institutions. In turn, this should bring an increase in mortgage funds available for lending. Experience has shown that the present premium rate is unnecessary since the risk of loss through the failure of institutions of this class is small.

COMMENTS BY SECTIONS

Sections 1, 2, and 3: These have been discussed above.

Section 4: The proposed amendment would give the Board the power to enforce its rights, orders, and regulations by court proceedings in Federal or State courts. The suit may be in its own name or in the name of the United States and be handled by the Attorney General or the Board's attorneys under the direction of the Attorney General, as the Attorney General may determine. As a practical matter, it appears that routine matters would be handled by the Board's own attorneys, but when the suit is in the name of the United States, the action would be taken by the Attorney General and that such suits would be reserved for matters of broad public policy. This practical arrangement would be worked out by administrative understanding between the Board and the Attorney General's office.

Due to the specialized and technical character of the financial operations of the Federal home-loan-bank system, which involves the supervisory and regulatory work of the Board, it is deemed essential that the Board be permitted to be represented in civil litigated matters of a routine nature by attorneys who have an intimate knowledge of the operations of the national system supervised and regulated by it. It is hardly fair to assume that either the Department of Justice or the respective district attorneys can obtain such familiarity with the Board's functions due to the pressure of other work. It seems advisable to permit jurisdiction of Board matters in Federal courts.

Section 5: The present section 20 is preserved by the amendment but is divided into two subsections. In the first subsection, the only new provisions are:

(a) The Board would be required to make annual instead of semiannual examinations of the Federal home-loan banks. Experience indicates that annual examinations would be adequate when coupled with the routine day-by-day reports received by the Comptroller of the Federal home-loan-bank system from the 12 Federal home-loan banks; and

(b) Examiners may not use their position for personal gain.

The second subsection is new. It clarifies the present powers of the Board with respect to requiring reports from members of the Federal home-loan-bank system, examining and supervising institutions insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, and certain other members if the present State examination is inadequate.

The third subsection merely eliminates a related (but unnecessary) provision in the statute relating to examinations.

Section 6: The present criminal provisions designed to protect the Federal home-loan banks are extended by the proposed amendments to cover the members and the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation, and are supplemented by a provision regarding defamation. A further provision relating expressly to criminal acts by national examiners of the Federal home-loan-bank system is added. The provisions regarding acts of examiners are parallel in substance to the provisions of the Federal Reserve Act.

Section 7: When Congress created the Home Owners' Loan Corporation as a wholly owned Government corporation, it provided exemption from taxation, except that real property is held subject to taxation by the respective States. The proposed amendment would exempt the Federal Home Loan Bank Board Building, located in the District of Columbia, owned by the Corporation, from taxation by the District of Columbia in the same way that other Government-owned buildings are exempted, as, for example, the Treasury Building.

Section 8: Under the limitations of the present section, some of the larger Federal savings and loan associations located in larger cities, where multifamily dwellings are an economic necessity, are not permitted to cooperate in the making of multifamily dwelling loans to an extent sufficient fully to employ the funds that are available to such institutions. This is not true of the smaller associations in smaller towns; hence the suggested amendment requests specific power for the Board to determine by size and location which institutions may use a slightly larger proportion of their assets in making loans other than one- to four-family home loans. This provision will not permit Federal savings and loan associations to enter the commercial banking field, but will assist in financing the national housing program and, at the same time, give the larger associations in the larger cities more adequate use of the funds entrusted to them.

Certain definitions are included which seem to be necessary and proper and should be made statutory.

The present investment powers are too restricted. There is no reason why such associations should not have the power to invest in securities which are legal for trust funds in addition to the power to invest in Government bonds or debentures issued by the Federal home-loan banks or the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation so as to be able to employ their funds profitably when satisfactory home-mortgage loans are not available.

Section 9: At present there is no statutory authorization for Federal savings and loan associations to reconvert to a State charter. Such a provision would create reciprocity between the respective States and the Federal Government in the matter of chartering thrift and home-financing institutions. Many of the present State statutes authorize a Federal savings and loan association to obtain a State charter by reconversion. In making such a provision Government funds are protected.

It is also provided that conversion from State-chartered institutions into federally chartered institutions shall not contravene the State law. This would make the statute conform to a recent Supreme Court decision (Cleary et al. v. Hopkins Street Building and Loan Association, 296 U. S. 315).

Section 10: The present definition of "insured account" is technically inadequate. This amendment clarifies the definition of an insured account.

Section 11: This amendment changes the name of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation to Federal Savings Insurance Corporation.

The present name of the insurance corporation is unwieldy and is not a descriptive or correct title. It creates an erroneous impression on the public. The Corporation insures savings in insured institutions; it does not insure loans. Loans are insured by the Federal Housing Administration.

Section 12: Discussed above.

Section 13: In the interest of providing uniform insurance protection for savings available for home-financing purposes, this amendment provides that all types of thrift and home-financing institutions which are now legally eligible for membership in Federal home-loan banks may obtain insurance by the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation.

Savings banks which, in fact, substantially engage in home financing and other lending for housing purposes should have available to them for the protection of their depositors all of the facilities of the Federal home-loan-bank system, including the same insurance protection that is available to Federal savings and loan associations. Such a provision would greatly tend to safeguard savings banks in a future deflationary period.

Section 14: This section reduces the insurance premium from one-eighth to one-twelfth of 1 percent for the reason mentioned above.

Section 15: The present law gives an insured member the option to accept an insured share in another insured institution or a settlement of 10 percent in cash, 45 percent in 1-year debentures and 45 percent in 3-year debentures. Such debentures are required to be noninterest bearing. Because such debentures are noninterest bearing, their value on the open market would almost certainly be less than par prior to their maturity, which would cause investors to lose the amount of the discount. The purpose of the Insurance Corporation is to protect these investors from any loss upon their savings. This amendment of the section deals with the insurance settlement made by the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation. It provides, in the event of default, that the Corporation shall make payment of insurance either by tendering to insured members another insured account in a going insured institution in the same community, or in such other manner as the Corporation may prescribe.

Section 16: This section clarifies the present language authorizing the Federal Savings Insurance Corporation, in its efforts to prevent defaults, to restore insured institutions in default to normal operations or to minimize losses, to buy assets, make loans or contributions to such institutions. Such clarification of language does not change the intention of the present provision.

Section 17: This section completely revises the provisions relating to termination of insurance. It removes the present harsh provisions. The law now provides that upon voluntary termination an institution and its members immediately and completely lose the insurance protection; but must continue to pay a premium for a period of 3 years. Institutions which have the insurance protection terminated by the Corporation because of violations of the statute or regulations must continue to pay the insurance premium for a 5-year period, although only those accounts which were insured as of the date of termination continue to have the insurance protection for such 5-year period.

The proposed amendment would provide that insurance shall be continued for a 2-year period and that, whether termination be voluntary or involuntary, two annual premiums shall be paid in advance at the time of termination for such continued insurance. The section requires equitable notice of termination of insurance to be given to insured members.

Section 18: This section is the separability clause.

DUTY ON CERTAIN FOX FURS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, at the last meeting of the Senate, on Tuesday afternoon, we discussed Government securities regulation and its effect in the gloomy caverns of Wall Street. We talked a great deal about public interest and the emasculation of Government policy.

Today I should like to focus attention on another problem which may involve a conflict between Government regulation and public interest.

I refer to the administration tariff policy as evidenced in trade agreements between the United States and Canada. At the outset of any discussion on trade agreements, we must recognize the self-evident truth that any tariff policy which creates an increase in imports without a corresponding increase in exports, must result in a curtailed domestic production. Following such a curtailed production, there is, of course, the inevitable aftermath of unemployment.

There was a time when we believed that tariff rates had some correlation with the difference in production costs at home and abroad. Today we have partially scuttled that doctrine in favor of a belief that lowering of governmental restrictions through trade agreements brings about a stimulated trade.

This is a complex problem and it would be manifestly unfair to attempt a complete presentation in a short discussion either for or against reciprocal-trade agreements.

Permit me, however, Mr. President, to illustrate this afternoon the application of reciprocal-trade philosophy to a specific industry. This is, incidentally, a very timely matter because of the completion of the reciprocal-trade agreement with Great Britain and the revision of the Canadian agreement. Stalking on the heels of these agreements is the significant fact that our entire new world-trade program now covers about 60 percent of our total foreign trade.

There are many factors in the trade equation. The most important one is bound up in the high standard of living and the high wage and hour standards in this country as compared with alien standards. There is a gross inconsistency in legislating for wages and hours and then cutting the props from under the American businessman by disastrous trade agreements with alien competition where no such standards exist. That American businessman, by the way, in his turn is forced on the W. P. A. and that burden in turn is forced on the taxpayer who then has less money and less confidence with which to stimulate American business.

Thus, we have all the elements of a vicious cycle by which eventually we interrupt the dreary lockstep of the American businessman just long enough to garrote him with a noose that he himself is required to buy.

When we look at this picture of international trade we must remember the realinement of international markets. We must remember that Germany and Italy now dominate the Central European market, that Russia dominates in Asia, and Japan in China, Manchuria, and Korea. We must realize that Great Britain has tightened its grasp on colony trade so that our exports to great Britain have dropped from 16.1 percent in 1929 to 11.1 percent in 1937. We must not overlook the fact that slicing 16,000,000 acres of cultivated cotton lands from productive use while we dallied with price and control programs, permitted those 16,000,000 acres to be devoted to cotton in other countries that had once been our foreign market. The only blessing that I can observe here, is that Wisconsin agricultural machinery plowed that foreign land, but that is a mixed blessing.

It is not my intention, however, to debate the merits of reciprocal-trade treaties this afternoon. I am ready to concede that there are advantages to trade-stimulation policies, just as there are disadvantages.

My concern this afternoon is with one aspect of the disadvantages. I am concerned with that phase of the philosophy that may entertain desirable trade objectives—may even achieve some of them—but meanwhile singles out certain American businesses for crucifixion as a sort of sacrificial offering.

In the beautiful Wisconsin northlands—where I hope to see many of my colleagues next summer—there are many so-called fox-fur farms.

Under the Tariff Acts of 1922 and 1930 silver and black fox furs carried a duty of 50 percent ad valorem. Roughly approximating this same period, the production of silver fox furs increased from 6,000 in 1923 to approximately a quarter of a million in 1937. That production, incidentally, is not limited to Wisconsin but is generally confined to the northern part of the United States, including the State of Washington.

Imports of silver-fox furs have generally been small in relation to production in this country. Prior to 1936 our imports never exceeded 4,000 pelts annually, except in 1932, when they amounted to 7,000. Last year our total imports included only 16,500 pelts.

In our agreement with Canada the United States reduced the duty on silver-fox furs from 50 to 37½ percent ad valorem, a reduction of 25 percent in rate. This new rate became effective on January 1 of this year. It may be contended that this is insufficient time to estimate the effect of the concessions on imports.

The figures for March, unfortunately, will not be available until the latter part of this month. Let us look over the figures for January and February. In January we imported 14,232 skins; in February we imported 5,767 skins. That means that in the first 2 months of this year we have already imported more skins than we did in the entire preceding year. Here again it may be argued that some foreign skins were withheld from the market during the latter part of 1938 in order to take advantage of the 25-percent ad valorem reduction in duty. That is not correct, however, because in 1937 we imported only 1,310 pelts in December, and in December of 1938 we imported 2,233. In other words, the January and February import figures should not be construed as the abnormal result of a restricted importation during the latter part of 1938.

Mr. President, at this rate, a growing industry in this country will be wiped out. If this continues, the small fox-fur farmer will lose his investment and his business before the year is over. In my State he is already unable to meet his feed bills. Inside of another year, even the largest fox-fur producers in this country will be forced to the wall.

To prevent this, Mr. President, I introduce a bill, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD, relating to the rate of duty on certain fox furs imported into the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and properly referred, and, without objection, it will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2100) relating to the rate of duty on certain fox furs imported into the United States, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any provision contained in any foreign trade agreement entered into under authority of section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, the rate of duty on silver or black-fox furs or skins, dressed or undressed, not specially provided for, imported into the United States after the date of enactment of this act, shall be the rate provided for in paragraph 1519 (c) of the Tariff Act of 1930.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred, or ordered to be placed on the calendar, as indicated below:

H. R. 2595. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co. to the calendar.

H. R. 875. An act for the relief of Okie May Fegley;

H. R. 4133. An act for the relief of Joseph N. Thiele; to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (for himself, Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and Mr. LUCAS) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to House bill 5269, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, 1940, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill, to insert the following:

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to further carry out the provisions of section 32, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes", approved August 24, 1935, and subject to all provisions of law relating to the expenditure of funds appropriated by such section, $150,000,000. Such sum shall be immediately available and shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, other appropriations made by such section or for the purpose of such section: Provided, That not in excess of 25 percent of the funds herein made available may be devoted to any one agricultural commodity."

AMENDMENTS TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CONNALLY submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 4852, the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1940, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 86, line 17, after the word "Colorado", to insert a comma and the following words: "and the Colorado River project, Texas."

On page 87, to amend lines 2 to 5, inclusive, to read as follows:

"Colorado River project, Texas, $5,000,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation under this head in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1939."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 4852, the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1940, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 115, after line 11, to insert the following:

"Jefferson National Expansion Memorial: The unexpended balance of the funds made available by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 and allocated by Executive Order No. 7253 for the acquisition and development of a historic site under the act of August 21, 1935 (49 Stat. 666), to be known as the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial, contingent upon a contribution thereafter made by the city of St. Louis, Mo., as its proportionate sum for such purposes, is hereby reappropriated and made available until expended for acquisition and development of the said memorial."

SUSPENSION OF THE RULE—AMENDMENT

Mr. NEELY submitted the following notice in writing:

In accordance with the provisions of rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI, for the purpose of proposing to House bill 5219, the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1939, the following amendment, viz:

At the proper place, under the caption "Department of the Interior," insert the following:

"NATIONAL BITUMINOUS COAL COMMISSION

"The paragraph in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1938, under the caption 'National Bituminous Coal Commission,' is hereby amended by striking out the following proviso: 'Provided, That expenditures during the fiscal year 1939 under this head and under the head "Salaries and Expenses, Office of the Consumers' Counsel, National Bituminous Coal Commission,"' shall not exceed an amount equal to the aggregate receipts covered into the Treasury under the provisions of section 3 of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937."

AMENDMENT TO SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. NEELY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 5219, the second deficiency appropriation bill, 1939, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

(For amendment referred to see the foregoing notice.)

AMENDMENT OF RULE RELATIVE TO SENATE PRESS GALLERY

Mr. GILLETTE (for himself and Mr. BARBOUR) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 117), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That paragraph 2 of rule XXXIV of the Standing Rules of the Senate be amended by striking out the last sentence of said paragraph 2 and substituting in lieu thereof the following: "They shall make such regulations respecting the reporters' galleries of the Senate, together with the adjoining rooms and facilities, as will confine their occupancy and use to bona fide reporters for daily newspapers, to bona fide reporters of news or press associations requiring telegraph service to their membership, and to bona fide reporters for daily news dissemination through radio, wireless, and similar media of transmission. These regulations shall so provide for the use of such space and facilities as fairly to distribute their use to all such media of news dissemination."

OPERATIONS OF CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, while the reorganization bill was under consideration in the Senate there was considerable discussion about the operations of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, particularly with respect to the number of employees under this new agency of government.

The development of aviation is affording one of the few new avenues for private employment and is a matter of such great public importance to all sections of the country that I was desirous of obtaining more complete information with respect to the operations of this Authority than was available from the debates which took place here.

Accordingly I addressed to Mr. Edward J. Noble, Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, a letter submitting 10 questions. To this letter I now have had a very complete and illuminating response. I ask unanimous consent that this reply, which is signed by Mr. Harllee Branch, Vice Chairman and Acting Chairman of the Authority, may be published in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The response contains the questions which were submitted in my letter. The information contained in the response will be of value to the Senate in the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill which probably will be reported from the Committee on Appropriations within the next few days.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY,
Washington, April 4, 1939.

Hon. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR O'MAHONEY: I wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 1, 1939, addressed to Edward J. Noble, Chairman of the Authority, in which you request certain information concerning the employees transferred by statute to the Civil Aeronautics Authority from the former Bureau of Air Commerce and the former Bureau of Air Mail, together with information regarding staff employees who have been added by the new agency since its establishment. You also suggest that we supplement this with such other information as might contribute to a clear understanding of our operations. We are glad to submit this letter in response to your request, especially in view of certain misunderstanding which appears to have arisen concerning these matters.

In order that the answers to your specific questions may be clearly understood, we first recall to your attention the structure and functions of the new agency.

The Civil Aeronautics Authority, by the act which created it, is a quasi-judicial, quasi-legislative agency of Congress composed of five members, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Like the Interstate Commerce Commission, it exercises regulatory powers exclusively, and like the Interstate Commerce Commission, its functions cover economic regulation and safety regulation. The Civil Aeronautics Act also set up an Administrator, who, although established within the Authority, is an independent executive, appointed by the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate, and he is responsible to the President. The Administrator exercises no quasi-judicial or quasi-legislative powers; that is, he is not a regulatory agency; he is an operating agency, exercising the purely executive powers involved in the construction, maintenance and operation of air navigation facilities, and in the conduct of developmental and promotional work. He appoints his own officers and employees, and in the exercise of his statutory powers is independent of the Authority. The act also established within the Authority an Air Safety Board, composed of three members, who are likewise appointed by the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate. The Air Safety Board is an independent investigatory and analytical body, charged with the investigation of all accidents involving aircraft and with the duty of making recommendations to the Authority for the prevention of similar accidents in the future; the making public of its reports and recommendations in a manner suited to the public interest; and the conduct of such investigations and studies (with attendant recommendations) in the general field of air safety and accident prevention, as are requested or approved by the Authority. This investigatory and advisory function must not be confused, however, with the function of safety regulation, including safety inspection and the promulgation and enforcement of Civil Air Regulations, which by the act is vested in the five-man Authority. The Air Safety Board is specifically required by the act to perform its duties and functions independently, and, like the Administrator, appoints and controls its own officers and employees.

Although the Administrator and the Air Safety Board act independently of the Authority in the exercise of their statutory powers, the Civil Aeronautics Act requires that they shall cooperate with the Authority in the administration of the act.

The specific questions asked by you will be answered in the same order in which you presented them in your letter.

1. The number of departmental and field employees transferred to the Civil Aeronautics Authority on August 22, 1938, from the Bureau of Air Commerce and the Bureau of Air Mail.

By mandate of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, the President, by Executive order, on August 22, 1938, transferred to the new agency 2,938 officers and employees (375 departmental and 2,563 field) of the Bureau of Air Commerce of the Department of Commerce. Of this number, 72 (departmental, 29; field, 43) were engaged in airport projects of the W. P. A. and other Government agencies and paid from the funds provided for the purpose by the Emergency Relief Act of 1938. (For this reason these 72 persons were not included in the figure of 2,866 persons transferred from the Bureau of Air Commerce to the Civil Aeronautics Authority set forth in letters from the chairman of the Authority to Senators JOSIAH W. BAILEY and BENNETT CHAMP CLARK under date of February 21 and March 21, 1939, respectively.) Also, there were transferred by this Executive order 59 officers and employees (all departmental) of the Bureau of Air Mail of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The total staff thus transferred by the order of Congress—and not by any action of the Authority—was 2,997. Of this number, a total of 377 (departmental, 191; field, 186) were engaged in safety and economic regulation and investigatory functions, and 2,620 (departmental, 243; field, 2,377) were engaged in the construction, maintenance, and operation of airways and air-navigation aids and technical development.

The above-listed employees were transferred by the new law, which also prohibited the Civil Aeronautics Authority, including the Administrator and the Air Safety Board, from reducing the salary or grade of any one of these employees prior to the close of the present fiscal year—July 1, 1939. It is also important to note that the Civil Aeronautics Act did not provide for the transfer of any employees of either the Department of Commerce or the Interstate Commerce Commission who were not on the pay rolls of the two Bureaus transferred but who nevertheless were engaged in rendering certain administrative, legal, clerical, and similar services required for the functioning of those two aviation bureaus. It was necessary, therefore, for the Civil Aeronautics Authority, including the Administrator and the Air Safety Board, to establish administrative, legal, clerical, and similar service units to perform the work which had been formerly provided by the employees in the Department of Commerce and the Interstate Commerce Commission who were not transferred by the new law. One example: The legal staff of the Solicitor of the Department of Commerce which served the Bureau of Air Commerce was not transferred to the new agency, which had to set up its own legal department.) In the interest of economy, common service units were set up to render these necessary services for the Civil Aeronautics Authority, including the Administrator and the Air Safety Board.

2. The number of departmental and field employees appointed by the Civil Aeronautics Authority since it took office on August 22, 1938.

Of the employees on duty on February 28, 1939, the Civil Aeronautics Authority, including the Administrator and the Air Safety Board, had appointed a total of 575 (departmental 309, field 266) officers and employees since August 22, 1938, the date of its installation. Of this number, however, 271 were appointed to fill vacancies which existed in positions in the Bureau of Air Commerce which had already been authorized by Congress in the 1939 fiscal appropriation, prior to the passage of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938. During the period from January 31, 1939, to February 28, 1939, 50 employees who had been transferred to the Administrator by Executive order or appointed by him completed their specific tasks or voluntarily terminated their employment.

In addition to the 575 employees appointed and on duty on February 28, 1939, there were also on duty on that date 29 of the 141 temporary employees who had been employed upon the special project of the national airport survey directed by Congress and recently completed. These 29 were engaged in the consolidation of the records of the airport survey. The employment of all but two or three of these has now been terminated.

The actual number of new positions created and filled by the Civil Aeronautics Authority, including the Administrator and the Air Safety Board, as of February 28, 1939, over the number of authorized positions transferred to the new agency from the Bureau of Air Commerce and the Bureau of Air Mail is 333 employees, 12 of whom are paid from W. P. A. funds and 29 of whom are the temporary employees referred to above. Such personnel as have been added to date were employed to perform the new functions prescribed by the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, which were unknown to the old statutes administered by the Bureau of Air Commerce and the Bureau of Air Mail.

3. The total number of employees on the rolls of the Civil Aeronautics Authority as of the most recent date on which there is complete data.

The total number of officials and employees on duty in the Civil Aeronautics Authority as of February 28, 1939, including temporary employees, was 3,601 (departmental, 772; field, 2,829).

4. A statement showing the distribution of officials and employees in accordance with the functions of the Civil Aeronautics Authority organization.

The following indicates the distribution by functions of the personnel transferred by the act, the personnel appointed by the new agency, and the personnel on duty as of February 28, 1939:

	Personnel transferred	Personnel appointed	Personnel on duty
Regulatory functions (the Civil Aeronautics Authority)	331	147	478
Construction, maintenance, and operating functions (the Administrator)	[1] 2,351	:290	[2] 2,607
Investigatory functions (the Air Safety Board)	6	55	61
General service functions rendered to the Authority, Administrator, Air Safety Board (legal, secretary, including fiscal, records, personnel, purchase, etc., functions)	309	146	455
Total	[1] 2,997	[2] 638	[3] 3,601

[1] Includes 34 persons whose employment was terminated between Aug. 22, 1938, and Feb. 28, 1939, and 72 persons transferred to the Administrator from the Bureau of Air Commerce who were engaged in airport services to the Works Progress Administration and other governmental agencies and paid from funds provided for that purpose by the Emergency Relief Act of 1938.

[2] Includes 29 temporary employees still on duty Feb. 28, 1939, in connection with the National Airport Survey, and 12 employees appointed by the Administrator in connection with his airport duties who were paid from emergency relief funds.

[3] Includes a total of 84 persons (departmental 34, field 50), employed by the Administrator in connection with the statutory duties concerning airports and his airport services to the Works Progress Administration and other governmental agencies and paid from emergency relief funds, and also 29 temporary employees referred to in the note above.

5. The number of employees authorized for both the Bureau of Air Commerce and the Bureau of Air Mail in the Appropriation Act of 1939.

The Appropriation Act of 1939, which was enacted prior to the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, and the establishment of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, authorized 3,288 employees in the Bureau of Air Commerce of the Department of Commerce, and 59 employees in the Bureau of Air Mail of the Interstate Commerce Commission, making a total of 3,347 employees. Thus, the total number of 3,601 employees on duty on February 28, 1939, in the Authority, including the Administrator and the Air Safety Board, represents a net increase of 254 employees over the total authorized by Congress for both of the old bureaus prior to the creation of the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

6. Comparison between the number of employees now in the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the number of employees in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is an independent regulatory body and has a staff, according to my information, of 2,599 employees, engaged in the work of economic and safety regulation of rail and motor carrier transportation. The Civil Aeronautics Authority, as distinguished from the Administrator, is also an independent regulatory body and has a total staff of 620 employees (including 61 employees of the Air Safety Board performing independent investigatory and analytical functions, and the proper allocation of the personnel of the common service units utilized jointly by the Authority, the Administrator, and the Air Safety Board) who are engaged in the work of economic and safety regulation.

It is important to remember that the economic regulatory power of the Authority embraces not only the common carriers of the air which operate within the United States and in its Territorial possessions, but includes also the regulation of American air carriers engaged in overseas and foreign air transportation within Alaska, across the Pacific to Hong Kong, throughout Central and South America and the Caribbean area, to Bermuda and Canada, and within the next few months, across the Atlantic to Europe, and the regulation of foreign air carriers operating between foreign countries and the United States or its possessions; and that the safety regulatory power of the Authority is not limited, as is the safety regulatory power of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to common carriers by rail or motor, but extends to all civil aircraft, all airmen and ground personnel in connection therewith, and extends also to regulatory power over the manufacture, design, and export of aircraft, and to the certification of schools for the training of pilots and mechanics.

While the scope of the economic regulation conferred by the Civil Aeronautics Act is substantially the same as that exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the economic regulatory functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission affect a much larger number of carriers. On the other hand, every civil aviator and his aircraft are subject to much more far reaching and intensive safety regulation than is applied to rail, bus, water, or any other form of transportation.

The function of safety regulation exercised by the Authority far exceeds in scope and intensity the similar power exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Thus, the Authority inspects and certificates the design, manufacture, production, and airworthiness of aircraft. The Interstate Commerce Commission does not approve or license either the design or safety-worthiness of locomotives or cars. The Civil Aeronautics Authority examines (including, in some cases, physical examinations) and certificates pilots, mechanics, dispatchers, and other airmen. The Interstate Commerce Commission does not examine or license engineers, conductors, mechanics, dispatchers, or any other railroad operating personnel. The Authority prescribes in the minutest detail the conditions upon which aircraft may be operated, including such matters as daylight and darkness, weather, equipment, and accessories to be employed in the aircraft, facilities to be utilized on the ground, etc. The safety regulatory powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission extend only to the use and condition of certain prescribed safety appliances.

Because the Interstate Commerce Commission exercises no executive function of construction, maintenance, and operation such as is exercised by the Administrator in the Civil Aeronautics Authority and, therefore, no comparison can be made between the staff of the Administrator and that of the Interstate Commerce Commission, it is pertinent here to point out the extent of the executive duties imposed by the Civil Aeronautics Act upon the Administrator and for the exercise of which he is solely responsible.

If one could imagine a Federal agency made up of the staff of the Interstate Commerce Commission plus the staff of the Bureau of Lighthouses; or a Federal agency made up of the staff of the Interstate Commerce Commission plus the staff of the Bureau of Public Roads; or a Federal agency made up of the Interstate Commerce Commission plus all the staff of the railroads engaged in the construction, maintenance, and operation of block signals, lights, telegraphic communications, and traffic-control systems of the railroads, and also their staff engaged upon the laying out of the rights-of-way and the designing and drafting of the plans for the railway stations, one would then have an agency to compare with the Civil Aeronautics Authority, including the Administrator, with its combined functions of regulation and construction, maintenance, and operation. Even such an imaginary agency would not include the function of technical development with which the Administrator is also charged.

Under the direction and control of the Administrator, there are 44 designated civil airways in the United States and its Territorial possessions, having a total mileage of approximately 25,400 miles. Along these civil airways there are 13 airway traffic-control stations; 298 intermediate landing fields; 190 radio range beacon and communication stations; 2,130 airway beacons; 57 nondirectional radio-marker beacons; 35 ultrahigh frequency radio fan-type markers; and over 30,000 miles of teletype communication circuits, serving 358 different stations with weather reports and other information necessary to safe air navigation. Two thousand six hundred and sixty-two employees of the Administrator are engaged continuously in the construction, maintenance, and operation of these air-navigation facilities, and the services of 1,903 of these persons are devoted exclusively to the communication systems. These aids to air navigation are available alike to the military pilot, the private flyer and the common carrier of the air engaged in the transportation of passengers and mail.

7. The number of employees of the scheduled air-line companies.

The total number of employees of the scheduled air carriers (not including the fixed base operators who may be common carriers by air), as indicated by the records of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, is 13,417. The air carriers have not, in all cases, kept these records up to date, but the above figure is known to be less than the number actually employed by the air carriers.

8. The number of charter and fixed base operators regulated by the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Charter and fixed base operators subject to the terms of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 are 1,527 in number. The records of the Civil Aeronautics Authority indicate that there are 1,159 air line transport pilots and 7,839 persons possessing commercial pilot certificates of competency. Each of these 8,998 must be reexamined by the staff of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, both as to physical condition and technical skill, each 6 months.

9. The number of private fliers regulated by the Authority.

There are 53,067 private fliers, including student pilots, in the United States, regulated by the Authority. Each of these pilots is subject to periodic examination by the staff of the Authority to insure his continuing physical and technical competency. Likewise, there are 11,159 civil aircraft registered in the United States, of which number only 362 are operated by the transport companies. Each of these aircraft must, under the regulations, be inspected periodically by the staff of the Civil Aeronautics Authority for the purpose of insuring their continuing airworthiness. There are, in addition, 9,884 aircraft and aircraft-engine mechanics, 290 dispatchers, 397 parachute riggers, 123 air-traffic control-tower operators, and 92 ground instructors, each of whom, by law and regulation, is required to have a certificate of competency issued by the Authority, and each of whom, likewise, is subject to periodic examination.

10. A statement showing the additional duties and functions required of the Civil Aeronautics Authority which were not required of the Bureau of Air Commerce and the Bureau of Air Mail.

Additional duties and functions imposed upon the new agency by the Civil Aeronautics Act, which were not required of the Bureau of Air Commerce and the Bureau of Air Mail, are as follows:

THE FIVE-MEMBER AUTHORITY

(a) The regulation of competition between air carriers through the issuance of certificates of public convenience and necessity and the issuance of foreign air carrier permits.

(b) The regulation of air passenger and express rates, including control over trade practices and methods, the division of rates, and the removal of discrimination and preferential treatment in the conduct of the business of the air carrier.

(c) The regulation of mergers and consolidations, transfers of property, and acquisitions of control by air carriers.

(d) The regulation of interlocking officers and directors and other interlocking relationships.

(e) The regulation of pooling agreements related to traffic, competition, earnings, service, equipment, rates, and other matters affecting operations, except for such limited control as was exercised by the Postmaster General through the instrumentality of the domestic air-mail contracts.

(f) The regulation of loans and other financial aid received from the United States or any of its agencies for the benefit of any common carrier.

(g) The recordation of all conveyances affecting the title to or interest in any civil aircraft.

(h) The certification of many additional persons of the "airmen" class which under the old law were not subject to regulation.

(The administration of the foregoing powers in most cases requires formal hearings by the Authority.)

(i) Advice to and consultation with the Department of State in the negotiation of all international agreements and arrangements affecting aviation. These added functions of the Authority cover all of the functions previously discharged by the Interdepartmental Committee for Civil International Aviation, composed of the Assistant Secretaries of State, Treasury, and Commerce, and the Second Assistant Postmaster General, which committee was dissolved by the President when the Civil Aeronautics Authority took over its functions. The development of plans in cooperation with the State Department looking toward the establishment of the trans-Atlantic service and the study of means for extending American air-carrier operations in Latin America constitute 2 of some 40 pending matters of this character upon which the Authority has been continuously engaged since last August.

(j) An investigation and study of foreign air carrier rates for report to Congress not later than August 22, 1939, on the question whether there should be a regulation of such rates.

THE ADMINISTRATOR

(k) The acquisition, establishment, operation, and maintenance of airports and other air navigation facilities thereon.

(l) The acquisition of air navigation facilities.

(m) The investigation and approval of the expenditure of all Federal funds, except those devoted exclusively to military purposes, by 15 Federal agencies on airport and other air navigation facilities projects on which they are engaged.

(n) A field survey of the existing system of airports for the purpose of reporting to Congress on behalf of the Authority, not later than February 1, 1939, recommendations as to whether the Federal Government should participate in the construction, development, and operation of the national system of airports; and if so, to what extent and in what manner the Federal Government should so participate.

(o) The collection and dissemination of information relative to civil aeronautics, and its exchange with foreign countries, and a study of the possibilities of the development of air commerce and the aeronautical industry.

The large amount of overtime accumulated by the regulatory staff of the Authority during the 8 weeks from January 30 to March 26, 1939, indicates that, although additional personnel have been employed under the new act, the new agency is not overstaffed. For example, the record shows that during the above-named period 478 employees engaged in economic and safety regulation were required to spend 5,034 hours in overtime, 80 percent of which, or 3,940 hours, were spent on the additional economic regulatory functions imposed by the new law. Sixteen regulatory employees engaged upon the international work described above in paragraph (g) spent 235 hours per week overtime during the same period.

In the preparation of my reply to your letter I have freely consulted with the Administrator and the Chairman of the Air Safety Board, and I am authorized by them to advise you that they both concur in the statements contained in this letter.

Sincerely,

HARLLEE BRANCH,
Vice Chairman and Acting Chairman.

SAVE DEMOCRACY AT HOME—ADDRESS BY SENATOR SHIPSTEAD

[Mr. NYE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject Save Democracy at Home, delivered by Senator SHIPSTEAD on April 2, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

LET THOSE WHO CHALLENGE TAKE THE RESPONSIBILITY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR NYE

[Mr. LUNDEEN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject Let Those Who Challenge Take the Responsibility, delivered by Senator NYE on April 4, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

FREIGHT RATES—ADDRESS BY SENATOR STEWART

[Mr. HILL asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject of freight rates delivered by Senator STEWART on April 4, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

UNEMPLOYMENT, ALIEN REGISTRATION, AND IMMIGRATION

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD clipping from the Times-Herald of Washington, D. C., and from the Greensboro (N. C.) Daily News relative to unemployment, the registration of aliens, and the restriction of immigration, which appear in the Appendix.]

THE SILVER-PURCHASE PROGRAM

[Mr. TOWNSEND asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD several editorials on the subject of the Silver Purchase Program, which appears in the Appendix.]

RECIPROCAL TAXATION OF FEDERAL AND STATE OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3790) relating to the taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. HARRISON, Mr. BROWN, Mr. CONNALLY, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE conferees on the part of the Senate.

CALL OF THE CALENDAR DISPENSED WITH

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further routine morning business, consideration of bills on the calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, for the time being, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the call of the calendar will be dispensed with.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, as I stated a few moments ago I would do, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 246.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution, which the clerk will state by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 246) making a further additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 246) making a further additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] if he desires recognition. If not, he will recognize the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], who asked the Chair to recognize him to offer an amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Florida will permit me, I should like to make a very brief statement.

The House of Representatives had under consideration the recommendation of the President for an appropriation of an additional $150,000,000 for relief purposes, to be added to the relief appropriation provided by the measure now on the statute books. The House of Representatives held extensive hearings. Various amounts were voted upon in the House. The House voted not to appropriate the full amount; they voted not to appropriate $125,000,000; they voted not to reduce the amount to $50,000,000; they voted against placing it at $75,000,000, and, by a very large majority, voted to fix the amount in accordance with the recommendation of the House Appropriations Committee at $100,000,000.

Mr. President, the Senate Committee on Appropriations took into consideration the House hearings. They took into consideration the votes in the House. We had hearings of our own. The matter was gone over with a great deal of care. Members of the subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee had different views as to the amount which should be appropriated; but, after a very careful consideration of the situation and of the prospects, it was the unanimous opinion of the subcommittee, which was confirmed by the full committee, that the wise and the proper thing for the committee to do was to recommend to the Senate the approval of the measure as it came from the House.

This conclusion involved concessions on the part of practically all the members of the committee. These concessions were made in the interest of what we believe to be the welfare of the relief administration in the United States, the welfare of the Government, and also to avoid what might be uncomfortable, unpleasant controversies on the subject, which involves masses of figures and many misunderstandings. The committee feels, I think most sincerely, that the amount recommended will adequately and fairly care for all those in the United States who are now entitled to the aid of the Federal Government. Of course, it will not take care of every individual in need in the United States. No appropriation can reach that point, but the one recommended is a fair adjustment of differences of opinion; and I think every member of the committee was actuated by a genuine, sincere motive to accomplish the aims and purposes of relief of justified cases within the United States.

Therefore, on behalf of the committee, I urge that the report be adopted and that the joint resolution be passed as it came from the House.

Mr. PEPPER obtained the floor.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield in order that I may ask the Senator from Colorado a question?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BILBO. Did the Senator's committee have before it Colonel Harrington, the National Administrator, in regard to the disposition of this problem?

Mr. ADAMS. We did.

Mr. BILBO. Did he insist that it was necessary and urgent that the entire $150,000,000 be appropriated?

Mr. ADAMS. He gave us figures as to the number employed and as to the amount of money available; and the conclusion of the committee is that those figures demonstrate that the full amount of $150,000,000 is not necessary.

Mr. BILBO. The point is, Colonel Harrington was trying to persuade the members of the committee to grant $150,000,000, was he not?

Mr. ADAMS. Colonel Harrington was called before the committee at our instance to furnish us with information. Colonel Harrington was not presenting to us an argument one way or the other. He was presenting to us facts and answering questions. The hearing was purely a matter of question and answer on the part of the committee and the Colonel.

Mr. BILBO. Am I to understand the Senator to state to the Senate that Colonel Harrington made no recommendation?

Mr. ADAMS. I cannot accurately say that. The Colonel would prefer to have the $150,000,000; but he gave us figures which, in the unanimous judgment of the Appropriations Committee, show that the appropriation of the full amount is not necessary to carry out Colonel Harrington's own program.

Mr. BILBO. And to that extent the committee disagreed with his conclusions about the effect of the figures?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that the President of the United States had made a recommendation. Colonel Harrington is his appointee. There was nothing under the shining sun that the Colonel could do but to come and say that of course he concurred with the recommendation of his chief.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope the Senator from Colorado will not leave the implication that in what Colonel Harrington stated to the committee he was actuated purely by the fact that he had been appointed by the President of the United States. I think he is enitled to have that implication removed if it exists.

Mr. ADAMS. No; I will say to the Senator that my answer was the other way—that Colonel Harrington's situation was such that he could not very well take a different position. I do not mean to say that he was actuated by that fact in forming his judgment.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should not like to have the Senator leave the implication that if Colonel Harrington could have taken a different position, he would have done so.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not know what he would have done.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not there is a quorum of the Senate present. I am going to take only a relatively short time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rules of the Senate, the Chair is not allowed to count the Members present. Therefore, the Chair cannot tell the Senator whether or not there is a quorum present.

Mr. PEPPER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	King	Reed
Andrews	Davis	La Follette	Reynolds
Ashurst	Donahey	Lee	Russell
Austin	Downey	Lodge	Schwartz
Bankhead	Ellender	Logan	Schwellenbach
Barbour	Frazier	Lucas	Sheppard
Barkley	George	Lundeen	Shipstead
Bilbo	Gerry	McCarran	Smathers
Bone	Gillette	McKellar	Smith
Borah	Glass	McNary	Stewart
Bridges	Green	Maloney	Taft
Brown	Guffey	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Gurney	Miller	Thomas, Utah
Burke	Harrison	Minton	Townsend
Byrd	Hatch	Murray	Tydings
Byrnes	Hayden	Neely	Vandenberg
Capper	Herring	Norris	Wagner
Caraway	Hill	Nye	Wheeler
Chavez	Holman	O'Mahoney	White
Clark, Idaho	Holt	Overton	Wiley
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I move to amend the joint resolution, in line 8, by striking out "$825,000,000" and inserting "$875,000,000"; and in line 9, by striking out "$100,000,000" and inserting "$150,000,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "$825,000,000" and insert "$875,000,000"; and on the same page, line 9, it is proposed to strike out "$100,000,000" and insert "$150,000,000."

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I desire to disabuse the minds of Senators as to the length of time I myself shall detain them in the discussion of this amendment. As a preliminary to that discussion, I should like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], three or four questions.

The first question is, Was it not the recommendation of the President of the United States that the amount appropriated for this purpose at this time be $875,000,000 in the original instance, and subsequently $150,000,000, to make the figure $725,000,000 come up to $875,000,000?

Mr. ADAMS. Of course. That is shown from the records of the Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. In the second place, I should like to ask if Colonel Harrington, the W. P. A. Administrator, a colonel in the Army, did not come before the subcommittee and recommend that the needs of the W. P. A. required an additional appropriation of $150,000,000 at this time?

Mr. ADAMS. As I recollect his statement, he was asked the question, and he said, in substance—I am not quoting him accurately—that he did not feel free to say that $100,000,000 would be adequate. There was no insistence on his part. There was no argument, no discussion back and forth with Colonel Harrington on the matter. That is, we got from him certain figures in answer to questions propounded by members of the committee.

Mr. PEPPER. I will put the question in this way: Colonel Harrington did tell the committee, did he not, that unless his request of $150,000,000 was granted, there would be a very substantial reduction in the number of persons employed on the W. P. A. rolls?

Mr. ADAMS. I do not think his testimony is open to that interpretation.

Mr. PEPPER. I will ask the Senator the next question: Is it a fact that this report for $100,000,000 is the unanimous report of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. ADAMS. It is the unanimous report of the subcommittee and also of the whole committee.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I think it is very clear to everyone what are the fundamental issues involved in this discussion. I knew, of course, that there had been a unanimous-consent agreement among the members of the subcommittee and the full committee, as every other Member of the Senate knew, and we knew the reasons why such an agreement had been entered into. It was because Senators did not want to have a controversy on the floor over this question.

This is the first instance of which I know when, upon a matter of this character, as to which there is a wide diversity of sentiment as is known to exist among the members of the committee, there has been a unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations about an appropriation of the character of that now under consideration. Some might put it on the ground of expediency, that we should not have any lack of unity, that we should not have an unfortunate schism in our ranks.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has inadvertently dropped into an error which I think ought to be corrected at this point.

The subcommittee which had charge of this matter were very greatly divided. I know there were three members of the subcommittee, and I think possibly there were four, who were opposed to appropriating any additional amount. There were two of us, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] and myself, who wanted the full amount appropriated. There was one who, as I recall, was in favor of an appropriation of $38,000,000, one who favored an appropriation of fifty million, one was willing to go to eighty-three million, though he fixed seventy-five million as the proper amount, and I think another was in favor of an appropriation of seventy-five million.

It was perfectly apparent to me that unless we could come to some reasonable agreement there would probably not be reported by the committee an amount exceeding $75,000,000. I think I can say without the slightest fear of being contradicted that the highest amount that possibly could have been brought out of the committee would have been $83,000,000. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] and I, believing that there should be a larger amount appropriated, having fought all during the controversy for a larger amount, when it was proposed by one member of the committee who had previously voted with us that we go ahead and adopt exactly the amount appropriated by the House, came to the conclusion, and I believe every other member of the committee came to the conclusion, that that amount was as much as we could possibly get; and we agreed to a compromise adjustment in the sum of $100,000,000.

In my judgment that was a demonstration of good sense; in my judgment, it was best for those on relief; in my judgment, it was best in every sense. An additional reason to those I have already given is that we had information from the House that under no circumstances would the House agree to a higher sum than $100,000,000. We thought this money should be appropriated and appropriated now for those on relief. So there was a unanimous report of the committee. There was nothing devious about it; there was nothing secret about it; there was nothing controversial about it. It was a plain matter of doing the best that could be done under the circumstances.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I appreciate the very frank and very fair statement from the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. I know there is no Senator in this body whose inclination is stronger toward giving adequate relief to the unemployed, as his long fight on that subject has indicated, than is that of the Senator from Tennessee. But the tragic information which the Senator discloses is that when the Congress has taken the bit in its teeth, when it has shown itself in dissonance with the President in matters of policy, it has definitely sabotaged the effort of the Government of the United States to solve the existing chaotic economic condition.

What has happened is that we have reached the perihelion of our orbit in dealing with this subject. We started up the hill a little while ago, and, with a display of heroics, we made an assault upon this problem, which, we admitted, challenged the very best the Government could do, and for 5 or 6 years we have gone ahead toward our objective until the present time, and now the Congress of the United States tells the unemployed millions of America, those who have not had a chance to work in the past, "Henceforth you need expect no opportunity for work from me." By the same token and as a part of the same sentiment we have said to the farmers of the United States, "Neither can you expect any effective help from the Congress."

We started up the hill, and when the fire got hot we stopped and turned our backs toward our objective, and all we can claim is that we are retreating slowly.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. When the Senator from Florida referred to our having started up the hill, did he have in mind having reached the point of a $40,000,000,000 national debt? Is that the degree of going up the hill to which he referred? And how much further than that does the Senator think the country can safely go?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I associate the $40,000,000,000 public debt with that procedure of going up the hill toward the solution of our present economic condition. If the Senator will examine the record, with which he is already familiar, he will find that since 1932 we have incurred a net deficit of approximately $12,000,000,000, and that net deficit is arrived at by taking into consideration a credit from the cash on hand in the Treasury, the money on deposit in the stabilization fund, the value of the Government's proprietary interest in the several agencies of the Federal Government, and the assets which the Government has on hand belonging to the several agencies of the Federal Government. I say that in the course of the last 6 years we have incurred a net deficit of approximately $12,000,000,000.

If we will add to each year's income the difference between the actual income and what the income was in 1932, we will find that during the same period the national income has increased a total of about $102,000,000,000, and that therefore the American people have made money off this increase in their national debt.

I think the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, is a responsible individual both as to ability and integrity, and in a little book called "The Paths to Plenty," which he wrote, and in a supplement to that volume, the Secretary pointed out that the amount of private investment between 1921 and 1927—that is to say, the expansion of the long-term private credit of the United States—yielded in national income only about 4 to 1, whereas there is a yield in national income from the increase of the public debt in the last 6 years of something like 8 to 1. So that this expenditure has not been an extravagance or a loss; it has been the means of bringing about a great increase in the assets of the people of the United States.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. If during this period the net national debt has increased twelve or thirteen billion dollars, according to the Senator's figures, and the returns to the country in additional income have been a hundred billion dollars, is the Senator willing to say that Congress and the administration are subject to criticism for not having increased the net national debt by twice as much in order to produce twice as much additional revenue for the country?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I will answer the question categorically "yes," and then impose a qualification which I think the Senator will understand as reasonable. I answer "yes" to define the duty of the Government in the original instance, to define the initial effort of the Government of the United States to take money out of the depositories of the country, where it has been placed by capital and labor, and put it to the legitimate purpose of increasing employment in the United States. So, to reply to the Senator, my answer is "yes," that the national debt should have been expanded to the extent that was necessary to get the economic machine actually under momentum. The qualification is that when we do that in an adequate way, I believe there will no longer be a necessity for increasing the deficit or the debt. I believe it will be possible when we reach that stage for the income to be approximately the same as the outgo, and at the same time maintain the economic momentum.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. From the Senator's study of the question, can he advise us how much greater expansion he thinks would have been required originally and carried on through the years in order to have attained the very desirable end that he outlines for us?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator in two ways. In the first place, had that principle been applied in the Hoover administration the total amount required would have been vastly less than it actually has been. I have always believed that if President Hoover and his administration had had the downright courage at the time that the depression became acute in this country to have put $5,000,000,000 or $10,000,000,000 into immediate availability to enhance the consumer purchasing power of America; if he had had the forthright courage to have guaranteed the bank deposits of America, at least over a period, if not indefinitely; if he had had the determination to say that the Government of the United States would do something effective about the problem of unemployment, and had convinced the American people that he meant what he said, the amount, I believe, would have been reduced at least half below what it has been so far.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator reserve his question for just a moment, and then he may interrogate me about the two points?

Mr. BURKE. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. The other answer I want to give to the Senator from Nebraska is that in 1936 we had the predicate definitely laid for that situation, that is to say, we had reached a degree of momentum which would have carried the economic machine along with relatively little help of an artificial sort from the Federal Government. But we did not choose to follow that method, I will say to the Senator. There were people in this country who believed in balancing the Budget. There were some people who said, as one of the members of the Appropriations Committee did, that there was no need of appropriating any more Federal funds for unemployment relief. There are some honorable gentlemen who are so far able to dissociate themselves either from the facts or from the demands of their country, that they can take a point of view such as that.

So I will say to the Senator that if in 1937 we had continued that program without diminution or reduction, I believe that by the end of 1937 a sufficient momentum would have been acquired to have accomplished the results I speak of without a particularly large Federal contribution being necessary.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BANKHEAD in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. Was there not also a failure of cooperation on the part of the big business and industrial interests of the country, and is it not true that at the period to which the Senator has just adverted, the large corporations of the country began to raise and manipulate prices, which, while resulting in enormous profits to them, took out of circulation the money that was being put into circulation by the Government spending, and that all the big corporations of the country made more profits during that period than they did during 1929, which was the period of the highest industrial activity in this country?

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is eminently correct, and I appreciate the contribution he has made to the subject.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. No matter what the contentions may be as to why or how the conditions were brought about and why they did not improve, we find ourselves in the situation, which has been referred to, and the question is, What are we going to do about it? Are we going to spend upward of $2,000,000,000 for preparations for war, because some people are seeing spooks and bogeymen in their attics, and so forth; and then when it comes to the question of our own people, of bread for our own people, and the support of the American people standing under the American flag, we quibble about $50,000,000, but we are not concerned about $2,000,000,000 for some fantastic war that is being talked about? Today is the twenty-second anniversary of the most colossal blunder in our American history—our futile adventure into the boundary disputes and real-estate titles of Europe. What did our entry into that war settle? Exactly nothing and here we are discussing the backwash of that war—hunger and unemployment. Have we learned our lesson?

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator. I agree with him heartily.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question with respect to the first part of his answer to my previous question?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. As I understand, the Senator is now critical of the administration which was in authority prior to March 4, 1933, on the ground if that administration had adopted a larger spending program, without regard to the accumulation of a deficit, and without any particular attention to the Budget, or balancing the Budget, that today, having acted early in that respect, the country would be much farther along on the road toward permanent recovery. My question is only this: Can the Senator point out a single sentence in the Democratic platform of 1932 or a single utterance of the Democratic nominee for President in that year which gives even the slightest support to the contention the Senator now makes as to what was the proper course for the country to pursue?

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator in his intimation is entirely correct. I cannot. I can explain the Democratic platform of 1932 only by saying that there was a gross misunderstanding of the very nature of the modern economic problem, and I am perfectly willing to confess the error of my own party as well as to criticize the lack of effort of the other party.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that particular point?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. The Senator must remember that the Democratic Party, when it came into power in 1933, did endeavor to carry out the 1932 platform promise by the enactment of the so-called Economy Act. Shortly thereafter we found that we had make a serious, a vitally serious, mistake. The Economy Act again started deflation, and it became necessary, if we were to save the economic structure, to change our opinion and direction.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is correct. I thank him for his able suggestion.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I wonder what the Senator thinks of the proposition involved in the question of my colleague, that if we find somebody starving, through no fault of his own, we must look to the Democratic platform to see whether or not we have any right to act?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I think the Senator knows what my answer to that question is. I think the Democratic platforms, even if they contain a prohibition against doing a necessary thing, are just as wrong as any other prohibition of the same character. The Democratic platform has no other significance to me than that it represented the conscientious expression of my political party at that time under existing circumstances. That is not the first time in the history of my party, or of the other party, or of any party, that we have found we were confronted by actualities and not by philosophies and theories.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. If tomorrow there should be a terrible earthquake which should destroy the city of New York, and Congress were called upon to go to the relief of the stricken people who survived, I wonder whether we ought to hesitate before we acted to see whether there was anything said about it in the Democratic platform or any other platform.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the junior Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. I wish first to compliment the Senator upon his very frank answer to the question that the Democratic Party, both by its nominees and by its platform in 1932, was following what he now considers a mistaken policy.

The point I was endeavoring to bring out in my question was not that we must now look to the Democratic platform of 1932, or the platform on which any Senator may have ever run for office in this body, or any other thing in the past, but to say—and the Senator frankly admitted it—that we must temper our criticism of those who took a different view than the Senator now takes, on the ground that it was not a partisan matter at that time, because our party, the Democratic Party, as well as the Republican Party, then was proceeding on the idea that in the long run greater good would result to the country from following the course that had heretofore been the established course, and endeavoring to live within our income, except for some reasonably short period. I see no merit whatever in any suggestion that in calling attention to these facts now we are laying ourselves open to the charge that we are not interested in the welfare of suffering humanity.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, it is a wise man who will change his mind and a fool who never will. But I will have to say, in deserved compliment to the Democratic Party and the nominee of the Democratic Party in 1932, that when they discovered the fallacy of the declaration they had made, they had the courage to face the world and change their minds and change that policy. In private life I regard such an attitude as the essence of a big man, a man of large character. As applied to the Democratic Party, I take it to be an evidence of conscientiousness on its part, and of a sincere desire to confront the actualities of the situation with the means which may be required to meet the problem.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. On that point, what does the Senator find the situation to be today? How many persons will be laid off during April, and what will be the result of the reduction in the amount for which the President and the W. P. A. have asked? What will happen?

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator. I will say in response to the Senator that the advice I have from the W. P. A. Administrator is that on the first of this month 200,000 W. P. A. workers actually were severed from the relief rolls.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Of course, they are only Americans. They do not count. If they were Armenians, or refugees, or foreigners, then we would become very much excited about them. However, they are only Americans; so never mind.

Mr. PEPPER. In addition to that, Mr. President, a few days ago the President of the United States made the statement at Warm Springs that 400,000 more than these 200,000 would have to be eliminated if this appropriation were not $150,000,000. That is the amount my amendment proposes. I will say to Senators that the reason I wished to raise this question on the floor of the Senate is because of the significance of our action on the question.

I realize that certain Senators believe absolutely in the doctrine pursued by Mr. Hoover's administration. Those Senators believe literally in the declaration of the Democratic platform of 1932. Those Senators believe in their hearts—and I am sorry some of them are not now in the Chamber—that we should do away with every single dollar of emergency appropriations and, in addition, reduce the other expenditures of the Government to the bare minimum required to carry on the regular activities of the Federal Government.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. PEPPER. I will ask the Senator if he will not withhold his suggestion of the absence of a quorum. So far as I am concerned, I prefer not to have a quorum call.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Very well.

Mr. PEPPER. The reason I desired to bring up the question is because I want the Senate of the United States to indicate to the American people how it feels about this fundamental question. It is not merely a question of $50,000,000. Fifty million dollars would give employment to perhaps 820,000 persons for 1 month, or a third of that number for 3 months. I think that the lives, the security, the health, and the well-being of 820,000 American breadwinners are important to the American people and to the security and well-being of our Nation. However, deeper than the significance and importance to the people of the whole country of those 820,000 breadwinners with their dependents is the question whether or not we have lost confidence in the policy we have pursued since 1933. Is the Democratic majority of the United States Congress to face the 11,000,000 unemployed and say, "We have gone as far as we shall ever go"?

No one doubts the fact that there are ten or eleven million unemployed men and women in this country. The chairman of the Appropriations Committee does not dispute that fact. I have before me statistics which come from the organization of the National Manufacturers Association which is responsible for the collection of unemployment data. The statistics show that the number of unemployed is a minimum of 10,000,000. Yet the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], is credited in a newspaper statement with saying that he does not favor a cent more of appropriation, because it is not needed. The chairman of the subcommittee has certainly indicated previously that he did not believe that an additional appropriation was necessary.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask the Senator to make clear his statement as to "additional appropriation"? I have supported every appropriation bill for relief which has been upon the floor of the United States Senate. I merely differed with the Senator from Florida as to whether we should have added $725,000,000 or $875,000,000, which is far from saying that I did not believe in additional appropriations. Today I am differing with him. I am in favor of adding $100,000,000, whereas the Senator is in favor of adding $150,000,000. That fact does not justify the statement that the chairman of the subcommittee is not in favor of increased appropriations for relief.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, to the extent that I inferred what I did not intend to state, I apologize to the Senator. I will state clearly what I meant to say. I meant that the newspapers have quoted the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, as saying that he did not believe that a cent, even of the $100,000,000, was needed for relief. I will say that the official attitude of the chairman of the subcommittee is that he does not think a penny in excess of $100,000,000 is necessary. Is that statement correct?

Mr. ADAMS. That is entirely correct.

Mr. PEPPER. These two Senators entrusted with leadership on the Appropriations Committee have told the 200,000 who were let off the W. P. A. rolls the 1st of this month: "You do not need a job."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. Perhaps the Senators have thought those on relief are not worthy of a job. I could name Senators and others who do not believe they are worthy of a job. In those great hearts of theirs they simply are not sympathetic toward the problem of the little fellows who may have been failures in the competitive game of modern life.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator's statement. However, when the Senator has concluded, I wish to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Minnesota for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. PEPPER. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida declines to yield for that purpose at this time.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the crucial point in this matter is, How do Senators feel about the question of relief? Do they think that those who are out of jobs have had the same opportunity as themselves to make a success in life? Do they think that by thrift, frugality, and diligence they might have reached the same high estate which Members of Congress have reached? Do Senators feel that it is a waste of money for the Federal Government to give to the unemployed the opportunity to work?

Mr. President, let me point out that those on relief are not seeking charity. They do not have their hands extended seeking alms. They do not come on bended knee like beggars upon the street to claim the munificence of our charity. All they ask is the right to work such number of hours per day as the Administrator and the law may require of them. In my State they are even willing to do manual labor for $26 a month. That shows the degree of their destitution, and the element of sincerity in their approach to the problem.

Certain Members of Congress take the position that because we give these people a chance to work somehow or other we are being very generous and very noble toward them; that somehow or other we are reaching down into the reservoirs of our saved capital and scattering it upon the winds; and that the only reward that we may expect is the consolation of having done a good deed.

Mr. President, if that is the attitude, the intention, and the faith of the Members of the United States Congress toward this question, my advice is that the people of the United States would better look well to the kind of representation they have in their National Government.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Are we to understand that the Senator from Florida will interpret a vote against his amendment as meaning that the one casting such a vote has no sympathy in his heart for the man who is out of work and in need, or for his family? Is that the interpretation the Senator places upon every vote cast against his amendment?

Mr. PEPPER. Well, Mr. President, I will let the Senator answer that question for himself upon these premises——

Mr. BURKE. Let me answer it, then, by asking the Senator a question.

Mr. PEPPER. Very well.

Mr. BURKE. Does not the Senator recognize that there is a view opposite to that which he holds, a view that the way to put the 11,000,000 people, or the major portion of them back to work, is to bring about such a revival of industrial activity in this country as will provide jobs for them in private employment, and that the very attitude the Senator is taking, and expressing so eloquently, is considered by many to be one of the strongest deterring influences against that revival of activity that will provide work for all those who desire to work?

Mr. PEPPER. I will answer the Senator by saying that I am thoroughly aware that there is such a sentiment and such a belief in the country. If I knew that 11,000,000 people were unemployed in my country; if I knew that 200,000 people had just been released from the meager pittance that they were receiving as W. P. A. workers on the 1st of this month; if I saw that millions of the people of this country were on the verge of destitution, although they had not yet quite reached it, and I withheld the means of employment from those people, I think I would have to have a very deep intellectual conviction that giving them that relief was wrong to keep the sentiments of my heart from making it available to them.

I have in my hand a newspaper, which happens to be the Miami Herald, published in my State, of the issue of April 2, containing the result of a Gallup poll which discloses that in this country 52 percent of the working people either are now on relief or else cannot hold out beyond 6 months if they lose the jobs they now have. Over half the people of America are either on the relief rolls or are on the very verge of destitution—within 6 months of it. That is the degree of security that we have been able to give the American people.

I ask unanimous consent to insert this article in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Miami (Fla.) Herald of April 2, 1939]

HALF OF BUSINESS AND WORKING CLASSES ON RELIEF OR NEAR IT—POWERFUL IMPULSE IN POLITICAL SCENE—INSECURE GROUPS STRONGLY PRO-ROOSEVELT; 52 PER CENT IN TOWNS AND CITIES WOULD DEPEND ON GOVERNMENT WITHIN 6 MONTHS IF THEY LOST JOBS

(By George Gallup, director, American Institute of Public Opinion)

NEW YORK, April 1.—Half the people who make up the business and working classes of America at the present time are close enough to the breadlines to feel the constant nudge of insecurity and dependency.

That is the picture which is strikingly revealed today in a Nation-wide study by the American Institute of Public Opinion. It is a picture in simple words of what is probably the most powerful single impulse in the American political and social scene today.

The institute survey shows that a total of 52 percent of those who do the work of America's towns and cities are either on relief rolls, or say they would have to apply for relief within 6 months' time or sooner if they lost their present jobs.

This is the best possible explanation of why President Roosevelt continues to be popular with the voters in spite of many Roosevelt measures that have not been popular.

FACTOR IN 1940

It is the best explanation of the impetus behind the movement for larger old-age pensions, for loans to home owners, for relief grants, and for other forms of Government spending.

And it is a factor which will have a decisive effect on the policies of candidates, platforms, and parties during the coming election of 1940.

The institute asked a carefully selected cross section of persons in all parts of the United States—excluding, in this case, farmers and persons actually on relief—how long they would be able to maintain themselves without going on relief in case they lost their present incomes.

FACTS OF SURVEY

The surveys shows:

(1) That one person in every five among those interviewed would have to look to the Government for relief within a month's time or even sooner. This would mean, for example, a doubling of the country's present relief load by May, if all such persons lost their jobs today.

(2) That another large group could hold out for some period between a month and 6 months.

(3) That these two groups, plus those now on relief, amount to 52 percent of the country's working population in cities and towns.

Following is a summary of the vote, showing the length of time separating various groups from relief. Farmers, who have a different security problem from city and town workers and businessmen, have been dealt with in a separate study. The institute's question was:

"If you lost your present job (or business) and could not find other work, how long do you think you could hold out before you would have to apply for relief?"

Insecure

	Percent
Persons on relief	17
Could hold out 1 month or less	19
1 to 6 months	16
	52

Relatively secure

Could hold out 6 months up to 3 years	13
3 years and over	35
	48

The survey gives new and dramatic evidence of how the least secure groups have been supporting President Roosevelt and the New Deal, while a majority of the more secure individuals have been opposed to the administration.

BY SECURITY LEVELS

The vote by security levels is:

	For Roosevelt (percent)	Against Roosevelt (percent)
Persons now on relief	81	19
Could hold out 1 month or less	61	39
1 to 6 months	58	42
6 months up to 3 years	56	44
3 years and over	44	56

Today's survey shows that the greatest insecurity, relatively, is among skilled and unskilled laborers. One-third of those reached in today's study say they would have to apply for relief within 1 month.

But the insecurity line is also perilously close for many who belong to the white-collar class—clerks, office workers, and people in the service trades. Nearly one-fourth of those interviewed say they would exhaust their reserves within a month's time.

"NEVER" BE OBLIGED

Most secure are businessmen and professional people. A majority in these two classes feel they could hold on for 3 years or longer, a great many of them declaring that they would "never" be obliged to go on relief, no matter what immediate misfortunes they might face.

Even in these fortunate groups, however, about 1 person in 10 says he would have to apply for aid in 1 month.

The insecurity of the average American, after nearly 10 years of depression, "recession," and partial recovery is one of the things being explored by the Government's special national economic committee, the "monopoly" committee—which is boring into the American business system to discover what makes the system tick and what makes it occasionally stop ticking.

A few of these persons have actually been put on relief in the meanwhile, but today's survey indicates that in the general improvement of business since last July a substantial increase in confidence and security has taken place among those in all security levels.

Mr. PEPPER. I said, Mr. President, that the tragic significance of this, the vote soon to be taken, and particularly the recommendation of the committee, is that we have definitely turned our backs upon going further toward the solution of this problem.

There is no nation in the world which has adequately solved the modern economic problem growing out of technological improvements to a very large degree without artificial stimulation and aid from the national government. The only difference is that some nations have toyed with the problem and some nations have effectively solved it. Ours happens to be one nation which has not adequately dealt with the challenging problem. There are some who point to the United Kingdom as an exception to the policy that we have in the recent past been urging. They say England has a balanced budget; that England, therefore, is an example of a nation that may recover its stability by the process of a balanced budget. I should like to ask those who contend for that position if they are ignoring the fact that the tax rate in England is so high that if it were applied to the income of this country, estimating our income at $66,000,000,000 a year, it would yield a national revenue of some $11,000,000,000 a year? In other words, if we levied a rate of income taxation upon our people comparable to that levied by the United Kingdom, we would not have a deficit in the finances of the National Government. The greatest credit, therefore, goes to the United Kingdom for having the courage to do what some Senators on this floor have constantly urged; namely, to reach down into the reservoirs of the paying power of the people and obtain the money necessary to give jobs to the people of the country who are able and willing to work. But we have tried to carry water on both shoulders, we have not had the courage to levy adequate taxes, and we have only dallied with the question of giving jobs.

How can any Senator say that we are adequately trying to solve the unemployment problem when this very month our own relief agency tells us that it has laid off 200,000 workers who were contributing to a return of prosperity in this country? How can they say that we are sincerely and earnestly trying to solve the unemployment problem when they do not deny that there are 10,000,000 unemployed in the United States?

I made a statement a while ago, although I claim to be neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, that in no other way than by aid from some nonprivate source, that is to say, from some governmental agency, can the modern unemployment problem be solved. No nation in the world has solved it through the instrumentalities of private business alone. Other nations have tried it and failed.

Mr. President, those who point to England as such an illustrious example for us should remember that long before we ever entered upon such a policy the British Government began to put out money through the agency of unemployment insurance, of pension benefits, of social-security benefits, of health benefits, and, in addition to that, the British Government instituted the most effective housing program in the world. Years before we ever followed her example they were already making a frontal attack upon the challenging problem of unemployment.

Mr. President, I do not regard myself as a person who desires that we shall have governmental profligacy, governmental extravagance; I take no pleasure in voting for appropriation bills or in levying taxes; but, for the life of me, I cannot see how we can improve the situation by withdrawing our spending hand that has lent what assistance private enterprise has received in the last few years. If Senators who take the contrary point of view are correct, then, why did we ever start this Federal spending program? We started off with every inclination against it instead of for it. We had seen that the Hoover administration, although it laid up a deficit of three and a half billion dollars in its 4 years, nevertheless adhered to the principle of the balanced Budget. I mean the immediately balanced Budget, because all of us believe in the principle of the balanced Budget. I say we had immediately before us not only the history and the traditions of our country but we had the example of that particular administration dealing with an era the same, or about the same as ours, and we saw that they had only nibbled at this colossal problem.

We could well have followed their example; in fact, in our Democratic platform we still adhered to that fundamental philosophy of government not taking the responsibility for the economic welfare of its people and not taking the responsibility for enhancing through governmental means the purchasing power of the consumers of the country. We had every reason, therefore, not to embark upon a spending program rather than to do so. Why did we begin that practice? Why did we inaugurate that policy? Practically all Senators within the sound of my voice were here when we departed from the traditions of the past and launched ourselves upon the present policy of Federal aid to the business and to the people of the country. Although I did not have the honor of being here at the time, I do not recall that the eminent Senators whom I see before me, or those who constituted the membership of the committees, or those who constituted the membership of the Senate, violently or strenuously opposed the inception of this policy.

Why? They did not like this policy; they recognized that it had in it certain things of which they did not approve; yet they agreed to go along with this policy because, searching their heart of hearts, they did not know what else to do, and they voted for it.

They started off by launching $4,000,000,000 into the purchasing power of the country in a relatively short time.

Since that time we of that party have claimed credit for stemming the tide that perhaps otherwise would have carried us much farther than we actually went into the dangerous sea of depression. Then we went along experimentally, gradually adjusting the ways and means of our endeavor to the actualities, and to our concepts, and to our institutions, and to our traditions, but feeling our way along in an effort to bring order out of chaos and to give the necessary nourishment to our starved business institutions.

When that policy was launched and funds began to flow into the coffers of the banks and the railroads and the insurance companies, I do not recall that there was any violent remonstrance on this floor. On the contrary, I think our big-business men and Members of Congress said, "Thank God that we have a leader who has the courage to recommend that we follow such a course!" and the businessmen said, "Thank God we have a Government that is sympathetic to our problems and wants to help us, because we know not where to turn! At a time when billions and billions of dollars are being every day torn away by the gnawing teeth of this depression, we know not to whom to turn for succor save the Federal Government." Consequently, our big-business men came to Washington, and they patted us on the back and said, "You are doing a great job"; and in 1934 they voted for this administration and the President who led it.

By 1934, however, they were pretty well bailed out. They had made most of the loans that they anticipated making from the R. F. C. They had gotten the succor they needed to have for their securities. The Government had put its strong hand below the market and said, in effect, "You must not go below that point"; and many of them had been saved from the bankruptcy that sent them scurrying out of their businesses or sent others jumping out of windows to their self-destruction.

But, Mr. President, as we went ahead we resolved that there was a fundamental principle involved. We remembered that Alexander Hamilton had said just that very thing:

> Pour money in up at the top, and it will replenish and nourish all the arid regions below.

But we remembered that we were Democrats, that we did not believe in special privilege, that we did not believe in furthering and fostering special interests; that we had always been the party that had appealed to and supported the masses of the American people. Not only that, not only did our sentiments tell us that, not only did our affections and sympathies go out to the hungry, unemployed, but, in addition to that, our heads told us that if we just poured money in up at the top it actually would not replenish and nourish the arid regions below; that if we just gave succor to the apex of the economic pyramid, that was not the way to strengthen the structure. It could be sound and solid and secure only in the event that it rested upon a sound and solid and secure base; and the base of the economic pyramid was the millions of America's men and women.

Therefore we said, "Very well; we will go along with this policy of letting the banks and the railroads and the insurance companies and the other business interests have succor. It is well and right that they should have it; but not only sentimentally but from the intelligence of our minds we are convinced that we must not confine those benefits within that narrow category. They must reach out and actually serve the masses of America's millions." So in 1935, after experimentation with F. E. R. A. and C. W. A., with direct relief and aid to the States and political subdivisions, giving them money, and trying several other methods, we finally said, "We are convinced that the modern economic situation is such that the unemployed never will have jobs if we rely for their employment entirely upon private industry. We do not criticize private industry for not giving them jobs." If you have a factory, Mr. President, you have to meet a pay roll; you have to make the pay roll out of the sale of your goods. The public has no right to take your private capital for public use without just compensation. Therefore, I do not criticize any businessman for trying to balance the budget in his private business and trying to make a profit, which he has a right to make; but I do say that if the private system cannot give the necessary employment to the people of the country, someone else must do it, and I do not know of anyone who is capable of doing it except the Federal Government.

Therefore, we find ourselves in this situation: Do we not all agree that it is desirable that the men, women, and children of America have a chance to work? Do we not all agree that their having a chance to work is an absolute prerequisite to anything like stability, let alone prosperity, in this country? If there is anybody who denies that premise, I have not heard him at least frankly deny it. The way in which we usually hear the matter presented is through indirection, as my good friend the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], the chairman of the subcommittee, came before the Senate when the previous relief measure was up, and said to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], "No; there will not be a reduction in the W. P. A. rolls in your State if you vote for $725,000,000 instead of $875,000,000." The Senator from New Jersey was entitled to rely upon that statement and to vote for the smaller appropriation in the confident belief that the persons who were then employed at least would be able to continue to enjoy the benefit of that employment. Now, however, what has happened? Our good friend the Senator from Colorado himself comes here and tells us that he favors the appropriation of an additional $100,000,000. Why did he not favor the appropriation of $100,000,000 when we had the former relief measure before us, in addition to the $725,000,000, making a proposed total of $825,000,000? Why did not the other members of the subcommittee, including the genial and very able Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], take that position? We did our best to point out, by interrogations to the Senators in charge of the former measure, that they were wrong in their estimates; that they were not going to be able to give employment to all the persons on the W. P. A. rolls; that they had better allow the larger amount, and that if they did not do so they were going to face a worse unemployment situation than they then faced. But no; they voted us down. We had a crucial and critical vote on the floor of the Senate, and by one vote alone did their view prevail. Many Senators no doubt were influenced by the very assurances our committee gave, that the effect of their action in voting with the committee would not be to turn any person out of a job that he then had with W. P. A.; yet what am I to do with the information I have received this morning by a personal messenger from the W. P. A. Administrator—at my request, of course—who tells me that on the 1st of April they actually did discharge from the existing rolls 200,000 American men and women who were then working? Where are the 200,000 who were dismissed on April 1 to go?

Every time I walk into an automatic elevator, and push the button, and feel myself lifted up to another floor, I speculate about who is giving a job to the man who, without those automatic devices, would be running the elevator. What business offers him an opportunity for employment? What businesses have given the members of our committee assurances that they will employ some of the 200,000 persons who went off the rolls on April 1? What do they face as their immediate prospect when they turn away from the W. P. A. door, and go back to the drab, pitiable homes which have been lighted only by the flickering light of the little sustenance they have received from the W. P. A.? Is agriculture going to absorb them? Not if I hear correctly from Senators on this floor the complaints about the condition now existing in agriculture. Are these unemployed persons going to help agriculture by an increased consuming power? Or, are not the people who grow food going to have just that much less of a market in which to sell what they make than they previously had before these 200,000 persons turned their sorrowful course away from the W. P. A. door, and found their weary way back to their little homes?

Now we are going to have an opportunity to see just how well the theory of the opposition works out about bringing prosperity back to the country. According to their view, we have contributed 200,000 persons to the returning prosperity of America. We have 200,000 more breadwinners unable to win bread. Each of those 200,000 workers represents on an average a family of at least 4 persons; so 4 times 200,000 means that 800,000 American men, women, and children have this month, on 1 day, lost their whole income.

It will be remembered, Mr. President, that they got on these rolls only by convincing a competent and honest agency of the State government in the community where they lived with their neighbors, and where all the facts about them were available to anyone, that they did not have any other means of sustenance. So they have convinced their State agency of that fact, but evidently they have not impressed the Committee on Appropriations of the United States Senate with their plight.

Let us see how this helps business confidence, let us see what reassurances it gives to the business interests of the United States. Let us go into a community where W. P. A. pay rolls have existed heretofore and go to the retailer and say, "Mr. Merchant, do you not think we have helped your business by laying off several hundred people in your community from the W. P. A. pay roll?" What will he say? Will he not say, "Thank God that the United States Senate has reduced the W. P. A. pay roll in my State. Thank God for a United States Senate which dares not contest the amount of a W. P. A. appropriation with the House of Representatives. Thank God for a United States Senate which would not put up a fight for a meritorious cause. Thank God for a courageous committee which comes before the American people and denounces governmental aid to the unemployed."

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I understand the Senator from Florida is talking about the W. P. A.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have just come into the Senate Chamber, and I heard the Senator mention the W. P. A. I wish to say to the Senator, as I stated a few days ago, that so long as there are hungry people in the United States I am going to vote to appease their appetites. I have stated that repeatedly. I concur in the Senator's feelings of sympathy. But there are a few things in regard to W. P. A. of which I think notice should be taken, and I wish to ask the Senator about them.

I am inclined to believe almost everything I read in the newspapers, and I have here a clipping which I desire to call to the attention of the Senator, although I do not know from what paper I clipped the article. It is headed "W. P. A. research aide who covered 25,000 miles last year will give class her secrets on getting by on one language." The article then proceeds to say that the W. P. A. sent a young lady to Europe, who traveled all over that part of the world to find out how to travel cheaply, being able to speak but one language—the English language—according to this article. She has returned to the United States and is lecturing to the W. P. A. boys and girls, telling them how to travel over Europe cheaply and being able to speak only the English language.

The entire article is as follows:

NEW Y. W. C. A. COURSE TELLS HOW TO TRAVEL IN EUROPE—W. P. A. RESEARCH AIDE WHO COVERED 25,000 MILES LAST YEAR WILL GIVE CLASS HER SECRETS ON GETTING BY ON ONE LANGUAGE

How to travel in Europe without languages, money, time, or war scares will be taught at the Y. W. C. A. in a 6-week course opening Tuesday.

The professor in charge will be Frances Fox, Works Progress Administration research assistant, who last year did just what she will impart to her class. She traveled 25,000 miles, speaking only English.

Her course will include tips on what souvenirs to bring home and what to do if seasick, homesick, lovesick, or just sick.

[Laughter.]

Central and southern European travel will be stressed, along with the British Isles and Scandinavia and Finland.

Subjects will be the titles to a book Miss Fox is planning on "Travel and How to Do It." Some of them are: "Are You an Unadulterated Patriot?" "Guides and How to Prevent Them," "A Word to Wives on Packing for Men," "Mercenary in Money Matters," "Customs Is a Custom," "Tips on Tips, and Also on Gyps," and "Engimatic Menus."

I cannot bring myself to believe that our Government, engaged in providing for 3,000,000 people on the Works Progress Administration rolls, worthy people, people who are being supported by the taxpayers of this country, is going into such foolhardy undertakings as sending Works Progress Administration workers from the United States of America to Europe, to travel all over Europe to find out how to travel cheaply, being able to speak only one language, and to come back and tell the Works Progress Administration workers about it.

I desired to ask the Senator whether he knew anything about what I have just brought to his attention. If such a thing as that is going on, I think it ought to be stopped, because I do not believe we are yet in a position to send Works Progress Administration workers on a tour of Europe, and especially at such a time as this. I do not believe the taxpayers of this country are in a position to send Works Progress Administration workers on European tours, and I think we ought to stop instructing them how to make such tours with a knowledge of only one language and on $2 a day. [Laughter.]

I merely desired to bring this to the Senator's attention.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator is perhaps one of the most experienced travelers in the Senate.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I travel so much that I should like to have all of our Works Progress Administration workers travel at the expense of the Government, if that were possible; but I do not like it well enough to have our Works Progress Administration workers travel down to Brazil to develop Brazil, as suggested by that great "dry cleaner," Mr. Aranha, who came to the United States from Brazil a couple of weeks ago and got $12,000,000 from us for the purpose of paying Great Britain, and buying better ships from Great Britain, and settling her debts with several other countries.

I like to travel and expect to do some more of it next summer. The Senator from Florida also likes to travel. I recall that he was in Europe last year, and the Senator was in Alaska, where I was. The Senator and I like to trek around, and travel, and see what is going on, so that we may be in a position to advise our respective constituents as to the changes in the world. But I do not believe the taxpayers of the United States are yet ready to continue instruction of Works Progress Administration workers on how to see Europe. So far as I am concerned, I am not willing to send Works Progress Administration workers on a tour of South America or Brazil to develop South America at our expense.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. REYNOLDS. By the way, while I am on that subject, I ask that a very interesting editorial which I clipped from the Greensboro Daily News of Sunday, April 2, headed "The Last Place to Reduce," be printed in the RECORD—the last place to reduce being in the W. P. A. ranks. In view of the fact that the Greensboro Daily News is considered a very reliable and a very conservative newspaper, I ask, if the Senator will permit, to have this editorial printed as a part of my remarks.

Mr. PEPPER. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Greensboro Daily News of April 2, 1939]

THE LAST PLACE TO REDUCE

With the supplementary relief appropriation cut from $150,000,000, as requested by President Roosevelt, to $100,000,000 by economy-minded House Members, and the likelihood that that figure will stand in the Senate, Col. F. C. Harrington, as W. P. A. Administrator and chief spokesman, is already talking about the reduction which will have to be made in relief rolls. In fact, the order has gone forth that 200,000 be dismissed therefrom by April 8.

In this connection, as the ax falls upon those who are least able to bear it, too much emphasis cannot be placed upon the necessity for careful examination of the rolls and the subsequent dismissal of those whose economic distress is less acute. The place to start this examination is at the very top, where the expenditures are made for administration. In the prolonged committee consideration and later congressional debate which led to lopping of a third off the Presidential request it was iterated that administrative costs of W. P. A. run up to $5,000,000 monthly, that transportation and communications bills amount to nearly three-quarters of a million dollars monthly, that many fantastic projects have been launched, and that W. P. A. participation in the New York World's Fair represented disregard of a joint congressional resolution and the recommendations of President Roosevelt himself.

It is the rankest sort of inhumanity to keep needless political appointees on the pay roll, many of them lifted out of private employment and well able to take care of themselves, to engage in unnecessary telephone chatter, telegraphing, or official gadding about the countryside at the expense of however many thousands of the Nation's destitute have to be cut off from the only subsistence that they know. The W. P. A., meaning again its administrative and largely political side, has an unbeatable technique; it spends out, exceeds congressional estimates and appropriations, and then comes back to ask more in the name of its starving clients. The American people will not stand for starvation in their midst; but that same insistence should see that money appropriated for relief is spent for relief, and not to feather anybody's political nest.

The challenge is to Congress to keep its relief appropriations under careful scrutiny and to ascertain that the rolls themselves get fullest benefit of the dollars which are made available.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I appreciate the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina, who always richly adds to the debate; but I should like to point out that, although he may not have intended it in this instance, what he has said is illustrative of an effort that is made very generally, an attempt to get a W. P. A. appropriation either reduced or entirely destroyed by picking around in its labyrinthine decisions and finding one case which, when read in an effective and vigorous way, makes the W. P. A. look ridiculous.

I realize that the humor of America has perhaps been enriched very much by the W. P. A. jokes which have been current, particularly among the comfortable people of the country.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In reference to that, let me say to the Senator——

Mr. PEPPER. Just a moment. I will say that I do not know of any grosser calumny, I do not know of any more inconsiderate attitude toward the 99.99 percent of the deserving and diligent persons who are on the W. P. A. rolls, than the criticisms of the isolated cases or the isolated individuals whom, not the Senator from North Carolina, but many others use as an excuse for doing what they want to do anyway, namely, oppose any relief.

Mr. REYNOLDS. If the Senator will pardon me, in reference to the jokes regarding the W. P. A., I noticed in the press yesterday that some vaudeville actor and his wife who were doing a turn upon the stage in California had been fined $10 for casting reflections upon W. P. A. workers by way of a joke; and I think that was proper in that instance, as I recall the circumstances.

I wish to say to the Senator that there is absolutely no reflection of W. P. A. on my part in bringing this article to the attention of the Senator. I knew the Senator would want me to bring it to his attention. I desired to ascertain whether or not such a foolish thing was taking place.

I repeat, I am with the Senator in his sympathy for the hungry people of the United States. As I stated the other day, I have voted for the appropriation of billions of dollars at this session of Congress to appease the people in this country who believe Hitler is going to come here and take us over in the next 4 or 5 months. I have voted to appease them. I am now going to vote to appease the appetites of the hungry people in this country so long as there are any hungry people.

In that connection I wish to state to the Senator that I was in my home State last week—in western North Carolina. I talked with a number of my friends there who are poor people, who live out in the country, and they said to me, "We do not want to get on the W. P. A. unless we have to. We want to go to work for legitimate industry, and we want to stay off the W. P. A. rolls if we possibly can."

That, I think, bears out in part the Senator's statement to the effect that a great many persons went on W. P. A. simply because as a last resort they had to go on in order to keep from starving.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. As I understand the able Senator from North Carolina, he supports the amendment of the Senator from Florida to increase the amount——

Mr. REYNOLDS. No, Mr. President; I did not say that. I think the compromise which was negotiated by the able senior Senator from Colorado and his colleagues on the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations was a very equitable one. I did not say that I agreed with the Senator from Florida in that respect. The Senator from Minnesota must have misconstrued my statement.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Does the Senator believe that $100,000,000 is sufficient?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am in entire agreement with the Senators who said that they thought $100,000,000 was sufficient.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Then I misunderstood the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator and I are in general agreement; the only thing which separates us is $50,000,000.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator is not in favor of opposing another $50,000,000 being added?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Not exactly.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, apropos the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina, I desire to read a few excerpts from the remarks of Hon. CLARENCE CANNON, of Missouri, in the House of Representatives on Tuesday, April 4, 1939, and then I shall ask to have incorporated in the RECORD as part of my remarks his entire speech.

I read one paragraph of his inventory of what the W. P. A. has accomplished:

The report covers work completed from the start of the program in July 1935 through June 30, 1938. According to the report, W. P. A. built or improved highways, roads, and streets equal in aggregate length to 100 separate roads, each reaching across the continent from sea to sea. The new buildings constructed by W. P. A. workers would provide approximately six buildings for each of the 3,000 counties of the United States. The educational buildings repaired or improved would supply practically all of the 25,000 school districts in the Nation with at least one of these improved educational facilities; and yet, out of all these thousands of miles of roads and thousands of buildings and improvements, which could not have been secured without W. P. A. aid, the recent debate on the work-relief bill could find only one building to criticize.

Continuing, with a slight omission, the speech proceeds:

Outstanding among W. P. A.'s contributions to the wealth of the Nation in these 3 years were:

Seventeen thousand six hundred new public buildings for cities, counties, and States; repairs and improvements to 46,300 and additions to 1,700.

Two hundred and eighty thousand miles of highways, roads, and streets constructed or repaired; 29,100 new bridges and 23,500 repaired or improved.

Twenty-six thousand seven hundred new dams for conservation purposes; 4,100 new storage dams.

Six thousand one hundred miles of new water mains, aqueducts, and distribution lines; 8,900 miles of new storm and sanitary sewers.

One thousand eight hundred new athletic fields, 1,500 improved; 1,100 new parks, 4,200 improved or enlarged; 1,600 new playgrounds, 5,000 improved.

Eight thousand seven hundred miles of new and 5,000 miles of improved ditches for mosquito control; 11,500 miles of other types of ditches excavated or improved, exclusive of roadside drainage in connection with road projects.

I read that meager portion of the speech, very ably delivered, to indicate how unjustified the criticism was that the W. P. A. workers of America did nothing except lean on their shovels. Sometime I may reach such a point of affluence that I have a contempt for the man below me, but I hope to God I never shall.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I wish to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the unemployed themselves do not select the projects, but the projects are selected by those who still have the means to get along?

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is correct. So if there is criticism of the project, it should not be directed to the men who handle the shovels. The Senator from Wyoming has made a very valuable contribution, and I appreciate it.

Mr. President, I ask that the entire speech of Representative CANNON be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The speech of Representative CANNON of Missouri, delivered in the House of Representatives on Tuesday, April 4, 1939, is as follows:)

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in view of pending legislation providing for the support of the W. P. A. and the general interest in its program just at this time, I am including as a part of my remarks a summary of physical accomplishments of the W. P. A. just released by the Works Progress Administration.

The report covers work completed from the start of the program in July 1935 through June 30, 1938. According to the report, W. P. A. built or improved highways, roads, and streets equal in aggregate length to 100 separate roads, each reaching across the continent from sea to sea. The new buildings constructed by W. P. A. workers would provide approximately six buildings for each of the 3,000 counties of the United States. The educational buildings repaired or improved would supply practically all of the 25,000 school districts in the Nation with at least one of these improved educational facilities; and yet, out of all these thousands of miles of roads and thousands of buildings and improvements, which could not have been secured without W. P. A. aid, the recent debate on the work-relief bill could find only one building to criticize.

Of course, this summary does not include benefits incident to the employment of millions of workers for whom private employment was not to be had; the maintenance of families for whom food, clothing, and shelter could not otherwise have been provided; the preservation of national order and stability which otherwise might have been seriously impaired. It includes only the additions to the permanent wealth of the Nation which will contribute to the economic, educational, and spiritual progress of our people for years to come.

Outstanding among W. P. A.'s contributions to the wealth of the Nation in these 3 years were:

Seventeen thousand six hundred new public buildings for cities, counties, and States; repairs and improvements to 46,300 and additions to 1,700.

Two hundred and eighty thousand miles of highways, roads, and streets constructed or repaired; 29,100 new bridges and 23,500 repaired or improved.

Twenty-six thousand seven hundred new dams for conservation purposes; 4,100 new storage dams.

Six thousand one hundred miles of new water mains, aqueducts, and distribution lines; 8,900 miles of new storm and sanitary sewers.

One thousand eight hundred new athletic fields, 1,500 improved; 1,100 new parks, 4,200 improved or enlarged; 1,600 new playgrounds, 5,000 improved.

Eight thousand seven hundred miles of new and 5,000 miles of improved ditches for mosquito control; 11,500 miles of other types of ditches excavated or improved, exclusive of roadside drainage in connection with road projects.

Col. C. F. Harrington, Works Progress Administrator, in commenting on the report, said:

"For full appraisal of the program it is necessary to consider not only the permanent contributions to communities in the form of physical assets but also the health, educational, cultural, and service programs conducted through W. P. A. nonconstruction projects.

"It is just as important in evaluating the program to consider the benefits afforded workers who have come to W. P. A. as heads of destitute families. They have been helped, as only a constructive job could help them, to retain the morale of independent citizens and the work habits necessary for obtaining reemployment in private industry.

"Construction projects have made up the bulk of the W. P. A. program from the start and at the present account for more than 80 percent of W. P. A. employment. The largest part of construction has been in highway, road, and street building and repair. Forty-five percent of all W. P. A. workers are engaged on this type of work.

"The work of W. P. A. employees has helped to keep our roads and streets abreast of automobile traffic requirements, to bring rural areas in closer touch with markets, schools, and other vital services, as well as to make necessary improvements in public property of all types which otherwise could not have been provided."

Of the total mileage of highways, roads, and streets constructed or repaired during the 3-year period, about 30,500 miles, or 11 percent, were within the limits of cities and villages, and 23,600 miles, or more than 8 percent of the total, were paved with concrete, brick, block, or bituminous surface.

The bulk of the road work was in rural areas, where stability and draining unpaved roads for year-around use has contributed directly to the evolution of the public-school system by facilitating the consolidation of schools and the closing of hundreds of one-teacher schools each year. The bulk of W. P. A.'s school construction, moreover, has been of buildings with two or more rooms, and much of the school-modernization program has made existing buildings of greater community service in the increasingly motorized rural areas.

The public-building-construction program, second largest in point of employment, accounted for the building of 2,300 new schools, 5,500 recreational buildings, 800 courthouses, city halls, and other administrative buildings, 100 hospitals, and a large number of other types of buildings, including 800 warehouses, 150 firehouses, and 100 airplane hangars.

W. P. A. activities in the interest of public health fell in both construction and service categories. Besides the thousands of miles of sewers and water lines laid or improved, there were constructed 400 pumping stations, 300 sewage-treatment plants, 80 water-purification plants, and 35 garbage incinerators. In rural areas no fewer than 1,144,000 sanitary toilets were erected in the Government's campaign against disease. More than 1,640,000 acres of lowlands and swamp were drained by the excavation of 8,730 miles of mosquito-control ditches, a large percentage of them to destroy the breeding places of malaria-bearing mosquitoes.

Drainage work along roads involved, in addition to bridges, 313,000 new culverts, 22,250 miles of new ditches, 44,250 miles of improved ditches, and more than 1,400 miles of drainage pipe.

W. P. A. nonconstruction projects devoted to production of goods for distribution to needy families provided more than 180,000,000 garments and household articles and repairs to 1,300,000 pairs of worn shoes. Services of medical, dental, nursing, and household-assistance nature accounted for 15,000,000 examinations, immunizations, and treatments in families who might otherwise have been denied them, and 7,000,000 visits to 1,000,000 families in need of household assistance.

Community health and welfare has further been advanced by the construction of thousands of recreational facilities ranging from athletic fields and swimming pools to tennis and badminton courts.

Under the extensive W. P. A. conservation activities, thousands of acres of watersheds have been protected for future utility by tree-planting and erosion-control projects. Hundreds of abandoned mines were sealed to prevent stream pollution. Underground fires were isolated to preserve valuable natural resources. Flood-control projects have protected thousands of miles of stream valleys. In addition, W. P. A. recreation and education projects have reached millions of persons.

Projects operated by other Federal agencies and financed by funds transferred from W. P. A., taking their workers from relief rolls, account for additional physical accomplishments not included in this inventory. Still other contributions to the public assets and welfare were made prior to W. P. A. by the Civil Works Administration and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

The detailed summary of physical accomplishments is as follows:

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] said a moment ago that his people had held off just as long as they could against the day they would have to go on relief. Why should we ever have denominated by the terms "charity" and "relief" an opportunity to work provided by the Government when none existed in private industry? In other words, when the Government builds a post office the people at work on the post office do not have to apologize for it, do they? When the Government builds public roads by Federal aid to the several States the workers upon the roads do not have to secrete from their more opulent friends the fact that they are working on such projects, do they?

I will cite an example of which I learned a little while ago. A young lady I knew told me about going from New York to Florida by ship on which she met some very charming people. Naturally desiring to make as good an impression as she could upon them, she withheld the information from those newly made friends that she was working for the W. P. A., because she confessed to me she was ashamed to let them know it.

It is not the W. P. A. workers, it is the Government which has castigated those as recipents of relief instead of the beneficiaries of a God-given American opportunity and right to work. Some Senators and Members of the House of Representatives still think they are doing those people a favor when they make public funds available so they can get an opportunity to work.

I say that the grossest injustice that was ever perpetrated on the American people was to castigate as unworthy the person who was thrown out of employment by technical improvements and general economic conditions over which he had no control, and to put him into a class where his morale was destroyed almost as soon as he got there.

Yet, what does the Senate do today? Do we not say, "We realize that modern economic conditions present a problem the like of which we never had before; we realize that there is no hope of improving that situation materially without the aid of the Government, and we know that every year 500,000 men and women become of working age, and enter the labor market, and have to be taken care of by somebody if they are to have an opportunity to work"?

Do we not admit that we know that every year another 500,000 are thrown out of employment because of technological improvements for which they are not responsible, and that during the lag between the time that other inventions and discoveries may create new jobs they must be hopeless drifters in the economic system?

Why do we not have the courage, Mr. President, to admit that nobody has proposed an alternative in which we have any confidence? Why do we not have the temerity to stand up and say to the people of this country who are making profits and, who, employed, are making wages. "It is the bounden duty of your Government to levy its exactions upon your savings in the way of taxes so that we can make the order of which you are a part an effective institution"?

Why do we not have the willingness to say to those people, "We cannot give you any assurance that your capital and your job will be safe, and your profits assured by any other method than giving an opportunity to the unemployed of your country to work"?

We have set a standard for work on the W. P. A. rolls which castigates the W. P. A. workers as failures in their own generation. We have not only made them the butt of cruel jokes leveled at them by the unsympathizing few, we have made their tenure in the poor jobs they have so uncertain that they never know one day whether or not they will receive a notice on the next day to quit work, just as 200,000 were given notice that after April 1 they would no longer have an opportunity to work with the W. P. A. Therefore, we not only keep them from spending all they can to help recovery in the country; we not only deter them from building homes and trying to be stable and steady contributors to their country's return to prosperity; but, in addition, we tell those who are on the verge, who perhaps have not actually reached penury and poverty, "No; the Government program is not for you." They may be among those who, together with the relief employees, constitute 52 percent of the American people. They may not be able to last 6 months; they may not be able to last 3 months, or 1 month, before their meager savings are totally exhausted. Yet we say to them "You cannot get a job on the W. P. A. until you are embraced by the arms of poverty, until you no longer have the price of a meal, a suit of clothes, or a little bit that might go to buy nourishment for your family."

Mr. President, we have not had the courage to face the facts. We are dallying with $50,000,000, dallying with the question of employing the number of people which $50,000,000 would employ, when admittedly we have 10,000,000 unemployed. Some say we do not need any more money for relief. Can we call such an attitude an honest effort on the part of the Government to solve the problem of unemployment?

I have previously intimated—and I think circumstances will bear me out in the future—that if those of us who are now in the Senate are turned out it will not be because we have done too much. It will be because we have not done enough. It will be because, as I said to the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], we indicate to the American people that we really do not appreciate the magnitude or the character of the problem we face.

In other words, Mr. President, with all deference to my colleagues—and I do not in any sense question the complete sincerity of their opinion—when we shall have cast the vote which I assume will reject the amendment, we shall have held out the stop sign to millions of unemployed Americans against ever coming to the door of the Federal Government to receive help. I wish Senators would contemplate that prospect. I wish in their hearts they would answer the question, What is the alternative for the 10,000,000 persons to whom we have now turned a cold and unsympathetic shoulder? I ask, Senators, how in the name of goodness can there be prosperity in this country with such a condition prevailing?

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has, on innumerable occasions, pointed out that the fundamental difficulty with the agricultural laborers of this country is not that we produce too much, but that we are able to buy too little. I wonder what would happen to the agricultural problem if we actually had the courage to face the unemployment problem adequately and effectively. I venture the assertion that if we gave $50 a month on an average to 5,000,000 persons, affording them an opportunity to work and reducing unemployment by that number, we should find the expenditure of that money to be the best nourishment and succor that agriculture could possibly enjoy.

The tragedy of it is that we do not know what to do either with agriculture or unemployment; and we are afraid really to try. Some Senators have had the experience of being baseball players. Perhaps some of them have pitched on occasion. What kind of a ball could a pitcher throw if every time he turned loose the ball he wanted to call it back, and was afraid to release it from his fingers? If every time he started to throw it he tried to stop it about the time his arm was extended, what would be the result?

We have never yet had the courage to face the unemployment problem adequately, according to the information and knowledge which we have and give a fair trial to the policy of Federal aid. The reason has not been our leader. We know that the President of the United States has not put out the stop sign. We know that he has not lost courage. On the contrary, every time the Congress has acted, it has acted under the stimulation of his own far-seeing vision.

Why did not the President come before the Congress in January and ask for another billion dollars or two billion dollars and say to the Congress and to the American people, "I am resolved to abolish unemployment in America"? Why did he not say to the Congress, "I challenge the Congress to go with me in the program of providing to the American people an effective solution of this problem"? Why did he not say, "You and I, on behalf of the American people, are going to make the savings of this country available to the various communities, to build an electric-light line in every rural community of America, and permit those communities to pay back the money, or most of it, in 20 years, as they will be able to do"? Why did he not come before the Congress in January and say: "At a time when the various dictatorships of the world are utilizing every unit of their manpower to enhance their national strength, we cannot afford to sit idly by and lose the labor of millions of our fellow citizens who are unemployed"? Why did he not say that?

Why did he not say that congestion already exists upon the highways of this country; that the building of highways is economically productive; and that we should build them and give jobs in their building to the unemployed of America? Why did he not say that in this country already an area larger than the State of North Carolina has been eroded away; that gradually many sections of the country are being denuded of their productive soil; and that generations yet unborn are therefore destined to impoverishment? Why did he not do that, and start a soil-erosion program which would actually be effective to protect the soils of America?

Why did he not say, "Let us take the forests of this country, supplement the great C. C. C. program"—which I believe has universal approval—"and make the growing of timber a crop in America? We are going to make forest products available to enrich the economy of the Nation and give jobs to the unemployed of America"?

Why did he not say, "Every year $250,000,000 is lost through illness and death which could be prevented if we adequately protected the health of the American people? Therefore, I am resolved that we will build hospitals in the 1,300 counties of America where there are now no hospitals, and that we will make medical aid and care available to the people of America who cannot otherwise afford it, following the example of England and other countries in Europe"?

Why did the President not do those things, Mr. President? Does anybody believe that the reason the President did not do them was because he did not believe in such things? Why does he not now come to Congress and ask us for another billion dollars for another P. W. A. program? Does anyone doubt that the President believes it would be a good thing to go back to the various communities of America and permit the people to begin projects now approved, half the expense of which they are paying, and which would enhance the assets of America?

Why does not the President make such recommendations to the Congress? We know too well why the President does not make such recommendations. It is because he dislikes to do a futile thing. When he recommended a little $50,000,000 more than our august Appropriations Committee deemed necessary for work-relief purposes, he was slapped in the face. The committee said "No; we cannot spend $150,000,000 at this time to supplement relief needs."

Why can we not do it? We surely know that there are 11,000,000 unemployed.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURRAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I think what the President should have done was to ask for an extra $100,000,000. Then the committee would have given him $50,000,000 and slapped him in the face with the other $50,000,000.

Mr. PEPPER. Perhaps that would have been good psychology.

What reason do we give the President for turning him down? Do we say, "Mr. President, you are altogether mistaken. You know there is no need for any additional work relief in this country. Thirty thousand aliens were let off and we have put American citizens in their place"? Of course we do not mind what happens to the aliens here. It is not necessary to concern ourselves about the aliens; they say. So that means that 30,000 more will get jobs, and think what a fine thing that will be.

Then, in addition to that, we have had the rolls microscopically inspected because in some way or another some insidious or perfidious fellow may have found his way into the labyrinthine passages of the W. P. A. and perhaps he is making $26 a month from the W. P. A., when, as a matter of fact, he has $4 income from some other source, perhaps from some social-security benefit, and is, therefore, not eligible for work relief. So they start on a witch hunt to find that fellow who has got on the W. P. A. rolls and who is getting $25 or $26 a month, and they call that fellow national enemy No. 1. If you knew the relentlessness with which he was pursued by some of our friends and some of our public officials, you would literally think that Al Capone in his day never became such a challenge to the security and stability and particularly to the confidence of business in America as that poor fellow. So I hope that we have frowned enough upon the few who have gotten onto the W. P. A. rolls, perhaps without actually having gone a week without food, to make it desirable for them to withdraw and therefore save the money that would be spent in searching them out and eradicating them from the rolls.

Mr. President, that policy the President might have pursued has been stopped at the threshhold by an attitude among our membership here that does not believe in that kind of a policy. They say that there never was but one way in the world for a man to gain in financial stature, and that is through diligence, thrift, and husbandry of his resources. They say a nation is no exception to that philosophy. They say that no individual in the world ever spent his way into prosperity, and neither can any nation do so. They say that the United Kingdom is the most glowing illustration of the fact that those same old time-worn principles apply to nations as well as to private individuals. But they do not tell you, Mr. President, in giving the example of the United Kingdom, that they started their social-security program long ago, and the benefits of it were already being observed when their acute economic situation came along. They do not tell you if we levied the same tax rate in this country upon America's income as the United Kingdom levy upon the income of their people that we would not have a deficit, but we would have a balanced Budget in this country.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator in making that statement take into consideration the fact that the people in the United States pay State taxes and municipal and county taxes in addition to Federal taxes? Some time ago I saw a statement to the effect that when local taxation and national taxation in America are added the total virtually approximates the figure that is levied nationally by Great Britain. I think a Senator on the floor the other day put into the RECORD a compilation showing that in 1938 the cost of all government in the United States was $15,000,000,000 a year, which is about 25 percent of the total income of the American people. I think in Great Britain they do not have the local taxes we have in the United States.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I can answer that perhaps definitely by first saying that, although the local taxes when taken into consideration reduce the disparity, they by no means obliterate it. I will say, in the second place, that last week a young solicitor friend of mine from Edinburgh, Scotland, was here visiting in Washington, and he and I got to talking about individual income taxes or relative payments to the Government that one would make on an income of, say, $10,000 in this country and in Scotland. He told me that on his income of $10,000 he had to pay nearly $3,400 a year, while on the same income I had to pay only approximately $500.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, that is true of income taxes in Great Britain as compared with those in the United States on incomes in the lower brackets, but it is not true in the case of income taxes in the higher income brackets. As the Senator says, the disparity would not be eliminated; but, assuming that the taxes collected in this country from all sources are $15,000,000,000 a year, or 25 percent of the total income of America, how much of the total income of the people of Great Britain goes to taxes?

Mr. PEPPER. Something like 16½ percent, I believe.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then we are paying more of our total income for taxation than the people of Great Britain are paying of their income.

Mr. PEPPER. The figure I gave relates only to the income tax. The income tax is 16⅔ percent, as I recall.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of what?

Mr. PEPPER. Of the national income.

Mr. TYDINGS. In our country the income tax represents only about 20 percent of our national revenue; we raise only about one out of every $5 from corporation and income taxes and the remainder is made up of miscellaneous taxes of different kinds. I will venture to say, however, that if the Senator will get the figures of the total taxes levied in America and compare them with the figures of the total taxes levied in Great Britain, he will find that we pay just as much in taxes here out of our total income as the people of Great Britain pay, taking into consideration State and local taxes. I myself did not think so until a couple of months ago, when I examined the figures and found that to be true. I merely interrupt the Senator because I know he does not want to assume as a fact something which is not really a fact.

Mr. PEPPER. As I have said to the Senator, I have seen the figures, although I do not have them at hand now, but I repeat what I said a moment ago, that while the inclusion of State and local taxes in this country reduces the disparity, it does not obliterate it. I know that in many States of the Union, for example, there is no income tax; in fact, I presume the minority of the States of the Union levy an income tax. I think New York, perhaps, has a rather stiff income tax, while my State has neither an inheritance tax nor an income tax at all. I know further that by deriving a considerable portion of revenue from the income-tax method we come nearer to getting reserve capital, as it were, that otherwise would not be added to the purchasing power of the country than by obtaining taxes from the masses of the people.

That is the reason why, I think, Mr. President, that we would be much wiser if we levied a heavier exaction of our taxes from incomes, because, as I said in the beginning today, those of us who think as I do are not against balancing the Budget; we are simply against the balancing of the Budget at a time when the national economy is not in position to justify the balancing of the Budget.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think it is only fair to say that many Senators would deal more liberally with these appropriations if the Government were on a pay-as-you-go basis, but now that we are going into our fifth or sixth year of recurring deficits—deficits of two or three billion dollars a year—and have a mounting national debt, there are a great many of us who wonder how long it is going to be, if this situation continues, before Congress adopts the pay-as-you-go policy, lest the result may be more disastrous than we at this time think.

Mr. PEPPER. I know that that question is uppermost in the minds of all the Members of the Senate, as it is uppermost in the minds of many people of the country. I know the Senator from Maryland and many other Senators conscientiously disbelieve that there is any proper relationship between what the Government spends and business improvement in the country. They, at least, believe that that is not a legitimate and sound, if a proper, method of stimulating private economy, and they are very conscientious about that; but I have here before me an article from the United States News contributed by Mr. Owen L. Scott. The article contains two charts. The top chart reflects the industrial improvement, and the bottom chart reflects public expenditures in this country. No person can look at those charts without becoming convinced of necessity that there is some causal relation between the one and the other, between practice and effect. If we find our industrial improvement steadily rising so long as the policy of public expenditures is in effect, and then we find it abruptly falling when that policy is discontinued, it is only natural to assume that there is some causal relation between the one and the other.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think everyone will admit that there is some relation between the two, but since the chart falls each time we stop, is it not the logic of the argument of the Senator that, in order to keep prosperity going, there never must be an end to governmental expenditures?

Mr. PEPPER. No; I do not come to that conclusion.

Mr. TYDINGS. But, if I may interrupt again, I think that is what the chart shows. I saw those two charts, and each time we cut down on the expenditure there was a corresponding reduction in business activity. Therefore the logical conclusion is that we ought just to keep on spending on a level plane.

Mr. PEPPER. No, Mr. President. Perhaps I can convey the idea in this way:

Money is constantly flowing from, we might say, the outside of the circle toward the center. As funds accumulate in the depositories of the country and in the reserve funds of the country, they go out of circulation. They go out of use in just the same way that currency might gradually be pulled in by the Government and be stuck away in isolated safety-deposit boxes and locked up, unless the people who have those savings put them out into usefulness by some form of investment or expenditure. If they are unable to put them out or are unwilling to disburse them by expenditure, then they are left only the method of investment by which to put them out.

Now, let us assume that a situation has arisen whereby putting those funds into investment for productive purposes would not yield a return, and perhaps would jeopardize the principal: Then is the individual going to invest? Is the owner and holder of the capital going to invest it under such conditions? How many Members of this body, if they had a million dollars, would build an automobile factory, knowing that the automobile productivity of this country now is far in excess of automobile demand? How many Members of this body, if they had a million dollars, would put that money into private enterprise for manufacturing equipment for building railroads, for example, when we know that there is already more capital invested in railroads than the needs of the country require, and therefore there is no purpose to that kind of investment?

Another thing: In times like these, the investment of capital is hazardous. The private individual might not want to jeopardize his capital by a hazardous investment; and therefore he saves it against the day when he can use it with an assurance that he will get back a high reward. Therefore, he puts it in a safety-deposit box, or perhaps he finds tax-exempt securities in which to invest it; and that money is just as much out of circulation as the currency would be if the Government called it in, and regularly laid aside so many millions of it, and took it out of use.

We have in circulation in this country, I believe, some $6,000,000,000 of currency, of what we call actual money. Suppose we called in $1,000,000,000 of that money and took it out of circulation in the business channels of the country. What kind of an effect would that policy have upon the prosperity of the country? Let us suppose that we pulled in $2,000,000,000 of that currency. What sort of an effect would that have upon the business of the country? Suppose we pulled in $3,000,000,000; and suppose after a while, whereas we now have $6,000,000,000, we had only $2,000,000,000 of currency in circulation in the country. Does anybody deny that that policy would have an adverse effect upon the economy of the whole country and upon the business of almost every single individual?

Very well. Suppose that money were owned by private persons; that instead of the Government calling in $4,000,000,000 and salting it away, private persons were able to make it, and as soon as it came into their hands they stored it away. In a little while the business of the country would not have enough currency on which to operate.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. Is not that exactly what happened in 1937, when we had an upward trend in prosperity—that all of the basic corporations of the country were making tremendous profits, but instead of allowing the profits to remain in the channels of circulation they raised their prices and filled their treasuries, and, as a result, they skimmed the cream off the Government's spending, and prevented that money from staying in circulation?

Mr. PEPPER. That is exactly correct.

Mr. MURRAY. And as a result this recession came on; and that is the real cause of the difficulty we encounter today. If the great corporations had permitted their prices to remain as they were, or had given the general public the benefit of lower prices, and had kept that money in circulation and thus raised the purchasing power of the country, we should have gradually come out of the depression we were in.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Montana is absolutely correct.

Mr. President, the Government has no right to say to the people of the country who have money in the banks, "We are going to cut off your heads or put you in jail unless you put that money in circulation." We do not necessarily have the right even to say to them, "You cannot get a large profit upon what you do"; but that is quite a different situation from the Government saying, "We will go into these reservoirs, we will go into these depositories, we will reach down into these savings by borrowing or taxes, and we will take the risk of return, because then not an individual or a few people will take the risk, but it will be distributed over the whole economy through the agency of the Government."

So, if you find yourself in an era when there is no necessity for private investment which is strong enough to induce private capital to invest in that way, you have two courses open to you. The first one is for the Government to take those savings and make those investments and take the risk of them; or, preferably, to divert those savings, instead of to investment purposes, to purposes that would more directly aid consumption and the acquisition of goods.

The tragedy of the matter, the thing I complain about as against the Senators of the opposition, is this:

I have been a Member of the Senate now for about two and a half years. Certain of us have always expressed the same point of view that I am expressing here today as best I can. Every time an appropriation bill has been before the Senate, every time the President has proposed a step forward, he has always run into the same adamant opposition from those who oppose that policy; and yet I never have heard those Senators do anything other than just say "No." They have never made an affirmative proposal showing an effective way out of the situation.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry at that point.

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. My recollection is that it was very seriously argued here, the last time we had the matter up before us, that if we cut the appropriation to $725,000,000 business would acquire such confidence that they would immediately rush in and employ several million persons; and, I think, those who took that view succeeded in convincing the majority of the Senate that business would rush in and employ these persons.

I should like to inquire, Did not that happen? Have not all these persons been employed by private industry? Were not the Senators correct who a month or so ago very seriously and very definitely argued that the thing we needed was this act upon the part of Congress, so as to let the country know and let the business interests of the country know that Congress had taken matters into its own hands, and was no longer going to be dominated by the requests of the President? Did not that result in a business revival and the employment of all these persons? Were these Senators mistaken the last time they argued this matter?

Mr. PEPPER. I do not know how the Senators who recently said that can consistently come back now and say that they are even in favor of the appropriation of $100,000,000. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Washington. I distinctly remember, as the Senator well points out, that it was argued in behalf of the reduction to $725,000,000 that if the Congress did that, it would give encouragement to the business of the country by showing them that we were approaching a balanced Budget, and that there was some limit to the wild spending that had been in progress.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Has the Senator happened to read, for instance, the New York Times every Sunday morning, with its business index? Is it not a fact that consistently since we took that action, which we were assured would bring about a business revival, business activities, as shown in the New York Times, have dropped off a little bit each week?

Mr. PEPPER. Exactly so.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not recall that immediately upon the passage of the former relief joint resolution, reducing the amount requested by $150,000,000, the President came out with a demand for the restoration of the $150,000,000?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; I do.

Mr. GEORGE. I think it might be well to get all the facts in the RECORD.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; I recall that fact.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield on that point?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Was it not as a direct result of the invitation by the Senate, through the medium of the language of the joint resolution, that the President was compelled to come out with that statement?

Mr. PEPPER. I so understand.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The joint resolution asked him to state how much he thought was necessary.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, even if that is so, it is beside the question. As I recall, the President of the United States in his annual message said that he would leave to Congress the question of the expenditure of money.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Congress acted upon that statement and fixed the amount of the relief appropriation at $725,000,000; and even if some Senator did say on this floor—which I do not recall—that the mere reduction of $150,000,000 in the annual expenditures of the Government, which had been expending some $4,000,000,000 a year for relief, would bring about prosperity, the passage of the act was followed by the definite and positive statement of the President that he was still insisting on the appropriation of the $150,000,000; so there was no real opportunity for the reduction to bear fruit.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I do not desire to take part in the controversy which seems to be raging, but just as I came on the floor I heard the remark of the Senator from Washington and the remark of the Senator from Florida, and I wondered if I understood aright. Is it the position of the Senator from Florida that the failure to appropriate the full $875,000,000 has been the cause of the recession in business?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, it is my belief that diminution in the amount of the Federal expenditures—if they are wisely made, I may say to the Senator from New Mexico—will have and does have an adverse effect upon the general economy. I think the Senator from Washington was intimating that the indexes of business had indicated that perhaps the uncertainties which had been created by the reduction and the threatened reduction, probably the effect created by the attitude of the Congress, which seemed more and more to desire to eliminate the Federal expenditures, contributed at least to the situation not improving since the policy was announced in connection with the pending appropriation bill.

I would say that it is perhaps always unfair to isolate a proximate cause as the proximate cause, but I would say it has an effect on the result.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Washington has been looking at the stock-market reports rather than the indexes of employment, because he will not find that uniform reduction in the indexes of industry in this country.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator from Colorado is mistaken; I did not discuss either the stock-market reports or the indexes of employment.

Mr. ADAMS. The indexes of industry.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I discussed the industrial indexes. I do not know whether the Senator even heard what I said at the time the last bill was pending——

Mr. ADAMS. I always listen to what the Senator says.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If the Senator will recall, there was a very definite argument at that time upon that particular question, and the hope was held out that if Congress would take control of this matter and say that the amount should not be more than a certain sum, then $725,000,000, it would result in an increase in business and an increase in prosperity in this country. I argued rather at length upon the question of the business condition in the country, tracing it back through the months, pointing out that not until 1938 was there a break.

Answering the question of the Senator from New Mexico, I do not contend that the failure to add the $150,000,000 to the amount appropriated in the joint resolution is the cause of the drop in business. I do contend, however, that we have a perfect right now, since the prophecy which we made at that time has come true, and since the prophecies which were made by those who advocated the reductions have not come true, to reexamine that particular question; and I do not think anyone can at this time logically argue, or even plausibly argue, that a reduction of $50,000,000 from the amount the President sought will be of any assistance to business in this country. I hope that argument will not be made at this time, because it was so thoroughly disproved by the failure the last time it was made.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I never would have ventured to offer the amendment in face of the knowledge I had about the committee action had I not felt that this is a crucial stage in what we do; had I not had the feeling that by this action we were absolutely repudiating the policy we have followed for the last 6 years; had I not felt that we were telling the American people that we have been wrong, and, having now a sense of wrong, we would at least repent as soon as we could and put our footsteps upon the righteous and correct path.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Is it not the situation that we are divided here in the Senate as to what kind of a program will bring business revival? There are some here who think the President is running the Government into the sticks by reason of expenditures. I do not like to say it, but I fear there are some here who would disagree with whatever the President wanted. But is it not a fact that we cannot place responsibility on the unemployed and hungry, the children whose ribs are beginning to show, on nursing mothers whose paps are drying up, on fathers who are now put to the choice as to whether they will be curs and let their families starve or will be criminals and go out and steal? None of those people are responsible; they are not responsible, whichever group here is right. Is it not our duty, if we have any duty at all to humanity, to feed them until we find out what is wrong?

If we merely wish to determine how it may affect those who still have property, I want to say that if we let enough of the American people go hungry, if we let enough of them remain idle, they are not going to sit idly by and starve to death and see their children starve.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming is entirely correct. Not only that but as the Democratic Party we solemnly promised the American people that we were not going to let anyone starve in this country. Senators know we did that. What is our performance of that pledge? We started out to give work to the people of this country. We said we were going to give them work. How well have we performed that obligation?

As the Senator has well pointed out, we are dealing exactly with the same problem we had before us back in 1932, to a degree. I am willing to admit that Mr. Hoover did not cause all that problem. I am willing to admit that the problem came about as the natural result of economic conditions as they then existed, and previously had existed. But I do say that we are faced with the obligation and responsibility of solving those problems.

What I started out to say a moment ago was that I read the letter of the junior Senator from Virginia in reply to Mr. Eccles, and in that very able letter which the Senator from Virginia wrote the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board the junior Senator from Virginia made certain recommendations; and I want Senators to attend to the recommendations, because I do not believe there is a man on this floor who more ably and more effectively presents the other point of view than does the junior Senator from Virginia.

Here is the program which the junior Senator from Virginia offered to the American people. Let us observe the program, as it is well stated. I read from the United States News of January 23, 1939, page 9:

First, reorganize the Federal Government for simplification, retrenchment, and economy.

How many jobs is that going to give? How much purchasing power is that going to add? As I understand, that will perhaps diminish the number of jobs rather than increase them. However, that is approaching the goal which I am sure the Senator entertains as a desirable one, of a balanced Budget. But suppose we started in this afternoon and reduced the governmental expenditures; how many Senators think that would solve the unemployment problem of the United States, and that that would make more people able to buy more agricultural and manufactured commodities?

The second proposal is:

Cancel existing authority of 30 Federal borrowing corporations and agencies to borrow an additional $8,000,000,000 without further legislation and require these corporations and agencies to function through the Budget, allowing Congress to approve or reject their future expenditures.

Mr. President, I do not see any direct way by which additional people would get jobs if we put that into effect, because it certainly would not directly create any jobs, and whether it would indirectly create jobs is a matter of opinion, perhaps.

I realize that it may not be desirable governmental policy to allow these agencies to borrow money without going through the Budget, and in that respect I would agree with the Senator from Virginia that it is not desirable practice to have them do it. I would be perfectly willing to have them come through the Budget, and I am perfectly willing to make a more effective arrangement of our Government and fiscal structure. I do not have any opposition to that. But I do not see how that would result in more jobs.

On the contrary, I find that the indebtedness of Federal agencies was reduced some $3,000,000,000 between the fiscal year 1937 and the fiscal year 1938. So these agencies have been reducing their indebtedness. I understand that the amount of money we have spent through these agencies is not lost. As a matter of fact, I understand that the R. F. C. is probably not going to lose a dollar. Yet it is one of the agencies which does the most borrowing upon its own responsibility. I thought practically everyone approved the R. F. C. Perhaps it was the other agencies the Senator had in mind when he indicated he did not approve them. But, generally speaking, our loss will not be of any great magnitude, if we lose all these borrowing agencies invested. As a matter of fact, as it will work out, I think we will lose but a very small amount, if we lose anything at all. So I do not see that that is so fundamental that it is going to change entirely the present economic situation.

The third proposal is:

Scrutinize the new activities of Government now responsible for the expenditure of 30 percent of the total appropriation, exclusive of relief; eliminate the dispensable activities and reduce others to a minimum cost.

If the purpose is to increase the reservoirs of savings in this country I think perhaps that proposal would tend to effectuate such a result. But if the purpose is to make it possible for people to buy cotton garments, so that the constituents of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], and other Senators who are laboring with the cotton problem, may find a better outlet for their commodities, I do not particularly see how that is going to do it, because I do not see how the people who have these accumulations of capital are going to put it out with an assurance that they will receive a return. They had an opportunity to put them out in President Hoover's day. They did not then have any threat from the Government. They did not then have the undistributed-profits tax. The Government was not in competition with the utilities industry. They had confidence. What was it that destroyed the confidence of the business of this country under President Hoover?

Is there any Senator who would say that business had confidence in the future in the Hoover administration? If business did not have confidence, why did it lose it? Did the Government take it away from business?

Senators know that there never was a period in the history of the Government when the ear of the Government was more completely attuned to the emissaries of Wall Street and the money interests than during that administration. They came here into the sanctity of the White House and were able very considerably to influence governmental policy. So they were not afraid of the Government.

They must have been afraid of something else. I dare say they were afraid that they could not sell the inventories they had. I dare say the bankers were afraid they could not get back the money they had in their vaults if they lent it out. I dare say that the manufacturers did not have confidence that they could meet their pay rolls from the sales they were able to make of their commodities. That is the reason I think they did not have confidence.

I ask Senators, how would that proposal give confidence to retail and wholesale merchants and manufacturers that they were going to be able to dispose profitably of their output?

The next, No. 4:

Have a thoroughly honest purge of relief rolls to stop all expenditures in excess of provision for those in need through requirement of the localities to bear a portion of the burden and a direct local interest to needed reforms.

There are two propositions involved there. The first is to purge the relief rolls. How will we give business any more customers by purging the relief rolls? How will we help to restore confidence by taking away purchasing power when we start purging the relief rolls and putting men outside the pale of Federal aid? I want to know if by this proposal we are going to be able to give outlets for wise investments of any of these savings that the business interests of this country have been able to accumulate. Surely one who is discharged is not a client for an investment or an applicant for funds if assurance is expected that there will be a fair return for the loan.

The next suggestion is that all we need to do is to take relief back to the local units. It is thought, I presume, that if we let the local communities bear the burden of relief everything will be all right.

I will say to the Senate that my State does not have a State debt. The State of Florida owes nothing at all in the way of bonded debt. But the various counties and political subdivisions certainly owe some money. They certainly did during the boom days. Was Florida any better off because the counties and the several political subdivisions owed the money instead of the State government owing it? Were we any better off financially and physically? As a matter of fact, which do Senators regard as more adequate, the Federal taxing system or the taxing system of the several States of the Union?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I will yield for a question only.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I was simply curious to ascertain how the Senator's State is sharing in the distribution of W. P. A. funds in comparison with other States relative to population?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I do not think that our share is so generous as to cause complaint from anyone.

Mr. REYNOLDS. But where does the Senator's State stand on the list?

Mr. PEPPER. I do not recall, but it is rather distinctly down the list, for that matter.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will state the reason why I was particularly anxious to ascertain that fact. Of course, I know the Senator has no selfish motive in this matter; but I have rather a selfish motive in asking the question, because unfortunately North Carolina, my State, gets less per capita than any other State in the Union. I was anxious to increase it if I could, because so long as we are passing this money around I do not want anything to get by North Carolina if I can help it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I do not think the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is going to help the fiscal structure of the country by having the relief paid for by local people who depend primarily on ad valorem taxation, rather than by the Federal Government.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. One of the chief complaints that has been directed at the W. P. A. program is that the administrative expenses have been so high, and therefore the man who works does not get his fair share of the money we appropriate. It is proposed to turn the program back to the States, and of course to the smaller communities. Is it not the Senator's experience that the smaller the community the higher the administrative cost?

Mr. PEPPER. That is my experience. I do not think we would save a dime. I think it will cost us more money for administration purposes if we decentralize relief and make the various political subdivisions of the country handle it.

Mr. MINTON. Then we would be taking from the people we want to help, rather than helping them.

Mr. PEPPER. Exactly so. Mr. President, if you say, "Let us shift the load from the Federal Government to the State governments," you are not saving money. You are simply transferring it from one shoulder to another. So I do not see that it will do any particular good.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I will yield for a question.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In reference to the statement which the Senator made as to shifting the burden from the Federal Government to the State governments, I wish to observe that the State governments would not be in a position to take care of the W. P. A. workers, because, in my humble opinion, the States have been invaded by the Federal Government in the matter of collection of taxes, and limitation upon the States with respect to taxes and to a very large degree the States will continue to depend upon the Federal Government.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator.

The fifth point made by the junior Senator from Virginia is:

> Conduct the Government within the ability of the people to pay and regard reasonable taxation as one of the best assurances for business prosperity.

I realize that in making that statement the Senator has eminent authority behind him, and he has many witnesses in the present generation. But again, Mr. President, if the need of modern-day business is customers and not investments for productive purposes, I do not see how the reduction of the tax burden and the allowance of the savings of business to arise to a higher degree is going to give more jobs to the unemployed of America.

I have read the five points in what I believe to be the most definite program the opposition has offered. How many Senators in this body, giving all due credit to the able junior Senator from Virginia, believe that if we were to put every one of those principles into effect tomorrow business conditions would perceptibly improve in this country?

Suppose we were to stop all these Federal emergency agencies, take away all subsidy from agriculture and private enterprise, turn the people back to their own way of getting along, withdraw the succor of the Federal power from their assistance, and say, "All right now, we are going to have an era of prosperity in this country." What would bring about that era of prosperity is what I cannot understand. Certainly the simplest thing we could do would be to vote "no" every time an appropriation bill was offered. Is simply voting "no" modern statesmanship? Is that easy way the way out of the most challenging economic dilemma the world has ever known? Is our problem so simple as that, Senators?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Why is it that business—the captains of industry—are always shouting for an adjournment of Congress? They want to get rid of Congress because it is spending money. They say that if we will adjourn there will be confidence and business will improve; and then as soon as we have adjourned and they find that the country's economy is moving toward further wreckage, they shout for us to come back so that we may appropriate more money to rescue them from the ditch.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator is perfectly correct. Do we not recall that on numerous occasions the President of the United States said he was going to balance the Budget? I for one, in spite of what others may think, believe that he believed it in his heart every time he said it. I believe that he believed in 1932 that the wise way to bring prosperity back to this country was to do away with the Hoover deficit of three and one-half billion dollars. He discovered, as the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] so well pointed out, that in the face of tragic actualities it could not be done that way. Then he had the courage to turn his face toward the east, and he has been going in that direction ever since.

However, at least three different times in the past 6 years the President has endeavored to reach the stage of a balanced Budget. In 1937 there was relatively little difference between the income of the Federal Government, including the social-security taxes, and the total Federal disbursements. At that time we were driving directly, in policy, toward a balanced Budget.

The President said that the price of copper was too high, and he did everything he could to keep an inflationary boom from coming along which would wreck the structure. He thought we had the momentum to carry us on without very much Federal expenditure. He stopped spending money in the summer of 1937. Then we waited through June, July, August, September, October, November, and December. Business had the assurance of the administration that we wanted a balanced Budget, that we intended to attain a balanced Budget, and that we did not expect to spend very much more.

Did business begin to pick up on that assurance? The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], or someone else, said awhile ago that when the Congress reduced appropriations the President upset the apple cart by immediately demanding more. Congress was not protesting the reduction in expenditures in 1937. The President took the lead toward economy. Congress went with him. December came and went, and we experienced the worst spiral of depression we have ever had in the same length of time.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. At that time industry apparently had no program whatever and no solution to offer for the situation. The moment the unemployment condition began to arise industry began to lay off employees. Industry made more profits during the year 1937 than in any other year in our history, except 1929. All industry increased its earnings. The Du Pont Co., for example, made 12 percent more profit in 1937 than it did in 1929. Yet when the recession occurred every corporation in the United States immediately began laying off its employees. In Detroit, Mich., 30,000 men were laid off in 1 day. In my State of Montana the Anaconda Copper Co. had made a profit of $38,000,000 in 1937. The moment the unemployment situation began to develop it laid off men and threw them back on W. P. A.

What else could the Government do but resume the employment of men on public works? If industry in this country would offer some solution or some program which we could get behind, I think every Senator would support it.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator particularly for that suggestion.

Mr. President, as I stated awhile ago, and as the Senator has just effectively pointed out, business has had no solution of the problem to offer. I read from the five points of the program proposed by the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], who, I believe, is the ablest spokesman in the Senate for the balance-the-Budget, quit-spending, reduction-of-expense point of view. I ask Senators if there is any hope in either the silence of business enterprise or the affirmative proposal of my friend the junior Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not wish unnecessarily to consume the Senator's time. However, the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] and others are giving voice to sentiments which I do not like to see go wholly unchallenged.

Is it not a fact that business has repeatedly asked for some modification of the National Labor Relations Act, and particularly some changes in the administrative agencies? Is it not a fact that business has repeatedly asked for some modification in our tax laws? Is it not true that the President himself has indicated, through the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce, that modification of the tax act was in order? I need not refer to other things. However, I should like to ask the Senator an additional question. Is it the Senator's theory that business enterprise, free enterprise, will ultimately furnish employment, or that it is permanently a Government function to furnish employment?

Mr. PEPPER. I appreciate the Senator from Georgia asking that question.

Mr. GEORGE. I am anxious to have an answer to the question.

Mr. PEPPER. I desire to answer the question, and to answer it from the bottom of my heart. With modern technological methods, I do not believe that private enterprise, no matter how hard it tries, no matter how faithfully it endeavors to cooperate with the Government, ever will be able to take care of the present volume of unemployment in this country.

Mr. GEORGE. That means that we must have a modified socialism, or a socialistic state. I am not using that term in an offensive sense. I am simply using it as the best descriptive term that I know. Is it the Senator's viewpoint that the Government must always remain in the field in order to furnish employment?

Mr. PEPPER. I will answer the latter part of the Senator's question. However, I wish to take pains not to include the use of the word "socialism" in the answer.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not using the word in any offensive sense.

Mr. PEPPER. I will answer definitely, yes. Let me tell the Senator why I say that. I appreciate the Senator from Georgia asking the question. The reason why I ventured to take the time of the Senate is that, believing as I do, I should be a traitor to my convictions if I did not try to warn my colleagues and my countrymen against the contrary policy, because I think it would lead only to disaster.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator allow me to proceed for just a moment?

Mr. LEE. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. The reason why I say that is that technological improvement has been such that with modern means of production we do not need all our people to produce all our people can buy. I mean, for example, that in the early part of the nineteenth century a farmer produced enough to feed five persons on the farm and half a person in the city. Nowadays, however, that same farmer, with modern fruitfulness, modern soil productivity, modern instruments of cultivation, and the like, produces enough to feed 4 persons on the farm, 12 persons in the city, and 2 abroad. Therefore we do not need as many farmers as we would otherwise need.

Mr. GEORGE. I appreciate the Senator's answer; and I can appreciate his viewpoint. I take the contrary viewpoint. I think that the only way out for this country is a constantly increasing production at a constantly lower cost, consistent with the American standard of living. I think the problem is one of distribution.

Mr. PEPPER. Granted.

Mr. GEORGE. The problem is one of wider distribution. I do not think our people have reached the limit of their power to consume. I fear that we can never have a house divided against itself. Either we will become a socialistic state or we will stand, as we have for 150 years, for free enterprise. If the two systems can be harmonized, well and good.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, may I answer the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I think that the last statement of the Senator from Georgia points the way out of many of our dilemmas. There is no question that the trend all over the world has been toward a more and more socialistic state, or socialistic legislation. I think that statement is correct, is it not?

Mr. GEORGE. I think it has been true in many parts of the world.

Mr. HATCH. Even in our own country.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. I would not say there has necessarily been a trend toward socialism.

Mr. HATCH. Socialistic legislation.

Mr. GEORGE. There has been a definite trend toward social welfare legislation of various kinds. I distinguish the two in my own mind.

Mr. HATCH. So do I.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. Things which 25 years ago the Senator from Georgia, myself, and other Senators would not have tolerated or voted for at all have become necessities in this day and time. Is not that true?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. The statement which the Senator from Georgia made, to the effect that it devolves upon us all to harmonize this tendency with our Democratic institutions, is the way out.

Mr. GEORGE. I think so, Mr. President. However, I do not think there is any virtue in public spending for the sake of spending. I recognize spending for relief as being based upon, governed, controlled, and measured by the necessity to meet relief. I would not go beyond that. I would lessen the burden of taxation so far as possible. I would relieve, so far as I could, all the other burdens on enterprise, in order that it might take up as much of the unemployment of this country as it possibly can. I think it can take it all up under a system of wise distribution of our products.

I want to make it plain—though my philosophy may be a little old-fashioned and a little quaint in these modern days—that I do not think a deficit is ever a blessing. I do not think debt is ever a thing that brings happiness or prosperity. I cannot imagine it. The only excuse for debt or deficits is absolute necessity.

I voted for relief. I voted for practically all of the relief program. When every other Democrat, with one or two exceptions, voted the other day, I was one of half a dozen Senators here to vote for a $10,000,000,000 bond program offered during the Hoover administration by the distinguished Senator from Colorado, now dead, the late Senator Costigan, and the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I was so conspicuous in that vote that, as I say, I stood practically alone, with the late Senator from Colorado, on this side of the aisle. I believed that was the time to meet this problem; but I still was acting on the theory that we faced a necessity for a large, long-time planned program of Federal expenditure to meet the depression when it first hit us in full blast, because I could not believe that the depression was a passing thing, that prosperity was around any "corner" in sight; and for that reason I thought it was wise then to make the expenditure.

Now, however, I think we are passing from the philosophy of expenditure to meet necessary suffering, to take care of actual distress, to take care of an actual condition, into a philosophy of spending for recovery. I do not think that can ever be done. I want to repeat that I think the only way to recovery, the key to recovery, is exactly the reverse of much of the philosophy that we have followed, and that is, production, increased production, wider distribution. That alone will bring prosperity, and that alone will bring security to democracy against its enemies from without and threats from within.

I myself shall never cease to regard the expenditures for relief—although I would support them as and when necessary, and to the extent necessary—as anything but a severe dose of medicine so far as the national economy is concerned, one that may relieve but that cannot permanently cure.

I am very glad the Senator from Florida took the position that he has taken, because I may say in frankness and candor that it is the only tenable position for those who say that permanently, because of technological improvement, changes in our lives, changes in civilization itself, a new problem has been created which has added permanently to a body of persons who cannot, under our system of free enterprise, find profitable employment. The Senator is entirely sound in taking that position if his conclusions be correct, because we have here a physical demonstration of the incorrectness and unsoundness of any other view, for we have virtually the same unemployment and the same need for relief that we had when Mr. Hoover went out of office.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield in order that I may ask a question of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. NEELY. May I inquire of the always wise and able Senator from Georgia—who has a very happy way of expressing himself—how he believes the distribution and increased consumption to which he refers can be achieved with eleven or twelve million idle persons in the United States?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, of course I could not answer the Senator's question in a word. I would not trespass on the time of the Senator from Florida long enough to answer it adequately, but I think it can be answered briefly in this way:

Private enterprise can take up unemployment in the United States. I know that there are periods during which private enterprise has demonstrated an inability to do so, or, at least, periods during which it has not done so. Therefore, I favored the theory on which we based our social-security legislation. I will say frankly to the Senator that I think that legislation may have to be widened; but I do not want to take up the time of the Senator from Florida in making further response to the question at this time.

I think the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Georgia thoroughly understand each other. I think the Senator from Florida has taken a consistent position throughout his argument. That is to say, taking his premise, I think he comes to the only logical basis upon which it can stand.

I want to repeat what I said just now, that I have voted generally for relief. In this case I shall vote for the joint resolution, and I shall base my vote upon the report of the full Committee on Appropriations. I must assume that they think this additional $100,000,000 is adequate to meet the particular problem to which it is directed, because I know that on the committee there are distinguished Senators who have different viewpoints. Some may not favor relief at all, but there are on the committee those who do favor relief. Therefore I am assuming, as I generally do, that when a committee has carefully gone into a matter, and has unanimously recommended a measure carrying only $100,000,000 rather than the $150,000,000 which the Senator from Florida thinks should have been included in the measure, they must have canvassed the situation; and while I favor relief, and recognize the obligation resting upon us, and never under any circumstances would vote to continue a condition which it was within our power humanly to remedy under which men and women and children would starve or suffer, at the same time I think I must cast my vote by the necessity for relief; and I am putting my vote in favor of the joint resolution as it stands, on what I understand to be the unanimous finding of the committee that this is the amount necessary.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am very grateful to the Senator from Georgia, than whom I esteem and respect no Senator more highly, because he, too, is logical upon his premises. That is the reason why I have ventured to offer the pending amendment.

I know, as all Senators know, that there is a very sharp line of cleavage among us here in our belief about this question. I may say that I heartily acquiesce in every word the eminent senior Senator from Georgia expresses; I heartily agree with him that the problem is one of distribution; but I do not know of any way in which the distribution problem can be solved by private enterprise alone.

I think private enterprise first failed to solve that problem, and that that is the only reason why government ever concerned itself with it; that it was not government reaching out to get hold of private industry, avaricious for power, that brought us into this terrible situation. I think the problem was thrown into the lap of government, and that business people came here to the Congress, not Congress going out after those people, saying, "We are going to take you over."

I do not want an unbalanced Budget, Mr. President; but for the life of me, I do not know how we are going to dispose of our agricultural surplus unless the people of the country are able to buy. I do not see how they are going to get the money to buy unless we either give it to them or make it possible for them to earn it. The reason why I have the belief that I have regarding this appropriation is that I think it is necessary to supplement private economy, not to displace it. Goodness knows, I do not want to do that.

I come of what I like to believe is a reasonable and a substantial background. Nobody in the world wants less than I do to disturb the existing social and economic order. I have no crackpot ideas about a new kind of government or a new Constitution or a new economic and political system; but I think modern productivity has so far exceeded ability to consume its products that they cannot be absorbed and assimilated without the supplemental aid of the Government, representing the whole economy.

Mr. MINTON, Mr. MURRAY, and Mr. HILL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield first to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, if private enterprise is to assume this burden, of course, private enterprise must make a profit, because it is based upon a profit system.

Mr. PEPPER. That is true.

Mr. MINTON. Can the Senator tell us how private enterprise can continue to make a profit while continually producing a surplus?

Mr. PEPPER. No; I cannot.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MURRAY. I think the Senator from Indiana has put the very question I had in mind. Is not the only way in which industry can undertake to assist in this matter by being satisfied with less profits and spreading out a consuming power in the people by being satisfied with lower prices and paying better wages, or at least putting more men to work?

At the present time those engaged in industry in this country want to continue to make the profits they have always been able to make during the period when we were going through this transition. As technology introduced methods by which they were able to produce at less cost, instead of spreading out the resulting profits and giving the public the advantage of lower prices, the great industries took in the profits and accumulated a large capital that they were unable to invest; and that is the problem that is before the country today. The great industries will have to be satisfied with smaller earnings and put some of this money out in the hands of the people; and that is the only way in which they are ever going to be able to assist in the solution of the problem.

Mr. PEPPER. I thoroughly agree with the Senator.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, one other question. If we continue to produce and produce, as the distinguished Senator from Georgia says, and continue to pile up a surplus, we shall only increase our problem, shall we not, unless we solve the problem of how to distribute what we can produce?

Mr. PEPPER. Exactly. That is what all of us are striving for.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Georgia several years ago saw this problem in its true aspect, and was then for a large bond issue of $10,000,000,000 to solve the problem; but we missed the opportunity then to make the sizable appropriation that ought to have been made to meet the problem as it then existed. That day has gone by, and we have dribbled along, and have failed to solve the problem either 8 or 10 years ago, as the Senator wanted to do it, or in the intervening years; and consequently our problem has grown. Is not that the situation?

Mr. PEPPER. Decidedly so.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. A moment ago the Senator from Georgia stated that he understood that an appropriation of $100,000,000 was the unanimous judgment of the committee as to the necessity of the case.

As I understood the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] when he was speaking, he said that three or four members of the subcommittee wanted to appropriate $150,000,000, and other members thought $100,000,000 was sufficient, and some of the members were inclined not to do much of anything, and that as a matter of fact when they got to cogitating among themselves as to what they ought to do it was also suggested that if the Senate did not do a certain thing the House would not do something else, and that if we put the amount at $150,000,000 the House would not go along.

So, as I understand the situation, it is not a case of the committee determining that a certain amount was necessary or not necessary, but they had conflicting views, and they compromised on something, with no basis behind it as to what one individual thought was right or what another individual thought was right. I also understand that practically all the committee had before them was the report of the W. P. A. as to what was the need. I am not objecting, but I just wanted to state that I understood the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to say that this amount was arrived at in a sort of compromise, in order to find something that the committee could bring out and report to the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course, that is true; hardly any large committee would be unanimous in its viewpoint on every particular item in any bill. But, as I understand, this is a unanimous report, and I must assume that the committee are making the report in good faith, however they finally arrived at it; and I must assume that the committee thought this sum was adequate, or believed that it would suffice, at least.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I wish to say, as one of two members of the committee who favored an appropriation of $150,000,000, that Senators are wrong when they come to the conclusion that we had absolutely no basis upon which to make a recommendation of $100,000,000.

To start with, it is my opinion that an appropriation of $150,000,000 will not, from the viewpoint of the Senator from Florida, and possibly from my viewpoint, meet the existing situation, because back of the approximately 3,000,000 who are now on the W. P. A. rolls there is a certified waiting list of 750,000 in addition. It is very true that that number can be reduced when the proper inquiry is made as to their necessities, but I am quite sure that out of 750,000 who are certified as being entitled to relief by local agencies there is a substantial number over and above those we are undertaking to care for today who are entitled to go upon the W. P. A. rolls on the ground of necessity.

When it comes to making an appropriation for relief, I am one of those who do not believe that we can compute the exact amount with any mathematical nicety or accuracy. We have to take a general view of the whole situation, and do the very best we can.

As a member of the committee, I entertain the view that a $150,000,000 appropriation would perhaps more adequately meet the situation which exists today; but we were confronted with a practical proposition. We had those on the committee who desired to make no appropriation at all. We had others who desired to make a much larger appropriation, and if the members of the committee made a report to the Senate with a majority on one side and a minority on the other, or perhaps not be able to agree at all, we would throw the whole subject matter into a prolonged and bitter debate, and it is possible that the outcome of the debate would have been a smaller appropriation than the one called for by the joint resolution as passed by the House.

Therefore, taking everything into consideration, I arrived at the conclusion, as did the Senator from Tennessee, that it was best for us all to agree on a sum which perhaps will not fully meet the situation, but one which, in our opinion, will fairly meet the need as it exists today. I intend to vote against any amendment to the joint resolution, whether it be an amendment to increase the appropriation or an amendment to decrease the appropriation.

I would have been happy if the committee had agreed unanimously to report an appropriation of $150,000,000, but since we could not do that, since, if the controversy had continued, it was not improbable that there would have been a joint resolution reported to the Senate carrying a substantially lesser amount, I entered into the agreement that we would compromise on $100,000,000, and when I did that, I think I did the best thing for the unemployed, for whom the Senator from Florida has made such an eloquent and able appeal.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I would, before anyone else, absolve the committee members, particularly those who have the point of view of the senior Senator from Tennessee and the senior Senator from Louisiana from any attitude or action which would be inappropriate to their high purposes. But the tragedy of the thing, it seemed to me, was that neither side got what it believed in. I know that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the very honorable and able senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], is quoted in the papers as saying he favored no additional appropriation at all.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. The senior Senator from Virginia believes in taking care of every indigent person; but he believes it ought to be done by the States and the subdivisions of the States, in order to avoid the outrageous, almost criminal, extravagance which has ensued.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I know I am enlightened by the very clear-cut statement which the Senator from Virginia makes. I had been under the impression that he thought that this works-relief program was an erroneous philosophy. I did not know that he complained primarily of the agency which effectuated it. It is perfectly consistent with his background and the traditions he loves and with his philosophy for him to say that he would prefer that the State be the agency which would give the employment, and not the Federal Government. That is perfectly consistent with my philosophy. I do not care who gives it. Although I have a belief that it can more effectively and more economically be given by the Federal Government, I do not care who gives it. Either system, that proposed by the senior Senator from Virginia or that proposed by me, is in supplement of the activities of private enterprise. What I said to the senior Senator from Georgia was that I did not think private enterprise ever would be able to absorb the unemployed without aid—collateral assistance—from some kind of governmental agency, and what the pending measure indicates is that we have lost confidence in aiding business by governmental effort, it seems to me. If we really believed in this thing, we would not stop and let 200,000 go out of jobs on the 1st of April of this year and 300,000 more go out of employment on May 1 of this year and 267,000 more go off the relief rolls on the 1st of June of this year, as I am advised will occur under the existing appropriation for the W. P. A.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator has repeated the statement about some 200,000 going off the rolls in April. The 200,000 supposedly were going off because of the absence of this appropriation. If we ever get to the point of making the $100,000,000 appropriation, these 200,000 will not be dropped. In other words, the very purpose of the appropriation will be to keep those men on the rolls. It is the fact that we cannot get to making the appropriation that is allowing the orders to go out to remove people from the rolls. Of the 200,000 who are going off, 45,000 are aliens, and 36,000 have been determined by investigation not to be in need; so there are 82,000 who are dropped by virtue of the terms of the bill itself. If the $100,000,000 is appropriated, as the Senator figured a while ago, 1,600,000 can be employed 1 month.

Mr. PEPPER. Eight hundred and twenty-five thousand.

Mr. ADAMS. That was for $50,000,000. Fifty million dollars will employ a little over 800,000; but the $100,000,000 we appropriate will employ, in addition to those now on the rolls, 450,000 per month for each of the 3 months coming. So that the situation the Senator pictures will not exist if he will allow us to vote the $100,000,000.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, that is typical of what we have been faced with every time this question has come up. That is simply a repetition of the assurances which the Senator from Colorado gave the Senator from New Jersey when he stood right here at this place and asked the Senator from Colorado at the time of the last appropriation whether he was right or whether Colonel Harrington was right. The Senator said, "No; there will not be a man dropped in the State of New Jersey." If the Senator from New Jersey is in the Chamber at the present time, I think he will affirm that he asked the question, and the Senator at that time said, "No; Harrington has been beguiling you with some figures." Yet they were removed, and they have been going off the rolls, and these 200,000 have already gone off on the first of this month.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that on the day when Colonel Harrington testified before our committee there were more people on the W. P. A. rolls in the United States than on the 4th of February, when we passed the bill. In other words, there had been no reduction in the rolls. As a matter of fact, between the 11th of February, 1 week after we passed the bill, and the 25th of February, within 2 weeks, there were 78,000 more put upon the rolls than were upon the rolls when we passed the bill. The passage of the bill was not followed by reductions in the rolls. The rolls at that time carried 2,965,000. Colonel Harrington testified before our committee that as of the date of his testimony the rolls carried 3,009,000, and the reduction is being made as of this week, and will be made, merely as a matter of ordinary mathematics, $61 per person per month, the very figure the Senator has been using.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Colorado to state to the Senate whether or not, if the hundred million shall be appropriated, any persons now employed upon the W. P. A. will be cut off between now and the 30th of June.

Mr. ADAMS. There will be in the neighborhood of 24,000 taken off under the investigation of those who are not in need. Colonel Harrington says to us that on the rolls there have been not less than 2 percent who did not belong, that he has taken off 30,000, and expects to take off an aggregate of 60,000. So there are 24,000 to go off for that one reason.

Mr. PEPPER. Will any more go off?

Mr. ADAMS. Colonel Harrington gave to us, in supporting his argument for the $875,000,000 appropriation, a list of the number he expected to keep on the rolls, and that estimate, which we understood to be regarded as an adequate estimate, in view of the slight increase in employment, would show a reduction to 2,875,000 in April, to 2,775,000 in May, to 2,700,000 in June. Those were Colonel Harrington's figures. He figured a reduction from January to June of 300,000, by normal processes, voluntary retirements, and private employment. As a matter of fact, practically 150,000 a month go off the rolls voluntarily. That is the record. So the money which will be appropriated under the $100,000,000 joint resolution will keep on the rolls all of the numbers Colonel Harrington asked to have kept on with his $875,000,000, and will leave over $45,000,000 to be spent in the next fiscal year.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, of course we might just as well not discuss any matter if we cannot come to an agreement as to a premise. If I have wasted my time in thinking that no one who is now working for the W. P. A. is to lose his job, if the 200,000 who have already been let off are to be put back on the rolls, there is nothing about which to argue—if I knew I could depend on the accuracy of what the Senator says.

Mr. ADAMS. I am merely suggesting that we depend on the accuracy of Colonel Harrington's figures, not mine.

Mr. PEPPER. One time the genial Senator says that Colonel Harrington does not know the truth, or he is not giving it to us, and another time the Senator relies upon Colonel Harrington's judgment instead of his own.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I interrupt again?

Mr. PEPPER. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not rely entirely upon Colonel Harrington, but for this purpose we are accepting his figures as accurate. I think, in fact, that there is not need for the full amount, but we have gone to the full extent of accepting Colonel Harrington's figures and applying them to his own computations.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator consent to an amendment to the bill similar to the one that was put in the other bill which the Senator sponsored, namely, that no more than 5 percent of those now employed shall be dismissed before the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that we had an experience along that line. We endeavored, as the Senator knows, to meet an argument that was being made both in and out of the Senate Chamber, that if we appropriated only $725,000,000, immediately in the midst of winter there would be 400,000, 500,000, or 600,000 persons turned out on the streets, and the Appropriations Committee said, "No; we think some reduction is proper, but we will not permit that to be done. You may go up to 5 percent but not above it."

But Colonel Harrington took a different stand. He said, "I am going to maintain the roll." He said, "The inference from the congressional action is that no one should be dropped from the rolls." When we said to him that he should not dismiss more than 5 percent he said, "We will not drop any." Not only did the W. P. A. not dismiss any, but they increased the rolls by 78,000 in the face of an appropriation which Colonel Harrington said was inadequate.

Mr. PEPPER. In the Senator's opinion, was that an unjustifiable increase?

Mr. ADAMS. The agitation for the increase was for the purpose of coercing the Congress of the United States by pressure from home, which the demand would incite and engender.

Mr. PEPPER. I have a last question I should like to ask the Senator. If the $100,000,000 appropriation is granted by Congress, will the 850,000 certified applicants in the country, who do not now have jobs, obtain employment?

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator speaks of 850,000 persons who are certified. In the first place, there is no such list of persons certified by W. P. A. There is no list of men certified by the W. P. A. who are not on the W. P. A. There is a list of applicants who have received their certification from local authorities. It is not a list of those who have passed the scrutiny and the test of the W. P. A. It is a list that is not new. It has existed for at least 2 years. There have been some 750,000 applicants certified for 2 years. Colonel Harrington and his administration, from October until January, in the face of this, cut the rolls by 350,000. In other words, there has been no embarrassment, there has been no handicap in prior days, with respect to reducing the normal rolls. It is the list from which men are drawn. But the Senator knows, unless Florida is different from other States, that when applicants come to the local authority, which may be the board of county commissioners or a welfare agency, the temptation is great to certify them without very scrupulous examination. And that is not all. Once a person is certified he stays on the list.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. I think the statement just made by the Senator is a slander on the certifying agencies of the States. I think the State agencies very carefully scrutinize those who are placed on the eligible lists. I know that in my State of Montana we have tremendous lists. Take for instance the city of Butte. In that city alone, as a result of the reduction in mining operations, there are thousands who are not only on the local lists, but I receive letters every day from the miners' organization calling my attention to the fact that something must be done to take care of the men who are out of employment and who cannot find employment in industry.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana spoke of the slandering of agencies. I do not think it is a slander to say that a county or a State is eager to put the burden on the Federal Government. That is nothing unusual. It is not slander to say that. As a matter of fact, it is the normal thing for them to do. There are counties in my State which are in difficult situations financially, and they naturally would do that. If a man is in distress, and the local authorities can get the Federal Government to put him on its rolls, of course they will do so. They are not as strict in their examination as they otherwise would be. What was said does not constitute a slander. With the exception of Montana, I think it is a statement of fact.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, in reference to the observation of the Senator from Colorado, I wish to make a further remark. For 3 or 4 years in the State of Mississippi the W. P. A. administration has had nothing to do with the certification of those who were eligible and were in need. Today we have between 40,000 and 50,000 on the relief rolls, and in addition between 90,000 and 100,000 persons who have been certified for nearly 3 years and who are just as much in need as are the 40,000 or 50,000 who are on the rolls today. Many of them are on the verge of starvation. Many of them are almost naked. Yet we talk about the administration taking a few off of the rolls. I want to know where we are going to get the money to put on the rolls those 90,000 or 100,000 who for 2 or 3 years have been in need of relief, on the verge of starvation.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator was interrupted in the able statement he was making to the Senate with respect to W. P. A., and he did not, as I remember, give the total for the various months. I have been much instructed by the statements made by able Senators here today. We can talk about various theories of government as much as we wish, but we are confronting facts; we are confronting hungry, starving people; we are confronting a large number of unemployed, and people who are going to be thrown off the rolls. I should like to have the total of those figures given.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, before I came to the Chamber this morning I called Mr. Howard Hunter, the Assistant W. P. A. Administrator, and told him I wanted some accurate information about what was going to happen to the W. P. A. rolls, because every time we have debated this question—and I say it with all kindliness to the Senator from Colorado—it has been just about as clear as mud as to what we were trying to vote on. They sent a man to me with the figures. He is an assistant W. P. A. administrator. The figures he gave me show that on the 1st of April 200,000 were actually dismissed; not "going to be" dismissed; but actually dismissed. On the 1st of May an additional 300,000 will be dropped, and on the 1st of June an additional 267,000 will be dropped, making a total of 767,000 who will be dropped between now and the end of the present fiscal year because the W. P. A. will not have sufficient funds to keep them on the pay roll.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, is that in addition to the 750,000 who have previously been certified as eligible?

Mr. PEPPER. It means that persons who have already gotten jobs are going to be laid off; and, as the Senator from Mississippi properly pointed out, in all the States of this country there are literally thousands of unemployed who have been investigated by a social-service worker or a competent State agency, and have been certified to the W. P. A. as in need and actually deserving of W. P. A. employment.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] I desire at this time to read for the benefit of Senators a telegram addressed to me which I have this day received. It may shed some light with respect to the discussion that is now under way. I read:

HAMMOND, LA., April 6, 1939.

Senator ALLEN ELLENDER,
Washington, D. C.:

Meeting of several hundred persons discharged from W. P. A. held and appointed undersigned as committee to protest wholesale and discriminatory discharge of workers in Livingston Parish. About 925 workers badly in need of work out of 1,100 total have been let out. This is over 75 percent. Other parishes are letting out only from 10 to 20 percent. No effort made to discharge according to need of worker. Men with large families to support discharged, others not nearly so in need retained. We feel that Livingston Parish has not been dealt with fairly and we urge immediate action on your part to right this wrong. Our people are in need at best, and with wholesale dismissals much suffering and hardship will prevail.

WARY WATTS, Chairman.
B. D. FOSTER.
SIDNEY A. SANDERS.
HENRY MARTIN.
JOHN BARBER.

Mr. President, this telegram represents but a prelude of what Senators can expect should we fail to take heed of the recommendations of the Administrator of W. P. A., Colonel Harrington. When the Senate considered a bill for additional funds for W. P. A. a few months ago, it was pointed out that unless the full amount requested by those in authority was made available W. P. A. rolls would have to be cut considerably. That time has arrived and the rolls are being reduced. Just stop and think, according to the telegram I have just read, 925 men out of 1,100 employed in one parish in my State have been discharged. In other parishes the rolls are being reduced from 10 to 20 percent. It may be that some cuts are justified in some sections of the country because of the absorption of labor in industry and agriculture. But, as a whole, however, I feel confident that the unemployed now in distress cannot possibly be taken care of by private enterprises in the light of past experience. As was pointed out by the able Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the reduction of W. P. A. rolls as scheduled by Colonel Harrington is about to take place. That schedule was fixed and determined several weeks ago and the Senate was warned that it would have to be put into effect, beginning in April, unless $150,000,000 additional were made available. Colonel Harrington was right a few weeks ago when he predicted what would happen if we did not appropriate $150,000,000. He is right today, and I do hope that the Senate will adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida and thereby make the additional sum of $150,000,000 available.

How silly it is to say that business will improve if we cut W. P. A. appropriations. Since 1933 business has had ample opportunity to show its intention. The Government poured out billions for relief, billions for public works, billions for the soldiers' bonus, and as long as that immense amount of money flowed into the channels of commerce we had some prosperity. Did industry go out of its way to cope with the Government in relieving unemployment? I contend it did not. Industry does not seem to desire to take chances. It must be convinced of large profits before it is willing to venture out. It is now complaining of high taxes, of certain evils that exist. It is contending for lower taxes and a removal of business barriers. It complains of a lack of confidence and other ghostlike apparitions. Strange it is that most of the giants in industry have recovered their lost fortunes during this administration. When President Roosevelt was sworn in 6 years ago, most of them were on the verge of bankruptcy, and the most of them rallied under his banner. Today they are no longer in distress and are using every means at their command to place his administration in disfavor.

No, Mr. President, let us not turn our backs on these unfortunates. It is our solemn duty to take care of them to the best of our ability. I am not a pessimist, but unless we do take care of the hungry and the poorly clad, there will lurk ahead a force that will know no bounds and that may cause our cherished institutions to crumble.

I must apologize to the Senator from Florida for this encroachment on his time.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator need not apologize. I want to thank him for his valuable contribution.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am considering making the proposition of doing a little trading. I understand the Senator has presented an amendment boosting the amount to $150,000,000.

Mr. MURRAY. Not boosting it—restoring it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Restoring it. As I said a moment ago, my State of North Carolina receives less per capita than any other State in the Union. I want to see North Carolinians eat as much food and get as much of this money as any others in the country. I think North Carolina is entitled to it because North Carolina pays more annually to maintain the Government than does any other State in the Union, with the exception of New York, Pennsylvania, and Illinois.

Mr. MURRAY. And Montana! [Laughter.]

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; Montana is away down on the list.

In view of the fact that North Carolina contributes so generously to the upkeep and maintenance of the Federal Government, I think North Carolinians are entitled to be treated as well as the people of any other State in the Union. Therefore I propose at the propert time to offer the following amendment:

Provided, That the wages paid by the Works Progress Administration for the same nature or character of work shall be uniform throughout the United States.

I ask the Senator, if I will vote for his $150,000,000, will the Senator vote for my amendment? [Laughter.]

Mr. PEPPER. I should like to make an inquiry before I answer that question. I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] if I would be guilty of a felony if I entered into such a political bargain on a relief matter with the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have already fully advised the Senator from Florida on all questions regarding felonies in connection with the W. P. A. My former advice still stands.

Mr. PEPPER. Insofar as I may give the Senator from North Carolina assurances without entering into a covenant, I will say "yes."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Recurring to the discussion between the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Colorado, it is my understanding that the contention of the Senator from Colorado is that even with only $100,000,000 no one will be in need or deprived of work on W. P. A., that there is a dispute in that regard between the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Florida. In view of that I wonder if the Senator from Colorado would be willing to accept the following amendment, which I propose to offer?

Provided, That the Works Progress Administration shall so administer the funds allotted to it for the balance of the fiscal year, and so regulate the employment, that no project worker who is in need and employable and who cannot find employment in private industry at wages not less than the prevailing rate of wages for work for which he or she is reasonably fitted by training and experience shall be discharged from the Works Progress Administration rolls except for cause.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I hope that the suggested amendment will be agreeable to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from Florida that one of the impelling motives which influenced the members of the Appropriations Committee to agree on the amount was that the appropriation might be put through expeditiously—that we might pass the House measure and have it go into effect immediately, with no requirement for a conference, so that the very discharges about which the Senator is concerned would not take place, and the $100,000,000 would be immediately available to the Administrator of the W. P. A. The Administrator has established a scale of the number who will be on relief, which he submitted in reference to the $875,000,000 proposal. So far as I can see, beyond any question, the $100,000,000 will maintain the desired amount of employment up until the 30th of June, leaving the Administrator at least $45,000,000 to carry him over and meet his expenses for the first week in July.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I do not know what I am to understand. Am I to understand from the Senator from Colorado that if my amendment is defeated, the exact thing which the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] desired by his proposed amendment will assuredly be accomplished?

Mr. ADAMS. I do not know what the Senator from Washington may have in mind. I am merely saying that we are seeking to carry out the program which the W. P. A. Administrator submitted as to the number to be employed each month between now and the 1st of July.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that there is nothing concealed or hidden in the proposal I make. I think we ought to recognize the difficulty which our Appropriations Committee has. In talking to representatives of W. P. A. during the past several years I have been very critical of the manner in which they have presented their figures. I have entire sympathy with the members of the committee because of the difficulty they have in knowing the exact figures. On the other side, I have been critical of W. P. A. However, as I understand, it is the contention of the committee that nobody will lose work if $100,000,000 is provided; that is, nobody in need, nobody who is employable, will lose work; and the only ones who may lose work will be those who naturally would enter private industry during the remainder of this fiscal year. If the Senate Appropriations Committee is correct in its conclusion, I do not see why anybody should object to the amendment which I have suggested, so as to give definite instructions to the W. P. A. officials.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, that is not the situation. The Appropriations Committee has never said, and Colonel Harrington has never said, that no one who was in need and who was employable, would go off the rolls except to take a place paying wages as good as or better than those paid by the W. P. A. Colonel Harrington has set up a scale as to the number to be employed in a stated time. It is inevitable that there may be some in need who will not be taken on the rolls.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. My amendment does not refer to taking anybody on. It is simply a matter of putting them off.

Mr. ADAMS. That is not the problem. Every week persons are going on and off. There is no fixed number on the rolls. There will not be the same set of people on the rolls next week as this week. They go off on an average of 125,000 to 150,000 a month. It is a question of replacement. It would be very easy to say that nobody in need who is on the rolls should be dropped. The rolls would automatically drop down. The question is, How many are to be placed on the rolls to replace those who are dropped? We have relied on Colonel Harrington's figures as to the number who ought to be employed. He has not said to us that no man who was in need would be dropped. He has said to us that the program will take care of so many; and we are seeking to provide the money to do that which he said he wished to do.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Then I misunderstood the previous statement of the Senator from Colorado in response to the question of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I will yield; and then I wish to conclude.

Mr. BILBO. May I ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] whether or not it is his understanding that Colonel Harrington proposes to take care of any of the 850,000 who are certified and who have not yet been placed on the rolls?

Mr. ADAMS. The situation is just as I have tried to explain to the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH]. The rolls are in a condition of continual movement. A man will go on the rolls from the 850,000. Other men who lose their jobs will go on the list of 850,000. The list of eligible persons is a shifting list, like the rolls. In other words, we must regard the W. P. A. matter in its true light. The rolls are not a fixed number, like the muster roll of an army, which is not subject to change. Out of the 850,000, I should imagine that 300,000 will find their way onto the rolls, replacing practically an equal number who will go off to take other employment. The exact number cannot be determined in advance. What we can determine is the amount of money to be furnished and the number of people that amount of money will put on the rolls.

Mr. BILBO. What disturbs me is that I know personally of many who are in absolute need, who are starving, who have been certified for 2 or 3 years, and who have not yet been put on the rolls. As the Senator from Florida suggests, there will be so many hundred thousand dismissed on the first of each month from now until the conclusion of the present fiscal year. I see no opportunity for any of the 850,000 to be put on the rolls. Inasmuch as approximately 40,000 of those are my own constituents, I am inclined to support the proposal for $150,000,000 or as much more as may be necessary to put on the rolls all who are entitled to relief from the Government.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if Senators will permit me, I should prefer not to yield any further. I shall conclude my remarks in 2 or 3 minutes.

I have in my hand a communication from the W. P. A. administrator of my State, which says that 23,000 who are certified in my State for relief have never been able to obtain a job. I do not believe there is a Senator who does not know from his personal experience in his own State that the effect of the reduction in the appropriation will be that more persons in his own State will be dropped from the W. P. A. rolls. There is not a Senator who does not know that persons who are certified by State agencies will not be given a job by the Federal Government, either now or hereafter, according to the sentiment indicated in the committee with respect to the appropriation.

We know, Mr. President, that the 11,000,000 unemployed, the number of which is not contested by anybody, will not have an opportunity to obtain a job. They will languish in their pitiable state because the Congress is not disposed to take care of them. More millions who are subsisting upon meager social-security benefits of three, four, five, or six dollars a month, and who are ineligible for the W. P. A., meager as its contribution is, will not have an opportunity to obtain a job from the Federal Government or from private enterprise.

Mr. President, the farmers who are thrown out of employment because they cannot sell their agricultural commodities will not find purchasers for those commodities in the W. P. A. or other Federal agencies. Those who are thrown out of their farm vocations will not have an opportunity to obtain alternative employment under such a program. Those who have been subsisting upon the meager pensions we have provided can expect no immediate succor from this Congress, with the attitude of economy which is the predominant sentiment of the Senate and the House.

Mr. President, if the members of the committee who think we should reduce the appropriation are correct, why would we not achieve more perfect success by cutting out the whole W. P. A. program and balancing the Budget, and saying that after all we have had the courage to do what they believe to be right? As it is, we do not take the medicine of either doctor. We do not take any program which would give employment to practically all those who are without a job. We do not take the program of the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who believes that employment can best be furnished through the States, or the program of the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], who says that we ought to balance the Budget and dispense with extra appropriations.

We dilly-dally between the two extremes, half doing the one and half doing the other. We might as well expect two doctors, one giving one remedy and the other giving a remedy to neutralize the remedy of the first, to cure a patient of a pernicious ailment.

I say that the program we have followed for 6 years has been necessary and has been helpful. I ask leave to insert at this point a table compiled by Secretary Wallace showing how the national debt has had to expand to take up the shrinkage of private investment and private loans which formerly supported the business structure.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. PEPPER. I rose to remind the Congress that we should either take the view of the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] that proper distribution can be achieved by private industry alone, or adopt the theory which some of us entertain, that it is necessary for the Government to supplement the effort of private industry. Monopoly and technological improvements have made it impossible for private industry to absorb the millions of unemployed Americans; and when we do not recognize that symptom of our ailment we ignore the necessary diagnosis of modern economic conditions.

I do not care whether 150 or 30,000 are dropped from the rolls. I am not quibbling over that point. I stress the point that Congress by this action has definitely repudiated a modern view about modern economic conditions and has refused to apply to them the necessary correctives before they can ever be brought into a happy or reasonable equilibrium.

Let us weigh this action before we throw away the opportunity we have to make America what it can and should be, before we lose our great chance to make America really free—free economically as well as politically—free for all men, free for the little man as well as the big, free even for the unemployed, for no less than any other citizen they and their families are entitled to their share of our birthright of real freedom.

AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I wish to introduce into the RECORD some helpful statements which have come to me with regard to Senate bill 959. The bill has the purpose of amending the Social Security Act to provide for the Federal Government matching equally the sums expended by the States for aid to dependent children. At present the Federal Government matches on a 50-50 basis the expenditures of the States for old-age assistance and for aid to the blind, but provides only one-third for aid to dependent children.

The only reason I have been able to discover why the Congress discriminated against the children's classification as compared with that of the blind and aged, is that in former years it was the custom for communities to share with the State the cost of aid for children. When the Federal Government stepped in to provide funds, it was assumed that the communities would continue to contribute, and that if the Federal Government contributed one-third, the community one-third, and the State one-third the needs would be met.

However, as we all know, communities, which have limited taxing ability, have been hard hit by the years of depression and have not been able to contribute the one-third which it was supposed they would provide.

In this connection I quote from a letter from Frank Bane, Executive Director of the Social Security Board, written to me under date of March 23, 1938, in which he says:

> In a number of States, where the assistance programs are financed through a division of costs among State, Federal, and local governments, certain poorer localities have encountered serious difficulties in raising the required local contribution. This is especially true in States in which the localities must depend on the property tax for their revenues and in which there is no provision for State equalization.
> On the whole, the State and local appropriations for aid to dependent children have been less adequate than those for old-age assistance. While this situation may be explained in part by the unusual interest which has been evidenced in the care of the aged, the fact that the percentage of Federal participation is smaller for aid to dependent children than for the other categories has not only limited the total amount of money made available from Federal, State, and local sources for this purpose, but has also made some States hesitant about entering into a program under which the State and its localities are required to carry two-thirds of the financial load.

The interest in making this logical change, to provide the same matching provision for aid to dependent children as for aid to the aged and the blind, is manifested in letters which have been received from directors of public-welfare departments of 36 States other than my own State.

The director of social security in my State, Mr. Charles F. Ernst, has long been advocating an increase in the Federal allotment for aid to dependent children.

These letters were written in response to a query from Mr. Glen Leet, editor of the Washington News Letter on Social Legislation, and have been placed in my hands by Mr. Leet. I should like to have incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, extracts from letters received by Mr. Leet.

There being no objection, the extracts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Loula Dunn, commissioner, department of public welfare, Alabama:

"This department is very much in favor of the increase, mainly for the following reasons:

"1. More dependent children who have been deprived of parental support will be given the care they need. The 'ill-fed, ill-clad, ill-housed' dependent children of Alabama could be far more adequately provided for in their own homes if we could secure 50-percent Federal matching for assistance which the State and county are able to render.

"2. The tendency on the part of many State and local governments to place more emphasis on aid to aged persons than on aid to dependent children would be largely corrected in that the cost to the State and local governments would be the same for both categories."

Earl M. Kouns, director, State department of public welfare, Colorado:

"We believe that the program for children is a most worth-while program, and we are depending upon Congress to change the Federal participation from one-third to one-half, as, certainly, they should give as much consideration to children as they do to the aged, the highways, and various other functions. Unless Congress changes this Federal participation early this year the various counties of the State will not have sufficient funds to make their share of the payments for aid to dependent children benefits."

Elwood Street, director of public welfare, District of Columbia:

"I approve most heartily of the proposal of the Social Security Board to increase the Federal contribution for aid to dependent children from one-third to one-half."

C. C. Codrington, commissioner, State welfare board, Florida:

"The State Welfare Board of Florida sincerly believes that Federal contribution for aid to dependent children should be one-half instead of one-third as at present. Florida's viewpoint is that this is the most important and valuable category under its administration."

Braswell Deen, director, State department of public welfare, Georgia:

"The only reaction I have had relative to the position of the Social Security Board to increase the Federal contribution for aid to dependent children from one-third to one-half has been most favorable. Personally, I very much hope this can be done."

B. Child, director, department of public assistance, Idaho:

"It is my feeling that an increase in the Federal contribution for aid to dependent children from one-third to one-half would be most helpful to State administrators in their efforts to establish adequate standards of assistance to dependent children.

"I feel that until this is done there will always be discrimination on the part of the States toward the end that their expenditures will be made in those directions which will yield the most generosity in the matching of Federal funds."

John C. Weigle, acting superintendent, department of public welfare, Illinois:

"Just as a matter of investment on the part of the Federal Government, certainly the dependent children of America who are to be the citizens of America tomorrow are entitled to as much by way of grants in aid as are the needy aged."

T. A. Gottschalk, administrator, department of public welfare, Indiana:

"This subject has been under discussion in this department quite often and we are very much in favor of such an increase in Federal reimbursement. This is also favored by the counties of the State of Indiana, who, under the Indiana plan, participate in the cost of the program."

R. B. Church, State director, board of social welfare, Kansas:

"The State Board of Social Welfare of Kansas is in accord with the proposal of the Social Security Board to increase the Federal contribution for aid to dependent children from one-third to one-half."

Margaret Woll, commissioner, department of welfare, Kentucky:

"I would heartily endorse the proposal of the Social Security Board. In fact, I see no reason for discrimination against the children in the distribution of Federal funds."

G. W. Leadbetter, commissioner, department of health and welfare, Maine:

"I am strongly in favor of this change."

J. Milton Patterson, executive secretary, board of State aid and charities, Maryland:

"I think it is very sound for the Federal Government to change their contribution for aid to dependent children from one-third to one-half.

"In the first place, it would make uniform the grants to the States for all three categories and would eliminate a lot of confusion in bookkeeping, but, most of all, it would make available to the States more money for children, and, in my judgment, the children's program is much more essential than any of the others, because we are dealing with the citizens of today and not the citizens of yesteryear."

Benjamin E. Youngdahl, director, public assistance, Minnesota:

"There is no reason known to us for giving children a smaller amount of Federal support than is given the aged group. If anything, the Federal Government should take the lead in aid to dependent children and foster it in every possible way. One reason for this statement is the fact that children do not of themselves form a pressure group—children do not lobby for themselves, and almost no one else lobbies for them; yet this aid to dependent children program is in most ways the most hopeful and promising of the various programs of aid carried on in the country today."

W. F. Bond, commissioner, State department of public welfare, Mississippi:

"I cannot see why there should be any objection at all from any source to the amendment of the Social Security Act providing that aid for dependent children shall be on a 50-50 basis between the Federal Government and the States as is now provided for in aid to the needy blind and to the needy aged. I certainly hope that this amendment is carried in Congress."

George I. Haworth, administrator, State social-security commission, Missouri:

"At a meeting of State administrators in Washington early in December, I believe it was the unanimous opinion that the Federal Government should contribute one-half for aid to dependent children, the same as for old-age assistance. This difference is very hard to explain to State officials and many States need the assistance of the Federal Government in making these grants available for a cause as worthy, if not more so than grants to the needy aged."

I. M. Brandjord, administrator, department of public welfare, Montana:

"As far as I know, the sentiment in favor of this change in the State of Montana is unanimous. It has been impossible to explain to people why the Federal Government contributes one-half for old-age assistance and one-half for aid to needy blind but only one-third for aid to dependent children. Our legislature has already passed a memorial to Congress favoring this change."

Neil C. Vandemoer, director of assistance, Nebraska:

"We see no reason why there should be a difference in the matching by social-security funds in old age, blind, and aid to dependent children."

Harry O. Page, commissioner, department of public welfare, New Hampshire:

"I am very hopeful that the Congress will pass favorably upon the recommendation of the Social Security Board that the Federal contribution for aid to dependent children be increased from one-third to one-half.

"The dependent children situation in New Hampshire is very serious at the present time. The State has never appropriated sufficient money with which to meet the needs of applications made in behalf of dependent children and as a result this department has had established for some time a waiting list of eligible applicants to whom grants could not be made because of a lack of funds."

William J. Ellis, commissioner, department institutions and agencies, New Jersey:

"At the meeting of the American Public Welfare Association in December it was the general consensus of the groups that the Federal contribution for aid to dependent children should be increased and put on the same basis as aid to the blind and aid to the aged; that is, on a 50-50 matching basis. I would strongly recommend this."

Fay Guthrie, director, department of public welfare, New Mexico:

"In my opinion, Congress should increase Federal contribution for aid to dependent children from one-third to one-half and place it on the same basis as Federal participation in old-age assistance and aid to needy blind.

"It is very difficult to obtain State appropriations for aid to dependent children inasmuch as there are few in this group who vote and the pressure comes from the old-age assistance group which has a strong, organized program in this State."

Mrs. W. T. Bost, commissioner, State board of charities and public welfare, North Carolina:

"We expressed keen interest in the proposal to increase Federal contributions for aid to dependent children from one-third to one-half."

E. A. Willson, executive director, public welfare board, North Dakota:

"Under the present act, with the Federal Government contributing only one-third, there is tendency to neglect the dependent children and favor the aged and the blind, for whom the Federal Government provides one-half of the payments."

Fred Spear, director of public welfare, Oklahoma:

"We are in full sympathy with the proposal now pending in Congress that the Social Security Board increase the Federal contribution for aid to dependent children from one-third to one-half."

Elmer R. Goudy, administrator, State relief committee, Oregon:

"We feel that the increase of the grants in aid to the States for aid to dependent children to one-half, both of grants and administration, is very important at this time. The financial burden for social-security programs and relief has become so heavy on the counties and the State that at the present time we have discontinued accepting new cases on aid to dependent children in approximately one-half the counties of the State, representing approximately 75 percent of the case load of the State, which includes the city of Portland."

Howard L. Russell, secretary, department of public assistance, Pennsylvania:

"I concur heartily in this proposal. Its adoption at this session of Congress would be of definite help to States like Pennsylvania, which, despite a critical problem of financing, is striving to maintain necessary assistance services without cutting standards."

Mortimer W. Newton, chief division of social security, Rhode Island:

"I heartily approve of the proposal of the Social Security Board to increase the Federal contribution for aid to dependent children from one-third to one-half."

Thomas H. Daniel, State director, department of public welfare, South Carolina:

"In my opinion, the program of aid to dependent children should at least be on an equal footing with that of aid to the needy aged and aid to the needy blind, insofar as Federal contribution is concerned."

Paul Savage, commissioner, department of public welfare, Tennessee:

Mr. Savage states that the Tennessee Legislature passed a resolution urging enactment of "Senate bill No. 3759 or a bill of similar nature providing for division of costs at a one-half and one-half ratio between Federal and State Governments in carrying aid to dependent children under the United States Social Security Act."

W. A. Little, director, old-age assistance commission, Texas:

"The A. D. C. group is the least adequately financed. Actually, the amount of money usually available for an individual case results in slow starvation. In comparison with the amount possible for old-age assistance, for example, in Louisiana, an A. D. C. family consisting of a mother and two children is limited to a grant of $30, whereas a single O. A. A. recipient may receive $30. The mother is barred from W. P. A. and her chances for supplementing the grant by private employment, in order to allow her presence in the home sufficient for supervision and care of the children, are slight."

J. W. Gillman, director, State department of public welfare, Utah:

"We would be favorable to such a program, as it is difficult for the State and counties of Utah to finance the two-thirds to adequately care for dependent children."

W. Arthur Simpson, director, old-age assistance department, Vermont:

"I believe that the State of Vermont will look with a great deal of favor on increasing the Federal contribution for aid to dependent children from one-third to one-half. There is no reason whatsoever why this contribution should not be on the same basis as the other public assistance programs."

William H. Stauffer, commissioner, department of public welfare, Virginia:

"It would be extremely helpful to States like Virginia, whose economic resources are not large, to have the Federal Government contribute more adequately for the support of so important program as aid to dependent children."

A. W. Garnett, director, State department of public assistance, West Virginia:

"I am heartily in accord with the proposal of the Social Security Board to increase Federal contribution to aid to dependent children from one-third to one-half. Much might be said with respect to the inconsistency between this and other categories under present law, all of which should be obvious; but beyond the strong case that could be made for equal, if not preferential, treatment of children, I am impressed with the fact that the States are in need of this subsidy in many instances in order to finance more adequately this very important category."

George M. Keith, supervisor of pensions, State pension department, Wisconsin:

"We can take but one view, which is to give complete support to this proposal. Relatively the aid to dependent children program in this State has suffered by virtue of a lower Federal contribution than is received for old-age assistance or aid to the blind, although the State itself has made a somewhat more liberal contribution than for either of the other two aids."

S. S. Hoover, director, department of public welfare, Wyoming:

"We feel that the Federal contribution should be increased from one-third to one-half, placing aid for dependent children in the same status as that now contributed by the Federal Government for old-age assistance and aid to the blind."

William B. Kirk, director, department of public welfare, Alaska:

"Although Alaska does not have an aid to dependent children program, legislation has been proposed before the territorial legislature, now in session, which would enable the Territory to cooperate with the Federal Government in an aid to dependent children program. There is no doubt that if the Federal contribution of such a program were increased from one-third to one-half, it would undoubtedly be more attractive to Alaska."

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 246) making a further additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, coming as I do from the most populous State in the Union, where the need for the appropriation is the greatest, and where the suffering and the grief resulting from its impairment will be largest, I am prompted to take the floor at this time and to beg the indulgence of the Senate in order that I may plead the cause of my people.

I shall not base my arguments entirely upon sentiment or upon the devastation to the morale of our unemployed which might result from an ill-advised effort or upon the overburdening of communities which would result from failure on our part to adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida. I base my argument and I take my stand in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida on the ground of public welfare, to insure national prosperity, to aid in the effectuation of a balanced economy, and to make possible a continuous increase and an expansion of our national wealth. I fear that the mistake we shall make if we adopt the committee report will lend encouragement to other efforts of this character, will augment the drive for a mistaken economy, and will once again result in disastrous deflation.

I have sat here in silence for the greater part of this session, voting affirmatively for billions for war preparation and for millions for the care of our domestic animal life; but I plead with you today for the unemployed Americans who, unless we adequately appropriate for their well-being, will be hungry in the days that are to come.

I have not changed my attitude. My position today is consistent with my vote when this question was before the Senate heretofore. I see no reason why I should agree to any prearranged plan or subscribe to any preconceived idea based upon the reduction of an appropriation that was as necessary when it came before the Senate previously as it is today.

I do not like to take issue with the Appropriations Committee. I admire and respect the splendid attainments of the genial chairman of the subcommittee which gave to this question unlimited time. But if the members of the subcommittee were wrong when they recommended to the Senate, as they did on a former occasion, that we deny the President $150,000,000 for this purpose, then I say to you they are wrong today when they tell us it is all right, quite correct, and entirely proper for us to give the President $100,000,000 additional, but deny him the $50,000,000 that is required.

If the $825,000,000 was right in the first instance, it is, by the record, by the admission, and by the liberality of the committee, quite correct today. Nothing has happened, no great emergency has arisen, which would make the logic of the committee today in order. Contrast, if you will, their present effort with their arguments on the floor of the Senate when they pleaded with us some time ago to deny the President and the W. P. A. the $150,000,000 requested at that time.

So, I say to you, Mr. President, that if the President was right then, he is right now. If you denied him $150,000,000 then, you ought to deny him $150,000,000 now. Either do that or give him now, without quibbling, this $150,000,000. Fifty million dollars is, I agree, a large sum of money; but when we consider $50,000,000 in connection with a program that entails the expenditure of $875,000,000, when we consider the argument, the logic, the attitude, and the changed position taken by the committee, I cannot see that it is worth our while to take up today, and perhaps tomorrow, in quibbling over this appropriation to meet human needs in the United States.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMATHERS. Does the Senator from New York believe that if the contention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] were correct—namely, that $100,000,000 is sufficient to carry the relief load—the Works Progress Administration would now be engaged in laying off 700,000 persons?

Mr. MEAD. I appreciate the contribution made by the Senator from New Jersey. I reiterate what I said a moment ago, that the need is as apparent today as it was when the President made his initial request to the Congress. In fact, if there has been any change at all, the change has been for the worse. The situation is even more serious, the demand today is more apparent, than it was at that time; and it is all due to the fact, as the Senator well said, that lay-offs have already taken place, and other lay-offs are imminent.

I have here a telegram from the mayor of the greatest city in America, the largest city on earth. I desire to say to you, my friends, those of you who come from the wide-open spaces, that in the great teeming center of New York agriculture that might temporarily sustain life is almost impossible. Nothing that will keep the family larder filled can be raised on the sidewalks of New York. When the great plants and factories of that city close down, and when we add to the economic chaos that follows by reducing the personnel on W. P. A., they either must, of necessity, report to the already overburdened local relief agencies or go hungry.

I say to you it is unfair, unwise, and unsportsmanlike, at this time, for the Federal Government to shift a great degree of the burden on the already overloaded and overburdened local relief agencies. We are not assuming our full share when we consider their financial conditions and the recorded number of the persons already on their relief rolls.

But let me read the telegram from the mayor who understands the need for this appropriation, from the mayor who knows, as does the mayor of every other city in the United States, that we are making a serious mistake in shifting the burden of relief from the Federal Treasury to the local municipalities. This telegram is addressed to me, and similar telegrams have been addressed to other Members of both Houses of Congress from the State of New York:

While I know the entire New York delegation understands conditions and will vote for additional W. P. A. appropriation, I am most anxious about the situation, and urge you to do all you can to obtain support for this needed appropriation. I have just been officially advised that unless appropriation is approved, 25,000 will be dropped—

And he speaks about those who will be dropped in the city of New York—on April 3, and an additional 40,000 will be dropped before June 30. Needless to say, the city is in no position to carry this additional load. The situation is most critical.

F. H. LAGUARDIA,
Mayor of the City of New York.

Mr. President, telegrams similar to this one, with all of the logic and the seriousness which it contains, might well come from all the mayors in the United States. I want to say to you that it is a wrong thing to do—it is a serious mistake to make—to begin to shift the burden, to reduce the number employed, to make the municipalities of America take up and carry the almost impossible burden which will of necessity be theirs if we impair this appropriation.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I wonder just what the load will be in the city of New York. Within a radius of 25 miles of that city there are approximately 10,000,000 persons. As the Senator stated, it is impossible to grow anything on the sidewalks of New York. Carrots cannot be grown on the sidewalks, or cabbages on the pavement. The people there who are without employment or savings will have to starve. Has the Senator some facts or figures showing approximately what will happen in New York, or Chicago, or Philadelphia? I am concerned with the population center of the Twin Cities in our North Star State, where we have a million persons within a radius of 25 miles.

Mr. MEAD. It would be almost impossible for me to give to the Senator accurate figures as to the human misery that will follow the reduction contemplated in the report of the subcommittee; but I will say to the Senator that the psychology of it, added to the direct loss that will result from it, will cause untold human misery. It will result in a tremendous burden upon our local governments, and it will perhaps—who knows?—begin a spiral of deflation that will bring us to the ruin that we witnessed in the dark, dreary days of 1932 and 1933.

Yes, we know that deficit spending has its friends and its foes; we know that there are men who believe that every dollar appropriated in this connection is a dollar poorly invested; but let us remember that there are some virtues in this spending program. In addition to the wonderful program of public works—self-liquidating in some instances, wealth producing in others—that has already been completed throughout the length and breadth of America by the Works Progress Administration, enriching every section, nook, and cranny of the Republic, spending under the efficient management of government has enriched the Nation. It has effected an economically sound redistrbution of the Nation's wealth. It has reduced local taxation. It has strengthened the morale of the people. It has relieved the States as well as the local governments. It has saved many cities in America from bankruptcy. It has fortified America in her fight for the maintenance of the ideals of democracy. While other nations have forfeited their political, social, and religious liberties for the so-called economic security which comes from absolutism, America, as a result of her spending program, because of the efficiency of her work-making agencies, has laid down a code and an order that will enable us to survive this chaotic era and to emerge from it with a permanent structure of government that will insure not only the freedom we now enjoy but a democratic order that will live, and an economic security that will give to every man the right to earn his living by the sweat of his brow.

There is witnessed on the floor of the Senate the clash of two distinct schools of thought. There is the opposition of serious-minded, patriotic men who believe down in the depths of their hearts that this program is in error, a colossal mistake, and that if continued it will destroy the Government, which has been in the building for a century and a half.

The other school of thought, subscribing to the philosophy enunciated by the President of the United States, recognizing the complexities of this modern machine age in which we live, firmly believe, and with all the patriotism and the ardor which emanated from the hearts of the founders of the Republic, that a false economic philosophy was responsible for the devastation to our national economy, and that if reinstituted it would again bring America to the precipice of ruin. They believe that in the complex age in which we live a balance must be effected between the power of the Government and private enterprise; between the power of its efficient population to produce and the capacity of the people to consume that which they are able to produce.

There are some who believe that we live in the world of our fathers; that the philosophy which guided them and the experience of another age should be the milepost by which we are guided today.

I am one, however, who believes that we are living in a new world, who recognizes the fact that our frontiers have long been exhausted, and that our people have been herded into great teeming centers of population by the ever-growing giant corporations of the modern day.

Mr. President, I recognize the fact that from year to year, in recent times, agriculture's share in the national income has been progressively diminishing. I am one who recognizes the fact that men no longer can earn their living on the land with security, or in trade or in commerce, because of this modern-day giant which we see everywhere in the making.

I can see my fellow American standing there in the midst of the populous industrial city of America. He is a tragic and pitiable figure. He must vie with the giant Frankenstein which has made him the object of relief, which has made it necessary for him to look to his Government for succor and for aid. I say that if we contrast that man with the rugged individualist who helped to make America in the pioneering days of our youth, if we can visualize the difficulties which beset the latter as compared with the former, then we will visualize the new world in which we live, and the dependency which, of necessity, man must have upon his Government.

The crude-tool days of the past are over; the assembly line of today is here to stay. Mass production will never yield to the individual efforts of the mechanics of yesteryear.

In those days our people saved, hoarded their wealth, in order that they might survive in times of pestilence and famine and when old age overtook them. Today, if the individuals, as well as the Nation, will devote all their energy to saving and to hoarding, of necessity the giant machines will be forced to shut down, and the impoverishment of 1929 and 1930 will come to visit us again. So a new psychology has gripped the world; a new theory of government has been instituted; a new outlook has been adopted by the economists of our age.

The phenomenon asserts itself wherever we go, because for the first time in the history of our country, for the first time in the history of the industrial world, we see people in want, in dire hunger, even suffering the pangs of starvation, in this modern world of abundant surplusage.

When, in the course of time, the enigma of today shall be solved and economic security shall once again be attained, when we shall no longer be puzzled by a paradox which permits us to produce more of this world's goods than we can use, and wear, and consume, and the fact that millions of our people are without a sufficient amount to keep body and soul together, then they will look back at the statesmanship of our time and perhaps find fault, if not severely criticize, those who would so impair appropriations that they would not meet human needs, when all that our people needed for their comfort and for their use was at hand and available.

I say, that this afternoon in the Senate Chamber, with all the brilliant attainments they each possess, these two schools of thought clash. One believes in economy in government, a reduction of the expenses of the Federal set-up, a diminution of the appropriation for work relief, as well as the elimination of the so-called excessive agencies of government.

The other believes in spending for worthwhile projects, in pensions and retirement for our people, in the extension and in the expansion of the agencies of government in order that economic security might be attained by every American.

Let me say, Mr. President, and Members of the Senate, that these two schools of thought have been clashing violently in every government on earth. Since the turn of the century, with the coming of the efficiency machines, there has resulted one surplus after another, and some, believing firmly in the experiences of the ages gone before, have tried to right the wrongs which beset the human family by methods based upon past experiences. Others have attempted, with the pioneering spirit which permeates the true progressive, to find new means and new approaches, to adopt a new concept of society and government, in order that we might meet and solve this modern-day enigma.

Since the termination of the World War, industrial nations in Europe, in an attempt to solve this vexing problem, have shifted violently from the right to the left. In their attempt to give to their people a semblance of economic security they tried conservatism, liberalism, socialism, communism, collectivism, nazi-ism, and fascism, and we have witnessed 30 radical and violent changes in the systems of government of the Old World, all because of the force of economic necessity, and the failure of the people and the governments to adapt themselves to the changes necessary to solve this perplexing problem.

Mr. President, in the United States we tried both schools of thought. We gave leadership to those who believed in economy, in saving, in a reduction in Federal authority, in a limitation upon the National Government. We gave leadership to those who believed that we should let business alone, to those who believed that we should leave relief to the States, to those who believed that primarily, no matter what the need might be, we should balance the Nation's Budget.

We gave opportunity to those who believed that we should encourage investment, that we should lend encouragement to business so that business might expand and prosper. We tried that school of thought, gave it every opportunity, subscribed to its leadership, and found ourselves in 1932 on the very precipice of ruin. In the dark, bleak winter of 1932 there was apprehension visible on the countenances of our people, and actual fear and desperation gripped their hearts.

In 1933 a new administration came into authority, an administration believing in great measure in the philosophy of its predecessor, an administration instructed by its national convention to reduce Federal expenditures by an additional 25 percent.

The new administration, recognizing its obligation, insisting upon the right to keep faith with the American people, initiated a general effort to reduce Federal expenditures.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Burke	Ellender	Hill
Andrews	Byrd	Frazier	Holman
Ashurst	Byrnes	George	Holt
Austin	Capper	Gerry	Johnson, Calif.
Bankhead	Caraway	Gillette	Johnson, Colo.

Minton	Reed	Stewart	White
Murray	Reynolds	Taft	Wiley
Neely	Russell	Thomas, Okla.
Norris	Schwartz	Thomas, Utah

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, before the calling of the roll I was developing the idea that there are two schools of thought, both patriotically and seriously subscribing to their own theories. I was attempting to point out to the Senate that both schools of thought had been given an opportunity under exactly comparable conditions to prove the efficacy of their theories; but I did not have opportunity to develop completely the idea that was in my mind.

Mr. President, I previously pointed out that under the administration of President Hoover those who believed in economy and in restriction of the Federal authority, those who believed in balancing the Budget under the trying conditions then existing, and those who would lend every degree of encouragement to enterprise for investment and plant expansion enjoyed to the very fullest degree the opportunity of proving the value and the worth of their theory.

I was pointing out that the present President of the United States when he assumed the office he now holds, in keeping with the mandate of the Chicago national convention and with a determination characteristic of the man, set out to reduce Government expenditures by 25 percent. But, Mr. President, the impaired buying power, the further reduction in the capacity of the people to consume, the increase in unemployment that resulted, and the stagnation in business and in enterprise that took place changed the attitude of the administration and impelled the leadership in the House and in the Senate to follow an entirely different course.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to ask a question?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has correctly stated, of course, that President Roosevelt upon his initial inauguration proceeded upon a vigorous, courageous program of retrenchment and economy. Am I mistaken in my understanding that under that program for the first 120 days of his administration this country enjoyed the largest measure of economic recovery, as measured by all the governmental indexes, ever known in a like period of time in civilized history? Am I wrong about that?

Mr. MEAD. The Senator is not entirely correct; and if he will permit me, I will point out wherein he is not correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I not be permitted to pay this tribute to President Roosevelt's first 120 days?

Mr. MEAD. If the Senator will continue to pay tribute to the President, he may have the remainder of the day to do so.

But, Mr. President, the confidence that was restored to the American people, the courage with which they were imbued upon the inauguration of President Roosevelt, the rallying to his leadership that followed, the action of the new administration in providing the bank holiday, and the memorable 100 days' session of the Congress, filled as it was with hope and promise, surely resulted in the advent of more comfortable, hopeful, and stable conditions.

All the graphs and charts that show the number of people employed and unemployed, all the figures and statistics available indicate that, while confidence and courage were restored, while the deflation that was so devastating was stopped in its tracks, there was no substantial increase in the buying power of the country. Then it was that the President of the United States and the administration inaugurated the N. R. A., and the philosophy of the N. R. A. is the philosophy of the new school of thought. The concept of the National Recovery Administration was higher wages so as to increase the buying power of the American people and shorter hours so as to create a greater diffusion of work opportunity. It was when the N. R. A. was established and that concept of our new economic order initiated that the buying power of our people was intensified and job opportunities increased in the United States.

Mr. President, the inauguration of the Public Works Administration and other and similar agencies, and the payment of the soldiers' bonus, augmented buying power, which caused the national income to be increased from the low of approximately $36,000,000,000 in 1932 to approximately $69,000,000,000 when we started to retrench again in 1937.

What we need in America today is a unified national program, a program for human betterment, a program adapted to existing social conditions, a program that cannot be avoided by any political party, no matter what its theory of Government may be, because it is a program which is brought forward by the force of economic pressure as represented by every impoverished farmer and unemployed worker in America, an economic force that cannot be downed, and will assert itself in one form or another no matter what political party may govern this country, and no matter what the economic theories of individual Senators may be.

Mr. President, as I stated a moment ago, we experienced the results and the consequences of the wave of unwise economy which swept the Government in the closing days of the Hoover administration. We experienced the failure of the economy cuts which characterized the beginning of the Roosevelt administration. That experience is reinforced by the experience of the past quarter of a century. It indicates the need of buying power. It heralds the need of intensifying the power of the Republic to consume.

We have had no sustained prosperity in America since 1910 unless it was the direct result of augmented buying power supported by this or some foreign government. Unnatural or unusual conditions, if you will, have brought prosperity to America and pointed out the appropriateness and the logic of the spending program of the present administration.

We entered the World War in what might be termed difficult economic times. The increased buying power of both neutral and belligerent nations augmented our economy, with the result that we enjoyed prosperity as the result of the European war. Upon our entry into the World War in 1917, the augmented buying power resulting from that colossal spending program which dwarfs the small appropriation we have before us today, brought prosperity to America. It increased the number of millionaires; it greatly increased the revenue; it made America again a prosperous Nation.

With the termination of hostilities and the return to normal economic conditions, the lack of buying power again quickly asserted itself; and America, economically speaking, was once again in the doldrums. Then came the launching of a huge lending campaign, in which we poured out our money by the billions to the nations of Europe—money which was used to build roads, tenements, and houses in other countries. With the launching and continuation of that program, America again enjoyed prosperity. From 1923 until 1927 that spending program made us rich.

Along about 1926 and 1927 the lending period was terminated, and for a year or two our economy was buoyed up by the orgy of speculation which caused our people to pay idolatrous tribute to the false god of gold, as many of them invested their savings and their earnings in the security markets of the land. The farmers of America were unable to obtain the cost of production for their crops. The workers of America were being laid off as the result of a lack of purchasing power and the termination of the loan period.

We all know what happened. In October 1929, without a spending program, when the investment orgy had spent itself, America was plunged deeply into a depression which almost resulted in complete economic collapse. Senators know better than I can explain the fear which gripped the hearts of our people in 1932–33, the apprehension visible everywhere on their countenances, all because of a lack of buying power attributable to an impoverished capacity to consume, brought on by a futile wave of economy which was being tried out to save our economic structure.

Under that system of economy our income-tax payments were reduced from $3,000,000,000 to $1,000,000,000. Relief costs were increased at least $2 for every dollar saved. We unbalanced the National Budget, checked industry, and bankrupted agriculture. The example was bad. The experiences which we endured in the past should today put fear in the hearts of our statesmen when they contemplate inaugurating another wave of economy while the economic situation remains unsolved. Such procedure will only aggravate the disease; it will only intensify our difficulties; it will only add to Government expenditures; it will only make matters worse.

Mr. President, for 6 years we have enjoyed a steady upturn in business. We have witnessed our annual wealth production increase from approximately $35,000,000,000 in the economy-stricken year of 1932 to what amounted to approximately $69,000,000,000 in 1937. We cannot turn back. We cannot leave the impression upon the country that at this time, in this day, we are to forsake the American farmers and reduce the relief appropriations which we have made during the past 6 years of our steady and constant rise. We cannot send forth the message that we are going to set an example which, no doubt, will be followed throughout the land, by economizing, reducing the number of men gainfully employed, and further diminishing the buying power and the capacity of our people to consume. We should not make that mistake.

If the President was right when he asked for $875,000,000 as our share in aiding the unemployed; if he was right when we denied him that amount by $150,000,000; and then in the course of but a few weeks we change our minds and decide that he was right in asking for at least $825,000,000, then I believe we ought to change our minds again and act more consistently and say, "Mr. President, you were right then; you are right now; and we are going to be right with you now."

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. It is proposed that the money shall be used, in part at least, to further public works, is it not?

Mr. MEAD. That is quite correct.

Mr. LUNDEEN. It is proposed to build into the national economy something which will remain after the money has been expended for the benefit of the people. What objection can there be to that?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I can really see no sound objection to a program of government which will enhance the assets of the Nation, which will more equitably distribute the wealth of the Nation, which will enable the municipalities to reduce their local taxation and better meet their increasing relief burden, which will enrich the Government by the completion of wealth-producing, self-liquidating, asset-building projects, which will keep America at work, which will keep the morale of our people at a high level. In my judgment, an investment in America, with America's wealth, is a worth-while investment. We have made other investments filled with sentiment for human needs—we fed the starving Belgians and the hungry Armenians—and we promised that under no circumstances would we let an American go hungry——

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. If the $50,000,000 were proposed to be turned over to Armenians, to Belgians, refugees, and foreigners, I doubt whether there would be any debate upon the matter. However, when we propose to give it to Americans, there is a long-drawn-out debate. I cannot understand that attitude of mind.

I should like to say further to the Senator that here and there there may be some unworthy persons on the rolls. Of course, such persons will get on the rolls; but why punish the vast majority of innocent persons who are on the rolls because occasionally some unworthy person gets on the rolls?

Mr. MEAD. The Senator is quite correct. If there were an appropriation here for some worthy cause in a distant land, as the Senator well explains, I can visualize the sympathetic consideration it would receive. I know that in the past, as the RECORD will indicate, such requests have been treated with a high degree of generosity. If you could walk with me up and down the teeming centers of our industrial cities; if you could see the poor people who are hungry and in need of help who would bare their breasts for America at a moment's notice in defense of our democracy, I am sure you would rise up in your dignity and power and vote for the entire appropriation requested by the President of the United States. In my judgment, before this fiscal year is over, if not before this debate has concluded, every Senator with a due regard for his constituents and the dignity of American manhood will, when the vote is taken, vote "yea" in favor of an adequate appropriation to meet needs here in our own Republic.

RECIPROCAL TAXATION OF FEDERAL AND STATE OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield so that I may submit a conference report? If it provokes any discussion, which I am sure will not be the case, I shall not press it.

Mr. MEAD. I shall be very glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I submit the conference report on the reciprocal taxation bill. It is a complete report. There are no changes in the report from the action of the Senate, except clarifications of some of the Senate amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The legislative clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3790) relating to the taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 8.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 10, and 13, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment and on page 5, after line 21, of the House bill insert the following:

"SEC. 210. For the purposes of this Act, the term 'officer or employee' includes a member of the legislative body and a judge or officer of a court."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 207. No collection of any tax (including interest, additions to tax, and penalties) imposed by any State, Territory, possession, or local taxing authority on the compensation, received before January 1, 1939, for personal service as an officer or employee of the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof which is exempt from Federal income taxation and, if a corporate agency or instrumentality, is one (a) a majority of the stock of which is owned by or on behalf of the United States, or (b) the power to appoint or select a majority of the Board of directors of which is exercisable by or on behalf of the United States, shall be made after the date of the enactment of this Act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 208. This title shall not apply with respect to any officer or employee of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, after the Secretary of the Treasury has determined and proclaimed that it is the policy of such State to collect from any individual any tax, interest, additions to tax, or penalties, on account of compensation received by such individual prior to January 1, 1939, for personal service as an officer or employee of the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof. In making such determination the Secretary of the Treasury shall disregard the taxation of officers and employees of any corporate agency or instrumentality which is not exempt from Federal income taxation, or which if so exempt is one (a) a majority of the stock of which is not owned by or on behalf of the United States and (b) the power to appoint or select a majority of the board of directors of which is not exercisable by or on behalf of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "211"; and the Senate agree to the same.

PAT HARRISON,
TOM CONNALLY,
PRENTISS M. BROWN,
ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

R. L. DOUGHTON,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HARRISON. I move the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

SPECIAL STATISTICAL STUDIES BY DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield for action on a routine bill?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2021, Calendar No. 265.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope the leader on the Democratic side will move an adjournment or a recess after these matters are disposed of, so that the Senator from New York may conclude his address tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is what I am about to do.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask that the request of the Senator from Utah for the consideration of a bill be accompanied by an agreement that it shall not displace the pending business, and that the consideration of the pending business shall be resumed upon the conclusion of the consideration of the measure to which the Senator refers.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, if this were not a purely routine matter, I should not have made the request at this time. I am sure the consideration of the pending joint resolution will not be interfered with at all.

Mr. ADAMS. That should be part of the agreement.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I wish to make it part of the agreement, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2021) to authorize the Department of Labor to continue to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the authorization contained in the act entitled "An act to authorize the Department of Labor to make special statistical studies upon the payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes," approved April 13, 1934 (48 Stat. 582), as amended, is hereby extended without limitation as to time.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 246) making a further additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, it is my understanding that I yield the floor for such business as may be transacted this evening with the understanding that tomorrow, when the pending joint resolution is again under consideration, I shall have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to that understanding?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I understand that the only assurance that can be given in such a case is that the present occupant of the chair will give it. I do not want to preclude the discretion of the Presiding Officer tomorrow, the Vice President. I think it is customary for the occupant of the chair to say that if he is in the chair, that will be the order. I have no objection to the Senator from New York having the floor tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair will have no control over the Vice President.

Mr. NORRIS. If a unanimous-consent agreement is entered into that the Senator from New York shall not lose the floor by these incidental interruptions, no matter who is in the chair he will enforce the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not wish to object. I think the Senator from New York is entitled to have the floor tomorrow; but I think it is a bad precedent for us tonight to make a unanimous-consent agreement that tomorrow, no matter what urgent business may be before the Senate, the Senator from New York may claim the floor, and probably occupy it for 3 or 4 hours. I do not think he would do so; but if it is noted in the RECORD that the Senator from New York has the floor at this time, and he gives notice that he expects to claim it tomorrow, anyone who occupies the chair tomorrow will recognize the Senator from New York, barring some unforeseen and important matter. I think it is a bad precedent to establish, however, to agree by unanimous consent to tie our hands as to what we shall do tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair will say to the Senator from Texas that while the present occupant is not thoroughly familiar with the parliamentary procedure, it is his opinion that the Senate today cannot bind the prerogatives of the one occupying the chair tomorrow, and that the sole right of recognition lies within the breast of the one occupying the chair tomorrow. That is the opinion of the present occupant of the chair. The opinion of the Vice President, who will be in the chair tomorrow, may be different.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the point I am making, and that is the practice to which I think we should adhere.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is almost the universal practice that when a Senator has not concluded his remarks on any day, the Chair on the following day will recognize him to conclude his remarks. I do not think it is necessary to obtain unanimous consent today that the Chair tomorrow will recognize the Senator from New York, because I am satisfied that the Chair will do so anyway.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair will state to the Senator from Kentucky that he thinks the Senator probably is correct in the statement that that is the practice; but the occupant of the chair still maintains that the Chair has the right to recognize any Senator he desires to recognize.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no doubt about that. The Chair could ignore the Senator from New York if he were so disposed, because the fact that the Senator from New York has not concluded his remarks today does not automatically give him a right to the floor tomorrow; but we proceed here in this way day by day and year by year, and there never is any trouble about it. I suggest to the Senator from New York that he will not have any trouble in obtaining the floor tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupant of the chair will say to the Senator from Kentucky that the occupant of the chair did not cause any trouble about the matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in order that if the proposed procedure is followed it may not come home to plague us in the future, I suggest that the Senate, by unanimous-consent order, give the Senator from New York the floor at any time it desires; and if the unanimous-consent agreement that is suggested should be entered into, the Senator from New York would be entitled to the floor tomorrow regardless of what any Presiding Officer might think, because the Senate itself, and not the Presiding Officer, would have made the order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to have the Senator from Nebraska discuss that parliamentary point tomorrow at noon with the Vice President.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I appreciate the efforts of the Senators in my behalf. I am perfectly willing to accept the suggestion of the majority leader and let precedent and custom guide me in my efforts to obtain the floor tomorrow. I shall not ask unanimous consent, as suggested, but I appreciate the efforts put forth in my behalf. I am sure I shall find opportunity to complete my argument.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is in the same position as is the Senator from New York. He desires to be guided by precedent and custom.

Mr. MEAD. I thank the Chair.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will yield for that purpose, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of Frederick I. Thompson, of Alabama, to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission for the unexpired portion of the term of 7 years from July 1, 1934, vice Eugene O. Sykes, which was ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state in their order the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

CUSTOMS SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Florence Clarke Lynch to be appraiser of merchandise in customs collection district No. 10, with headquarters at New York, N. Y.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that nomination was passed over at a former executive session at the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. The Senator from Utah is present at this time. I do not know what his wishes are in the matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that the nomination go over until tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

That concludes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, April 7, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 6, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Saviour and Redeemer, draw aside the veil of grief; rise as the sun from the open sky and drive away the darkness. Over against every fear, every temptation, and every want reveal Thyself with the knowledge of the great God not far away. O Thou who wilt bow the head upon the cross and pass beneath the shadow of pain and dying, pity us as we linger here. May we not mourn as those who have no hope of eternal morning after the close of a fading world. As watchers on the mountain may we wait for the dawn and rejoice in the coming glory of the future. Heavenly Father, when we draw near to our release and emancipation and view the horizon of the spiritland, with joy and ecstasy may we enter in and find sweet employment in the spaces of eternity. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to insert a speech which I delivered on the occasion of Founders Day at Tuskegee last Sunday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY]?

There was no objection.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker—

By all the laws of the Medes and Persians a theater manned and operated by out-of-work actors, designers, and directors should have been the most horrible thing ever seen on land or sea; instead it was one of the finest things that ever happened in the American theater. That will give you an idea of what a cockeyed world we're living in. All the gentlemen of the Federal Theater did—those men and women who weren't good enough for jobs—was wind up and present a series of shows which put all the dapper little boys of Broadway to shame.

The success of the Federal Theater plays might be considered a miracle if it hadn't been apparent for years that there was a wealth of artistic talent in this country buried for lack of opportunity. Those plays of last year, which, I understand, are to be played on the road next season, are not only great plays by some peculiar standard which is constructed to handle special cases but they are great plays by any standard. They make you want to wrap yourself in the folds of Old Glory and go pip! pip! That's how extravagant I feel about them.

When a eulogy of this sort, written by Kyle Crichton, appears in Collier's Weekly, that is news and inspires one to look into this Federal Theater project to see just what it has accomplished. To be sure, it is only a very, very small segment of the gigantic W. P. A. undertaking, but it has many outstanding achievements to its credit.

A few months ago the project's play Prologue to Glory was chosen by Burns Mantle to be published in his annual volume of 10 best plays. Shortly after Random House published two volumes that contained two of the Theater project's plays. Another, One Third of a Nation, has been taken over by the screen. The Chicago Federal Theater earned the joint thanks of the United States Public Health Service and the American Medical Association by producing the first play ever written as a part of the fight to eradicate syphilis—Spirochete.

This play earned a Rockefeller scholarship for the author, Arnold Sundgaard. Shirley Graham, a Chicago project composer, received a similar prize for her score for one of the Federal Theater's plays for children. Two of the Guggenheim fellowships have been awarded Federal Theater workers, one to Arthur Arent project, author of One Third of a Nation, and the other to Mordecai Gorelik, who returned from his year's study in Europe to design many sets for commercial productions, including those for Odets' Rocket to the Moon.

So many talented persons have been drawn from Federal Theater ranks that Warner Bros. recently referred to it as "The best proving ground for acting talent." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, and Republic Pictures have recruited hundreds of actors and actresses from Federal projects and, as for the State, 88 out of 94 plays produced on Broadway this season have employed former actors, directors, designers, playwrights, or technicians. It is estimated that some 3,000 skilled theatrical people have been restored to private employment in their professions.

Mr. Crichton's appraisal of the project's plays and this brief summary of its success in restoring its workers to private employment tell two sides of the story. The third and perhaps most important phase of the work done by this Works Progress Administration project is that, in a little more than 3 years, it has brought the stimulation and cheer of the theater into the lives of 40,000,000 Americans, most of whom had long been deprived of this opportunity and would never have been able to see a play performed by actors in the flesh except for the Administration's intervention.

From Seattle to Boston, from Detroit to Miami, the unemployed, the destitute, the underprivileged, the sick, lame, and aged have had the greatest of all entertainment mediums brought to them—free when they could afford to pay no admission, priced at from 5 cents to $1.10 when their limited means would permit.

Another new audience is also being created for the commercial theater. This consists of young people now in public and high schools. In cooperation with boards of education, Federal Theater is presenting the best of the classical plays to this young audience, whetting its appetite for the regular fare of the commercial theater. This source alone should feed the drama for many years to come.

None of these developments were accidental or unexpected. Neither was the opposition which the enterprise aroused among those who habitually oppose anything intended to provide a fuller life for more people. It was inevitable, for example, that certain elements would be angered by One-Third of a Nation, which exposed the miseries and dangers of slum dwellings, and by Power, which dramatized proven facts concerning the cost of electricity to the consumer. Harry L. Hopkins, first Works Progress Administrator, and Hallie Flanagan, National Director of the Federal Theater project, anticipated the antagonism that these plays would arouse. But they were convinced that any theater worth its sale must also have as one of its ingredients a little dynamite. They planned accordingly and met all biased opposition with dignified silence, letting the program speak for itself.

And it is an elcquent language that the program speaks; less than 2 percent of its 926 produced plays have been concerned with modern social problems. Most widely represented among authors has been Shakespeare. Others include Ibsen, Marlowe, Moliere, Shaw, O'Neill, Euripides, Aristophanes, Sheridan, Mark Twain, Lewis Carroll, Pirandello, Schiller, Chekhov, Hauptmann, Capek, Oliver Goldsmith, Lord Dunsany, and a score of others known and revered wherever the drama has penetrated, not to mention a dozen or more plays written by contemporary playwrights.

Born of economic necessity, the Federal Theater project has exerted a profound influence on the American theater as a whole, has already rehabilitated approximately 20 percent of its enrollment, has relieved and brightened the drab existence of that "one-third of the Nation" referred to by President Roosevelt in his second inaugural address, and has, furthermore, completely vindicated the administration's contention that the skills of theater artists and workers are as worthy of conservation as those of carpenters, painters, lawyers, physicians, and bricklayers. It has kept some 7,800 people employed when they could find no other employment, demonstratably nourished the commercial theater, and rescued the American drama from the slow death it faced in 1935 when Works Progress came upon the American scene.

SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce assigned to consider the bill H. R. 5220 may be permitted to sit this afternoon while the House is in session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial by the Honorable Felix Hinkle, editor of the Canton Economist.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SECCOMBE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a newspaper article and statement by the Honorable W. Arthur Simpson, director of old-age assistance for the State of Vermont.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio speech by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article on neutrality by former President Herbert Hoover.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to show the Members where we can get the money. According to a statement which I have in my hand showing comparative analysis of receipts and expenditures, the United States Government has received in principal on foreign obligations the sum of $73,754.75. The same statement shows that the United States Government has received in interest on foreign obligations the sum of $256,176.91 for this year to date. A measly paltry sum on our foreign debt.

Mr. Speaker, various foreign governments now owe the United States over $12,000,000,000, the interest on which amounts to at least $250,000,000 a year. These foreign countries, including Russia, Germany, Italy, Great Britain, and France, are at the present time spending hundreds of millions of dollars for war preparations.

This country should demand of these foreign governments that they pay their obligations to America, and pay them promptly. The following nations owe the United States of America about the following amounts:

Hungary	$2,000,000
Italy	2,000,000,000
Latvia	7,000,000
Poland	215,000,000
Rumania	64,000,000
Yugoslavia	61,600,000
Belgium	406,000,000
Czechoslovakia	165,500,000
France	3,921,500,000
Great Britain	4,500,000,000
Greece	20,200,000

Why should they expect any more aid and assistance from America? Let them pay their obligations to us. That is one place we can get the money. Let the administration notify them at once if they do not pay we do not help.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MILLS of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a list of the P. W. A. projects in my congressional district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MILLS]?

There was no objection.

IMPORTATION OF DISTILLED SPIRITS FOR CONSUMPTION AND CERTAIN ARTICLES FOR EXHIBITION AT THE NEW YORK WORLD'S FAIR, 1939, AND THE GOLDEN GATE INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION OF 1939

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5287) relating to the importation of distilled spirits for consumption at the New York World's Fair, 1939, and the Golden Gate International Exposition of 1939, and to duties on certain articles to be exhibited at the New York World's Fair, 1939.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York explain the effect of this bill?

Mr. CULLEN. I shall be pleased to do so. I shall take only a few minutes, because I do not believe there is any real opposition to the bill.

This is the customary bill dealing with articles used or exhibited at various expositions we have had in this country. This bill deals specifically with the San Francisco Exposition and with the New York World's Fair. There has been some objection to the bill from some of the hotel men's organizations throughout the States, but that has been withdrawn, and they are satisfied that the bill is all right and should be passed. I hold in my hand a letter from the American Hotel Association withdrawing its objection to the bill; and if the gentleman wishes me to read it, I shall do so.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I understand the bill properly takes care of any import or excise taxes?

Mr. CULLEN. Absolutely. The bill safeguards the Government in that respect in every particular.

The reason I am asking that the House consider the bill at this time is that the world's fair opens on the 30th of April, and the San Francisco Fair is now going on.

Mr. FISH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, did not this bill have the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. CULLEN. Yes; absolutely.

Mr. FISH. And everybody connected with the fair believes it is needed immediately?

Mr. CULLEN. That is right.

Mr. FISH. I hope the bill will go through without any opposition on this side.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is there any expense in connection with this bill similar to what we had here a few days ago in the bill requesting an appropriation of a couple of million dollars?

Mr. CULLEN. Not a dollar of expense is incurred under this bill.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman will recall that last year when we had the World's Fair bill under consideration it was stated that we would not be asked for any additional funds.

Mr. CULLEN. That is an entirely different bill.

Mr. RICH. We will be watching for new bills along that line.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, in order to ask a question, has the gentleman taken care of all the amendments that were brought up in the committee, especially the ones that related to the California situation? Has not that matter been satisfactorily arranged and adjusted?

Mr. CULLEN. The matter has been satisfactorily arranged and adjusted, and the amendments are incorporated in the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the Members of the House, I may say I have received the following letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 31, 1939.

Hon. THOMAS H. CULLEN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CULLEN: Reference is made to your request of March 30, 1939, orally transmitted by Mr. Milton Cooper, clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means, for the comments of this Department on H. R. 5287, a bill "relating to the importation of distilled spirits for consumption at the New York World's Fair, 1939, and the Golden Gate International Exposition of 1939, and to duties on certain articles to be exhibited at the New York World's Fair, 1939." You have particularly requested to be informed as to whether, under the provisions of the bill dealing with importations of alcoholic beverages for on-premises consumption in the national pavilion restaurants of foreign governments at the two world's fairs, such beverages would be subject to the customs duties and internal-revenue taxes applicable generally to imported alcoholic beverages.

This bill is a revision of H. R. 3693, Seventy-sixth Congress, on which the Department reported to Chairman DOUGHTON under date of March 4, 1939. The present bill incorporates all the amendments suggested by the Department in its report on the previous bill. In addition, H. R. 5287 contains a new section 3, section 3 in the previous bill having become section 4. The new section 3 merely makes applicable to the Golden Gate International Exposition of 1939 the same privileges accorded by section 2 to the New York World's Fair, 1939.

While section 1 of H. R. 5287 provides for certain exemptions from the requirements of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, as amended, and certain regulations in the case of alcoholic beverages imported under stated conditions for consumption in the national pavilion restaurants of foreign governments at the two world's fairs, these exemptions relate to labeling and bottling requirements, and there is nothing in the provisions of this section which would authorize any exemption of such alcoholic beverages from the payment of appropriate customs duties and internal-revenue taxes applicable generally to imported alcoholic beverages. Under the provisions of H. R. 5287, as reported by you from the Committee on Ways and Means, no alcoholic beverages could be released from customs custody for removal to national pavilion restaurants of foreign governments for on-premises consumption as contemplated by the bill, except upon payment of such duties and taxes.

Chairman DOUGHTON was informed in the Department's report of March 4, 1939, that if the changes suggested in that report were made in H. R. 3693, the bill would present no unusual administrative difficulties for the Treasury Department and the Department would interpose no objection to its enactment. Since H. R. 5287 incorporates the changes suggested by the Treasury, the Department has no objection to its enactment.

Very truly yours,

STEPHEN B. GIBBONS,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York for the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, as amended, shall not apply to the importation, for the account of a foreign government, of distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages produced in its own country, for on-premises consumption in the national pavilion restaurant of such foreign government at the New York World's Fair, 1939, or at the Golden Gate International Exposition of 1939; nor shall regulations 13 under the provisions of the joint resolution approved June 18, 1934, entitled "Joint resolution to protect the revenue by regulation of the traffic in containers of distilled spirits" apply to such importation, if such distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages are entered for customs purposes in the name of the duly authorized representative of the national pavilion restaurant of the foreign government responsible for the importation: Provided, That the individual containers of all such distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages shall, prior to release from customs custody, have firmly affixed thereto a label stating the country of origin of such beverages, and bearing a statement to the effect that the same have been imported solely for consumption at the New York World's Fair, 1939, or the Golden Gate International Exposition of 1939, as the case may be: Provided further, That the removal from the premises of any national pavilion restaurant of any distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages imported under the provisions of this act for on-premises consumption in such national pavilion is forbidden otherwise than for destruction or exportation under customs supervision, and in the event any of the distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages so imported are not consumed upon the premises of the national pavilion restaurant and are removed from such premises for consumption or for sale or other commercial purposes in the United States, such distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages so removed shall be seized and forfeited. All distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages removed in violation of this proviso, the containers thereof, and every vehicle or vessel used in the transportation thereof, shall be seized and forfeited. Such seizure and forfeiture, and the disposition of such property subsequent to seizure and forfeiture, or the disposition of the proceeds from the sale of such property, shall be in accordance with existing laws or those hereafter in existence relating to seizures, forfeitures, and dispositions of property or proceeds, for violation of the internal-revenue laws: And provided further, That nothing in this section shall authorize the importation of distilled spirits in containers of larger than 1-gallon capacity.

SEC. 2. The joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the New York World's Fair, 1939, New York City, N. Y., to be admitted without payment of tariff, and for other purposes," approved August 16, 1937 (50 Stat. 668), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. Notwithstanding the provisions of the last proviso to the foregoing section, the New York World's Fair 1939, Inc., shall not be liable for the payment of duty on articles imported under this joint resolution, to be exhibited or used by or for the account of a foreign government, if (a) the New York World's Fair 1939, Inc., declares at the time of entry that the articles are to be so exhibited or used; (b) the New York World's Fair 1939, Inc., furnishes to the appropriate collector of customs the name and address of the duly authorized commissioner of the foreign government by which or for whose account the articles are to be so exhibited or used; and (c) the New York World's Fair 1939, Inc., within 30 days from the date of entry furnishes to the appropriate collector of customs a declaration of such duly authorized commissioner that his government will pay all duties, taxes, and other charges accruing on such articles, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. Such commissioner shall possess all the rights of a consignee. This section shall remain in full force and effect until 90 days after the final termination of the New York World's Fair."

SEC. 3. The joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the importation of articles free from tariff or other customs duty for the purpose of exhibition at the Golden Gate International Exposition, to be held at San Francisco, Calif., in 1939, and for other purposes," approved May 18, 1937 (50 Stat. 187), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. Notwithstanding the provisions of the last proviso to the foregoing section, the San Francisco Bay Exposition shall not be liable for the payment of duty on articles imported under this joint resolution, to be exhibited or used by or for the account of a foreign government, if (a) the San Francisco Bay Exposition declares at the time of entry that the articles are to be so exhibited or used; (b) the San Francisco Bay Exposition furnishes to the appropriate collector of customs the name and address of the duly authorized commissioner of the foreign government by which or for whose account the articles are to be so exhibited or used; and (c) the San Francisco Bay Exposition within 30 days from the date of entry furnishes to the appropriate collector of customs a declaration of such duly authorized commissioner that his government will pay all duties, taxes, and other charges accruing on such articles under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. Such commissioner shall possess all the rights of a consignee. This section shall remain in full force and effect until 90 days after the final termination of the Golden Gate International Expcsition."

SEC. 4. Unbound books of all kinds, bound books of all kinds except those wholly or in part in leather, sheets or printed pages of books bound wholly or in part in leather, pamphlets, music in books or sheets, and printed matter, all the foregoing, if their entry is not prohibited, and if of bona fide foreign authorship and classifiable under paragraph 1410 of the Tariff Act of 1930, shall be admitted without payment of duty if imported for gratuitous distribution within the exhibits of foreign governments at the New York World's Fair, 1939.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 3790) entitled "An act relating to the taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HARRISON, Mr. BROWN, Mr. CONNALLY, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. COLLINS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 5610) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 383), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEFAN reserved all points of order on the bill.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5610) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be limited to 1 hour and confined to the bill and that the time be equally divided between the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN] and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5610; and, pending that, asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be limited to 1 hour and confined to the bill, the time to be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Nebraska.

Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5610, with Mr. PARSONS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, this bill is one making appropriations for the conduct of the affairs of the National Capital, termed the District of Columbia, for the fiscal year 1940. I believe it is of particular interest to the Members of this House, for we all have pride in seeing that the affairs of the Capital of the country are carried on efficiently and economically. In other words, it is more or less a test of the ability of the Congress of the United States to do a job.

It is with peculiar pride that I am submitting to this House today this particular bill which provides funds for carrying on not only the general activities of the District, but also some of the activities of the National Park Service, the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, and the National Zoological Park, and certain engineering activities within the District of Columbia conducted by the Engineer Corps of the Army.

The regular Budget for 1940 proposed appropriations for the District of Columbia totaling $47,677,780. This committee recommends appropriations totaling $46,902,707; in other words, we have effected a reduction of $775,000 in the Budget estimates.

Another significant fact is that the amount recommended by this committee is $1,463,345 less than was carried in the 1939 appropriation bill and the deficiency items which have been passed since that bill was passed. These economies are proposed without impairment of any of the services rendered to the residents of the District of Columbia.

Appropriations for the District are under three headings: Those payable from the gasoline-tax fund, water revenues, and general funds made up principally of taxes on real estate, personal property, license taxes, intangible taxes, and other taxes of similar type.

GASOLINE-TAX AND WATER FUNDS

The gasoline-tax fund comes from taxes on automotive vehicles which are comparable with taxes paid in other jurisdictions in amount and in type; and also from a 2-cent gasoline-tax fund, and are sufficient to take care of all the street improvements and kindred street items in a very satisfactory manner. The water-revenue items are sufficient to take care of additional water mains and the general upbuilding of the water system; and, in addition, there is laid aside approximately $500,000 each year for investment in Government securities to take care of a major enlargement or rebuilding of the water system, 10, 15, or 20 years hence. In addition, there will be a slight surplus in the water fund at the end of the fiscal year 1940, notwithstanding the fact that water rates in the District of Columbia are abnormally low. It is only the general fund to which we must look with concern, because water revenues and gasoline taxes are sufficient to take care of the items for which they are raised.

GENERAL FUND

This bill would represent a deficit over revenues of $3,484,000, and I mean by "revenues" revenues based on all taxes currently raised, plus a tax of $1.50 on real estate, and eliminating the onerous business-privilege tax, about which so many of the local citizens have complained. In other words, a $1.50 rate on real estate, with the business-privilege tax eliminated, would mean a deficiency of appropriations in comparison with revenues of $3,484,000.

At the present time the real-estate rate in the District of Columbia is $1.75 per hundred dollars, 25 cents over the estimated rate that I have just given you. If the $1.75 rate were continued, this deficit would shrink to $284,000 instead of $3,484,000, for the 25-cent addition to the real-estate rate would mean added revenues of $3,200,000. In other words, continuing the real-estate tax would mean that the revenues for the District of Columbia would be sufficient without increasing taxes to pay the current expenses in the operation of this municipality which we call the District of Columbia. I believe this is a very encouraging sign not only to us who have the responsibility of making appropriations for the District, but likewise to the people who have come here to make Washington or the District of Columbia their home.

Generally, I believe I should take up with you some of the larger items in the pending measure.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. LEAVY. I want at the outset to compliment the gentleman and say that in my judgment I think he is perhaps the best-informed man on the floor of this House concerning municipal financing in this city, but I am wondering if there is any reason why this real-estate tax should be cut from $1.75 to $1.50.

Mr. COLLINS. Well, it will not be, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. LEAVY. And there is no particular reason why it should be, is there?

Mr. COLLINS. No; and it will not be.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Let me go along for a moment and then I shall yield.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I want to ask the gentleman a question on that point.

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Now, with reference to some of the various provisions of this bill, there are about 14,000 employees in the District of Columbia. There are two types of promotion they can get. One is promotion within the grade and the other is promotion from one grade to another grade. In this bill the total administrative promotions are limited to $50,000 and reallocations are limited to $35,000 for the fiscal year 1940. This is more or less in line with the established policy of subcommittees in dealing with civil-service employees.

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION

We have a Public Utilities Commission here and it has been operating, in my judgment, in an efficient manner. At times it has had what has been known as a people's counsel. For the last several years an appropriation has been carried for the salary of this people's counsel, but for some reason the President has never seen fit to fill the vacancy which existed in that office. This bill eliminates the salary because of the fact it has not been used in recent years.

DEPARTMENT OF INSURANCE

The department of insurance is likewise a very efficiently administered department. We find insurance rates in the District of Columbia entirely too high, although they are below what we would find in other jurisdictions. There are very few fire hazards in the District of Columbia. Fires are negligible not only in number but in size, and the result is that premiums in the District of Columbia amount to about four times as much as fire losses. It is usually figured that premiums should be double fire losses. We have recommended that these rates be lowered.

PUBLIC LIBRARY

Next is the Public Library. This District is blessed with a well-administered library system, with a main library and seven or eight branch libraries. It provides facilities for grown-ups and also for the schools. Not only can school children go to the libraries and find material there, but the libraries, through a basket and delivery system, sends books and documents into the schools themselves for the use of the pupils.

This bill provides for the beginning of the construction of a new main library building. Money for the plans has already been expended and a block of land on Pennsylvania Avenue has been definitely earmarked for that purpose. This proposed new building will be used to house the main library and also the administrative offices of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia.

PUBLIC PLAYGROUNDS

On the subject of playgrounds we found that there are several agencies operating recreational activities in the District of Columbia, particularly a department known as Public Playgrounds outside the school system, another known as the Community Center Department, which is a part of the school system, and then there is still another under National Capital Parks. In addition to these three, the Welfare and Recreation Association, a governmental corporation, operates a number of golf courses, tennis courts, and other recreational activities. This bill undertakes to consolidate playgrounds and the community centers and places them under the school system.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Appropriations for public schools are practically the same as they have been during the current year, allowing for normal increases that we find in practically all school budgets in the country. Several new school buildings are proposed, and in that connection let me tell you what most of you probably already know, that the cost of school systems in The District of Columbia police have many problems that a any other municipality in the country, according to a report made I think by the President's commission dealing with the subject of education.

POLICE DEPARTMENT

Police Department: This department is an efficiently operated agency in my opinion. I have a very high regard for the Superintendent of Police, Major Brown. I know that he is trying his very best to make it an efficient organization. The District of Columbia police have many problems that a jurisdiction of similar size would not have, because this is the Capital of the country and the population here is at times nearly doubled, due to visitors, transients, and so forth. There is a growing demand for an increase in the size of the police system. This committee proposes in this bill an addition of 25 policemen, 4 of them to be used exclusively in the inspection of shops where liquor is sold, so as to reduce the sale of liquor to minors and intoxicated persons, and to prevent any other violation of the law by these establishments. The other 21 of the 25 are to be assigned to motorcycle duty. That is in line with the suggestions made by the American Automobile Association and the Keystone Automobile Association.

FIRE DEPARTMENT

Fire Department: According to the Griffenhagen report, the Fire Department is too large and too expensive. The fire hazards here are negligible. This bill provides a reduction of $68,890 in the Budget estimate for the Fire Department, in proposing a reduction in the number of fire stations and also that vacancies occurring in that department shall not be filled, because we believe that a consolidation of fire stations will mean the use of a lesser number of firemen.

HEALTH DEPARTMENT

Health Department: Appropriations for public health in the District of Columbia have been practically doubled during the last 5 years. Realizing that the public health situation is acute here at times, because of the large number of transients and the fact that medical service is free, which causes a large number of people from surrounding States to come here because it is free, and that residential requirements have not been insisted upon in the past, this bill has placed a 1-year-residence limitation upon those who are admitted to the free hospitals, except in emergency cases. In some of the States the law requires 5 years residence. In addition, we found certain crowded conditions in one of the municipal hospitals here, and in order to relieve that this committee has increased by about $200,000 the appropriations for what is termed in this bill "medical charities," meaning thereby private hospitals that treat charity cases, for which they make a charge of around $2.50 per day, which is paid out of the District revenues. We found that these medical charities have been used to the fullest extent in the District of Columbia. We found also that these private hospitals are in grave danger of having to "close up shop" because of the load that is placed on them.

We realize that private hospitals are necessary for the well-being of any municipality, and, therefore, we have come to the conclusion that they should be aided and assisted as much as possible by this municipality, provided the payments to them are not in excess of the cost of taking care of these patients at a municipally owned hospital.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the District paid $1.50 to $2 a day for charity patients?

Mr. COLLINS. It amounts to about $2.50 per day.

Mr. HANCOCK. Can the hospitals do it for that amount?

Mr. COLLINS. No.

Mr. HANCOCK. In my home city we pay $4 to the hospitals.

Mr. COLLINS. Every private hospital in the District of Columbia loses money on every patient that it takes in.

Mr. HANCOCK. And that deficit is made up by the Community Chest?

Mr. COLLINS. It is not made up here by the Community Chest. Take, for instance, Providence Hospital, which has treated about one-third of all the charity patients in the District of Columbia, and has not been paid a single penny by the District of Columbia for that service.

This bill undertakes for the first time in recent years to help Providence Hospital.

Mr. HANCOCK. Does not the Community Chest make any contribution to the private hospitals?

Mr. COLLINS. They have, but I understand it is not available this year for that purpose. I may be mistaken about that, however.

Mr. HANCOCK. Where do the funds come from?

Mr. COLLINS. From private subscriptions. All of the patients that are treated by private hospitals are treated at a loss by the institution.

Mr. HANCOCK. And private subscribers have to make up the loss?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK. Does not the gentleman think the District ought to pay the cost of those charity patients?

Mr. COLLINS. I do; but we are not doing it in this bill. We are paying part of it, but not all of it.

Mr. HANCOCK. But we are approaching full payment?

Mr. COLLINS. No. We pay about half of it, but I think we ought to give them all the assistance we can, because I do not believe we can afford to have them closed.

Mr. HANCOCK. I think we ought to pay cost.

Mr. COLLINS. Well, I am not going to argue with the gentleman about that.

PUBLIC WELFARE

Now, with reference to public welfare, this bill is giving to the House Budget estimates for public welfare, plus social security amounts of two and one-half million dollars. In addition to that sum of money, the recipients of relief are taken care of by W. P. A. The average expenditures through W. P. A. are in excess of $6,000,000 in the District. In addition to that, there are large and extensive stocks of goods, merchandise, and perishables to which these relief patients go for food and clothing. The undisputed testimony is to the effect that the amount appropriated, plus the social security grants, plus the surplus commodities, plus W. P. A. grants, estimated to be around $6,000,000 for the fiscal year 1940 for the District of Columbia, will be sufficient to take care of all relief needs in the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1940.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COX. I was interested in the item the gentleman discussed in connection with appropriations made for relief of the sick. The gentleman referred to the very fine work that has been done by Providence Hospital. Is the gentleman able to inform the Committee as to the proportionate part of charity or assistance to the poor that is rendered by that hospital?

Mr. COLLINS. It has been rendered free in the past.

Mr. COX. In other words, what part of the load does that particular institution carry?

Mr. COLLINS. It has been carrying about one-third, and the District has made no appropriation in the past for Providence Hospital.

Mr. COX. From what source does the hospital secure support for the care of the poor?

Mr. COLLINS. I imagine it has gotten some funds from the Community Chest but largely from charitably inclined citizens of the District of Columbia.

THE NATIONAL GUARD

We have in Washington a very fine militia, commanded by Brig. Gen. Albert Cox, an upstanding citizen of North Carolina and Washington. The militia, or National Guard, is housed down on Pennsylvania Avenue in an old, dilapidated hotel. They are in need of an armory—not a riding hall or a drill hall but a modern, up-to-date armory. You might call it a glorified warehouse. Those of us who keep step with the progress of matters military know that armies in the future are going to be on wings and on wheels. We ought to have a place where we can house modern, effective implements, instead of a place where the boys can march, because I do not think we are going to make much headway at marching in front of machine-gun fire. So this bill provides for a modern armory, or, at least, provides for the acquisition of ground and plans for a modern armory. We took into consideration in our work the advice of that magnificent soldier, the present Chief of Staff of the Army, who gave us very valuable suggestions and advice. So we can look forward in the next year or so to an adequately housed National Guard for the District of Columbia.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS AND LIMITATIONS

Now, with reference to some of the legislative provisions, for all of these bills have certain legislative provisions. Most of them have been carried through the years, because at one time appropriations were made by the legislative committees. I believe this bill is as free of legislation as it is possible to write a bill.

The first item of a legislative nature provides that the executive secretary of the Commission on Mental Health shall receive a salary at the rate of $3,000 a year. We put that in the bill because the present rate is $3,800, and we felt that $3,000 was more in line with the duties of the office.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, the next item relates to the cost of the public library administration school building, and fixes the outside limit at $1,118,000.

The next item relates to the filling of vacancies in the fire department, which I have already discussed.

The next item provides that when one piece of fire equipment is replaced by a new and modern piece of fire equipment, the use of the old fire equipment is prohibited.

The next item provides one year's residence for persons at Gallinger Hospital, unless the case is an emergency one.

The next item provides a maximum cost of $500 a year for inmates at the National Training School for Girls. The cost of keeping inmates in many similar institutions elsewhere is $400. We felt that a maximum should be placed upon this institution so that the cost would not be prohibitive.

The next item relates to the National Training School for Girls and provides that the Attorney General can bring condemnation proceedings for the acquisition of land—a provision that must be carried in these bills.

The next item is provision for a bridge across Rock Creek at Massachusetts Avenue instead of the culvert that is there now. Those of you who go out Massachusetts Avenue may not realize it, but you are riding across an embankment, under which is a culvert through which runs Rock Creek. It is proposed that this embankment be eliminated and a 60-foot bridge be used in its stead. The proposed improvements there will cost just about the same for the bridge as they would for the improvement of the culvert, and the change from the culvert to the bridge is recommended by the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia. In this connection I may add that this bill provides for an additional driveway through Rock Creek Park, through which most of you drive when you come to the Capitol every day, instead of the single-lane highway that is there now.

The next legislative item relates to a subject I have already discussed—the $50,000 for step-ups and $35,000 limit for the change of grades of District of Columbia employees.

Mr. Chairman, I have mentioned in this time some of the salient features of this bill. I may say, in conclusion, that this work represents the unanimous judgment of the membership of this subcommittee. We are in complete agreement. There are no controversial items in the bill. We feel that we have done a measurably good job. Under the 5-minute rule, I shall be very happy to answer any question any of you may wish to ask about any subject in the bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to join my distinguished colleague the Honorable Ross COLLINS, of Mississippi, in stating that this annual appropriation bill for the District of Columbia comes to the House by unanimous vote of the subcommittee. I know that many Members feel that they have little interest in the affairs of the government of the District of Columbia—yet they should have an interest, due to the fact that as long as the city is operated under the present system every Member becomes a legislator for the District and its inhabitants, and the constituents and taxpayers of each district in the land have personal and financial interest in it.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS], chairman of the subcommittee, has worked many months on this bill. He has worked morning, afternoon, and night. I believe that he knows more about the fiscal affairs of the District than any Member of the House. As senior minority member of the subcommittee, I am glad to say to you that we have labored over this bill without friction and without one word or thought of party politics. We have tried to be fair. You have read daily in the local newspapers about the various questions in which the people of Washington are interested. You have been reading daily about investigations and plans for making changes in the form of government. All of these events have been discussed by the membership of this subcommittee; but we are an appropriating body and not a legislative one, and therefore, with what available material and program we had before us, I feel that we have brought out a carefully considered bill that will appeal to you on its merits. It comes to you with figures below the Budget and with the sincere belief of Members who have listened attentively throughout the hearings that it contains sufficient funds to carry on the activities during the next fiscal year. The Budget estimates aggregated $47,677,780. This bill now carries a total of $46,902,707—$775,073 below the Budget estimates.

I personally feel that until we have some new legislation changing certain conditions here, your subcommittee on appropriations can do nothing better than follow the guidance of our most able and distinguished chairman.

In paying tribute to the ability and fairness of my chairman, I wish to add my tribute to the unusually hard work and helpful guidance of the District Auditor, Major Donovan, and also our committee clerk, Mr. William Duvall. They have greatly aided the subcommittee in the arduous task of preparing this intricate appropriation bill.

Following the completion of the hearings on this bill, I have been asked many questions by both old and new members regarding various phases of the appropriations for the District government. Although the chairman has covered much of the ground, I will endeavor to reply to just a few of the questions.

Question. How much do we appropriate each year for the District of Columbia?

Answer. We have been appropriating around $47,000,000 a year. This includes the $5,000,000 Federal contribution. However, none of the Federal contribution is applied to the expenses of the Water Department, because that pays its own way. The hearings show the substantial amount of water furnished to agencies of the Federal Government without charge.

Second question. What is the annual cost of relief and what is the total of aggregate annual expenditures?

Answer. The amount of annual relief runs to around ten millions. Since 1932, the Federal Government has turned over to this city about $71,000,000 in all forms of assistance and relief. It is safe to say that with the ten millions relief and the annual appropriations here, the annual expenditures for the District government would amount to about $57,000,000. Of course, that does not include other huge Federal expenditures within the District in which the local government does not share, such as the Mount Vernon highway and purely Federal activities. The tax question and the various legislative questions for the district are unusually interesting and are being studied by other committees.

Third question. How many people pay real estate and personal taxes in this city?

Answer. There are about 627,000 people in Washington. The hearings which we held are very complete on that matter and are available to you. Briefly, however, it may be interesting for you to know that there are only about 86,000 people in this city who pay real-estate and personal taxes. That does not include the various corporations. The city is growing rapidly and the hearings will disclose to you the fact that throughout the Nation, Washington is considered somewhat of a boom town and all roads lead to Washington. It was testified that about 38,000 people are here looking for some kind of a job. That does not include the 12,000 people assigned to W. P. A. To somehow solve the problem of the floating population and those thousands who come here to stay because they feel they can get a job or relief, is this city's most difficult task. The testimony of school officials shows that there are about 2,400 Maryland and Virginia students who secure free education here. This, they say, is at a cost of over $200,000 a year and this is paid for by District taxpayers and the taxpayers in the States because the Federal contribution is applied to the school funds. Washington's educational system is held in high esteem and the hearings contain valuable and interesting information on that subject. Procurement of a teaching position in the Washington public schools is a worthy ambition for any teacher.

Fourth question. What are some of the large items of taxation here?

Answer. The real-estate tax, of course, brings in the most money, amounting to around $20,000,000 per year. Personal taxes—tangible and intangible—around $4,000,000; liquor taxes including the license tax, about $2,000,000; the corporation franchise tax about $3,000,000; the automobile taxes, including the weight and personal-car tax, around one million and a half; the insurance tax around half a million; and the business tax around two hundred and seventy thousand. Those are merely in round figures. The hearings disclose much more of this information.

Fifth question. Could the city be run on local revenues, without Federal contribution?

Answer. That question is one of the old ones here. The answer, of course, is "No." There are other committees which have made exhaustive studies of that matter and the legislative committee may make certain recommendations affecting sources of revenue. Until new legislation is passed, however, there is nothing that this committee can do except to continue an annual lump-sum contribution from the Federal Government.

Sixth question. What about relief here; is enough money appropriated?

Answer. If you want to take in all of the people who want jobs and relief, the answer is "No." While Washington is somewhat different from any other city in the country, the principles are the same. More people want help than can be accommodated out of available resources. Yet our information from a reliable relief source is that we are appropriating sufficient funds to carry the necessary load. You should know, however, that, while there are rules and regulations, most anyone who comes here and is broke can get free hospitalization. Anyone coming here can usually get some kind of help. The growth of the Government business here is so well known throughout the land that hordes of people are coming here trying to get some kind of a Government job, and, failing to do this, many apply for relief. The private charitable organizations have done marvelous work in helping out under these conditions. Because of these serious conditions here these private charitable organizations should be given more encouragement. While it is claimed that many former Washingtonians are moving out and building in nearby Virginia and Maryland, my impression from the evidence given is that the city is going to continue to grow rapidly, and the majority of the new population will not be of the class that comes here to build a home and to be altogether self-sustaining.

Seventh question. What is the needed hospitalization outlay here?

Answer. That is problematical, due to the fact that the hearings disclose that overcrowded conditions may exist continuously because of the influx of people coming here for free hospitalization from nearby States. The hearings and investigations develop that matter. One fact, however, should be stated here regarding the valuable work which is being done for humanity by the efficient staff of visiting physicians and surgeons. More than 100 of these doctors give their time and service free to these public institutions. They are known as the staff of visiting doctors. The chief of that staff is Dr. Walter Bloedorn, a prominent doctor of this city, who has a very high standing in his profession and has the confidence of many people here. I have been informed that the free services of this staff each year can be figured close to $400,000. My impression is that this staff of doctors should be highly commended and encouraged in the service they are rendering to the unfortunate people of this District.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. I wish to ask the gentleman a few questions with reference to the milk situation in Washington. The gentleman seemed to take the lead in interrogating witnesses when this matter was before the subcommittee. I appreciate, of course, that the gentleman's committee cannot legislate on this subject, but it does appear that there must be more or less of a milk monopoly in the District of Columbia, and that the purchase of milk is limited to a very small territory. The hearings seemed to indicate that the farmer gets in the neighborhood of 6 cents a quart, the distributor 8, and that the consumer pays 14. The testimony further showed that one distributor handles nearly 50 percent of the milk distributed in Washington. Is that correct?

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman from Washington has always been alert and has always fought for the interests of the producer, especially the dairymen. The gentleman will remember, of course, that yesterday we made provision for an investigation of the milk situation in Washington. If the gentleman will look at page 545 of the hearings, he will find a complete statement as to the milk situation here. Is the gentleman asking a specific question as to whether there is a milk monopoly in the District of Columbia?

Mr. LEAVY. I am asking the gentleman expressly about that subject and would be glad to have the gentleman's opinion, if he cares to give it.

Mr. STEFAN. I cannot speak with the force of authority or present facts that come from an official source, but it is my personal opinion that there is a kind of monopoly here. I believe the producers, the farmers, the men who milk the cows, the dairymen in Maryland and Virginia, and the milksheds about this city would be better able to protect themselves if they organized in a cooperative way and distributed their own milk instead of placing themselves at the mercy of some distributor who does not milk the cows himself. I sympathize with the farmers in this territory who have to sell their milk at around 6 cents to a distributor who gets an additional 8 cents. The consumer has to pay 14 cents for it. I know that my colleague from Washington has been diligently battling for the producer and dairymen in order that the producer may secure a larger share of the actual value of the milk he himself produces.

Mr. LEAVY. One other observation, if the gentleman will permit. I am conscious of the fact that the distributor is entitled to a reasonable profit, but the major consideration is the producer and the consumer. It seems we are not meeting that situation, and the gentleman's committee might possibly have had the power to exercise some control here, as it is my understanding the inspectors who draw their pay from this appropriation go out into nearby Virginia and Maryland, and even go over into Pennsylvania and there inspect the farmers' barns and dairy equipment. They cannot go beyond there.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman is absolutely right. There is a minute inspection made of the milk to safeguard the health of the babies and the people who live in Washington. The chairman of the committee and the membership of this committee, I may say to the gentleman from Washington, went into the subject very thoroughly; but we are an appropriating committee, not a legislative committee. We hope that the investigation, which was passed by the House yesterday, will develop these things the gentleman is trying to develop to safeguard the interest of the producer as well as the consumers.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman's committee limit this inspection to such an extent it will necessarily limit the product in the District of Columbia?

Mr. STEFAN. Of course, this committee could limit by eliminating or cutting down all of these appropriations.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman's committee by this appropriation limit the matter?

Mr. STEFAN. No. The committee did not limit any of the appropriation for inspection, feeling the amount suggested in the request of the Commissioners was sufficient. I believe we have appropriated a sufficient amount of money to make a thorough inspection of the milk which is consumed in Washington.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 6 additional minutes.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. This bill, as I understand it, appropriates about $47,000,000 to help defray the expenses of operating the government of the District of Columbia. What percentage does that bear to the entire cost of the operation of the District of Columbia government?

Mr. STEFAN. All of it.

Mr. MOTT. Does not the District of Columbia pay anything on its own account?

Mr. STEFAN. Absolutely. The $5,000,000 Federal contribution is included in the $47,000,000.

Mr. MOTT. Of the $47,000,000 included in this bill, how much comes out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. STEFAN. Five million dollars.

Mr. MOTT. All of the rest comes from the District?

Mr. STEFAN. Probably most of it.

Mr. MOTT. I want to inquire about the appropriation for the Police Department. I notice that the increase in the appropriation for the police force over last year is $43,975, which is a rather negligible increase. Is it not a fact that the city of Washington is very seriously underpoliced?

Mr. STEFAN. The committee took that into consideration, and we think we have appropriated sufficient funds to carry on the police activities of the District of Columbia to safeguard the life and property of all its inhabitants.

Mr. MOTT. Right after the death of the young son of one our colleagues, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL], I took up with the Police Department the matter of stationing an officer at the intersection of Connecticut Avenue and Woodley Road because that is where he was killed. It is a very dangerous intersection.

Mr. STEFAN. May I say to my colleague that we have furnished the Police Department with sufficient funds to put on additional policemen to take care of those very things that the gentleman is discussing. Numerous motorcycle policemen have been added to the force, which will take care of these matters.

Mr. MOTT. The department told me at that time that in doing so they would probably have to take away an officer from some other important intersection. I was also informed that the police department was not sufficiently large to take care of the street traffic of Washington.

Mr. STEFAN. We think we have provided sufficient funds to take care of that situation.

Mr. MOTT. I am glad the gentleman thinks that is so, because he knows a great deal about the matter.

Mr. DOWELL. What is the number of policemen in the city?

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman will find that detailed in full in the hearings—about 1,397 policemen.

Mr. DOWELL. How does the number compare with that in other cities?

Mr. STEFAN. Of course, Washington is a rather unique city. There is much service rendered by the police here that is not rendered in other cities.

Mr. MOTT. How does the number of policemen in the city of Washington compare with the number in San Francisco, which is a city of comparable size?

Mr. STEFAN. That is in the hearings.

Mr. MOTT. Does the gentleman know whether it is more or less than San Francisco?

Mr. STEFAN. I think it is more.

Mr. MOTT. Why should it not be as much?

Mr. STEFAN. We have about 1,397 policemen here. The hearings give you full details. You have them to examine and read. I believe San Francisco has a population of about 750,000 and has about 1,266 policemen. The need for these additional policemen is that this is the Nation's Capital and the activities here are so much more numerous and diversified than San Francisco, so that city cannot be used as a comparison. If you read the hearings you will find a table showing the number of police here is not excessive as compared to other cities of this size, taking into consideration, of course, that Washington is a capital city.

Mr. MOTT. Then why should there be fewer in Washington than in San Francisco?

Mr. STEFAN. I did not say there were fewer. I told the gentleman to refer to the hearings. They are complete with such information.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER. May I refer to page 45, the section applying to Gallinger Hospital? I notice there an item for a chief medical director, $7,500, and two associate medical directors, $3,200. May I ask the gentleman if this means the abolishment of the staff of five resident physicians which they now have?

Mr. STEFAN. No; those five resident physicians remain as at present.

Mr. MILLER. Where is their appropriation carried in the bill?

Mr. STEFAN. The act is not carried in this bill. It merely continues through. They hold office under a continuing act, and it is not necessary that they appear in this bill.

Mr. MILLER. Is this part of the $606,000?

Mr. STEFAN. That is right. Those five men are provided for.

Mr. MILLER. May I ask why a salary of $7,500 is set for a chief medical officer here, when the Veterans' Administration gets its chief medical officers at $5,600?

Mr. STEFAN. That was arranged through the various hospitals in the city, by agreement of Georgetown University, George Washington and other authorities——

Mr. MILLER. I believe the gentleman misses my question. Why are we paying $7,500 for a chief medical officer here in Washington when the Veterans' Administration gets its chief medical officers at $5,600?

Mr. STEFAN. The amount is high. I understand it is in the bill because they want a man who is efficient. There is some serious controversy over this item.

Mr. MILLER. The Veterans' Administration has some very efficient chief medical officers at $5,600.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOLLES].

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Chairman, at 12 o'clock today I arrived at the House and received a copy of this appropriation bill. I do not believe in dealing in futilities, and it is futile to object to any of the items in this bill; but it would seem to me that the members of the House Committee on the District of Columbia might have had opportunity to study this bill in some way, because it is reeking with legislation.

One item in the bill to which I do object, and which I think will be a reflection both on the committee and the House if it remains as it is, is the item regarding the fire department.

For the pay of officers and members of the fire department—

And so forth—

Provided, That vacancies occurring under this appropriation shall not be filled; and the Commissioners, in submitting their estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, shall provide for the reduction in the number of existing Fire Department stations and a reduction in the number of Fire Department personnel.

I have but a few moments, but I wish to say that this is one of the few cities in the United States where the firemen do not have a 60-hour week or have not been given some consideration of this character. In this House and in the body at the other end of the Capitol we pass measures which are signed by the President and which provide certain things for people in every walk of life. We set prices for them, we set hours for them, and we have decisions made by the National Labor Relations Board for them; but here in the city of Washington we work the firemen 72 hours a week without proper holidays, and we pay no attention to this situation in the appropriation bill, although legislation correcting this situation was agreed to by the House Committee on the District of Columbia.

I find other items through the bill which, if I had time, I could show you are matters of legislation. If the subcommittee handling appropriations for the District appropriates and legislates at the same time, we had better abolish the House District Committee. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. All time has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, any revenue (not including the proportionate share of the United States in any revenue arising as the result of the expenditure of appropriations made for the fiscal year 1924 and prior fiscal years) now required by law to be credited to the District of Columbia and the United States in the same proportion that each contributed to the activity or source from whence such revenue was derived shall be credited wholly to the District of Columbia, and, in addition, $5,000,000 is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be advanced July 1, 1939, and all of the remainder out of the combined revenues of the District of Columbia, namely.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to compliment the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] as well as the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN] and their associates on the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations for their work in connection with this bill. It is work for which they receive no credit back home, but under the present set-up it is necessary for the Congress to legislate for the District of Columbia and someone must spend weeks investigating and making recommendations for us to act on.

My main purpose in rising today is to refer to a matter which I believe is of grave importance. I am pleased to notice in the report that the committee has recommended an increase in the appropriation for the Police Department. This prompts my remarks. The third paragraph under the heading "Police Department" states:

It is the opinion of the committee that the police should pay special attention to minors on the streets with a view to preventing traffic accidents, and to places where intoxicants are sold, and the selling of liquor to intoxicated persons.

In my opinion, it should not be necessary for the Congress of the United States to tell the Police Department it is their duty to enforce the laws relating to the sale of alcoholic liquor any more than it is their duty to tell the police department to enforce the laws relating to murder or robbery.

I have given some attention to the sale of liquor and liquor regulations in the last few months, being in correspondence with Commissioner Hazen and with the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board. I was greatly exercised when I returned to Washington last fall and read in the papers that the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, over the protest of a large majority in the neighborhood, granted a license for the sale of liquor out on Georgia Avenue. The protest was led by the clergy, civic organizations, the Parent-Teachers' Association, and other public-spirited citizens who opposed the issuance of that license. It might have been lawful to issue the license, but I say where you find a situation such as that in a community the license should not be issued. The will of the people living in the neighborhood should prevail.

There is no Member of this House who did more to bring about the repeal of the eighteenth amendment than I did. I spent my own money, making hundreds of speeches, and worked for years for that cause, as I did not believe in prohibition then and do not believe in it now; but I say to you now if we do not protect the youth of this country, if we do not provide ways and means to keep intoxicants from them, prohibition is going to return just as sure as you are in this room today, and one of the first places that will be affected is the District of Columbia. We read about school children getting liquor in the District of Columbia. That must be prevented, and it can be stopped. I want to say to Major Brown, in whom I have great confidence, and who has made an excellent Superintendent of Police, "Notify each and every one of your men, Major Brown, that it is their duty to enforce the liquor laws just the same as it is to enforce any other law. Hold them responsible for what happens in their precincts and districts. Bear down on them. You are doing wonderful work with your boys' clubs, and here is another way you can help them to become good citizens: Get their cooperation, and you will soon stop this illegal sale of liquor to minors."

I am pleased the committee is providing the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board some additional men. It is true the Board has been handicapped because they have had only two inspectors. If the old and new inspectors go from place to place and where they find a violation of the law by the sale of liquor to minors or the sale of liquor to intoxicated persons, bring the violators before the Board, and, no matter whether it be the largest hotel in Washington or the smallest retail dealer, let the Board take their license away, then you can bet anything you have there will be no more violations in the District of Columbia along that line. That is the way to stop violations. Take their licenses away.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Several years ago the same Board permitted a liquor license to be granted to a distributor located within 500 feet of a church, which is contrary to the law of the District. As the gentleman states, if they do not compel the persons who are dispensing liquors to abide by the laws and the rules, they will eventually find it will be to their detriment and that the people will resent the selling of liquor to children here in the District.

It was brought to our attention just recently that in the case of the Government rum house, where they sold it in half pint bottles, the boys in the high schools were purchasing those half pint bottles.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his contribution. Let me say in reply: I am sure if the officials who have that rum house in charge know this to be true it certainly will be stopped. I cannot conceive that any Government official who has the least self-respect would for one moment approve of what the gentleman has just pointed out.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that we pause for a moment and compare the situation during the preprohibition days and the conditions at the present. Who ever heard of a taproom, such as we have now, prior to prohibition? In my city and in Washington you might have found a back room called a wine room; but if you did, it was in violation of the law. Now you have licensed places, known as taprooms, where women can sit down and drink intoxicants. We told the people when we sought to repeal the eighteenth amendment the saloon—the evil—was gone. But in its place comes the tavern. Those who are benefiting as a result of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment are the ones who should strive to enforce the laws and regulations. They can keep liquor from minors and people who are intoxicated if they want to. It will be to their benefit to do so before it is too late.

My city is the greatest beer-manufacturing center in the world. Tens of thousands of our citizens are employed in this industry. I want to protect them and their jobs, and the way to do it is by strict regulation of wholesale and retail sales.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to refer to another matter. I do not know whether you know it or not, but the wholesale distribution of liquor in the District of Columbia is in the hands of about 25 men or corporations. Just think of it. No hotel or anyone else that has a license to retail liquor can secure such liquor unless he buys it from one of these men. No individual can have liquor shipped direct to him since the new regulations that requires all to buy from the wholesaler.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. In an issue of a newspaper, National Beverage News, supported by these wholesalers, published during the first week in January, there was a long editorial commending the Alcoholic Board for the issuing of the license on Georgia Avenue, praising the Board for ignoring the protests, and in that same issue there was a column and a half open letter, addressed to the Alcoholic Board signed by the leader of the wholesalers, he telling the Alcoholic Board what it should do, and what kind of regulations and rules it should adopt. I read it, and I communicated with Commissioner Hazen about it. He replied that he and the Board were so indignant the man was called before the Board and censured. That was the proper course to take. What right have the wholesalers or anyone else to dictate to the Alcoholic Board of the District of Columbia or the Commissioner what kind of rules and regulations should be adopted?

You have a regulation issued by the Alcoholic Board which provides that if a retailer does not pay his bill within a certain number of days they will take his license away. I think this makes a collection agency out of the Alcoholic Board for the benefit of the wholesaler.

Those who are now making the money out of the sale of liquor in the District of Columbia had little or nothing to do with bringing about the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. Now that they have been provided with a business that brings them large revenues, why should they not be the leaders in demanding proper regulation? If they do not, they should be put out of business.

You have not a hotel in the city of Washington today whose balance sheets are not out of the red by reason of being permitted to sell liquor in the District of Columbia. When prohibition was here most of them were in the hands of a receiver. They should appreciate what has been done for them. They should cooperate and obey the law, and the law is that liquor shall not be sold to minors or to an intoxicated person or after certain hours or on Sunday.

In the same issue of the paper I have referred to a moment ago, there was another lengthy article demanding that the Alcoholic Board provide a resale price for one and all in the sale of liquor. Why, I can buy liquor in the city of St. Louis, where I come from, by the bottle cheaper than I can buy it by the case in Washington; and why? Because wholesale distribution in Washington is in the hands of these few men who set the price. Retailers sell liquor in St. Louis for a fair profit and do not gouge the public.

I want to express the hope that the Commissioners, the Alcoholic Board, and the superintendent of police will cooperate, go after the violators, treat them as they should be treated, and then we will find a different situation in Washington than the one I have just described. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL BOARD

For personal services, streetcar and bus transportation, telephone service, not exceeding $1,000 for the purchase of samples, not exceeding $100 for witness fees, and not less than $8,000 for beverage tax stamps, and other necessary contingent and miscellaneous expenses, $44,580.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I was much interested in what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] just said about this District liquor problem and Liquor Control Board. I notice in the appropriation here there is included for this Board's expenses an item of $44,580, and I also notice on page 11 of the hearings there is an item of $1,950,000 shown as the alcoholic beverages, tax, and license fees which have been received by the District or by the Government on the sale of liquor during the past fiscal year.

Some days ago, before this Congress, I made the following reference and assertion, and I think it is worthy of notice and attention again at this time. In the State of Pennsylvania last year, under their liquor control act, under which the State handles its own liquor sales, I understand the State sold to all takers approximately $100,000,000 of liquor on which it realized a profit or revenue for the State expenses of approximately $37,000,000, or nearly 40 percent. I do not know whether you gentlemen know it or not, but in the District of Columbia last year, as I understand the figures, there was approximately one-half the liquor sold here that was sold in the entire State of Pennsylvania in dollar volume; that is, approximately $50,000,000 worth of liquor was legally sold in the District of Columbia last year, and as is shown by these figures on page 11, which I have just referred to, the Government realized only a gross of $1,950,000 from that $50,000,000 sale, as against $37,000,000 of revenue in the State of Pennsylvania on sales of $100,000,000.

In view of these facts and figures I can see no reason why we should consent to or approve of an appropriation of $44,580 for expenses for this Alcoholic Beverage Control Board when they are running this business here, as is manifestly true, on such a very impractical, inefficient, and unbusinesslike basis, as compared with the figures which I have quoted from the State of Pennsylvania.

I submit to this Committee that it is high time that we, as Members of Congress, whether or not we are on the Committee on the District of Columbia or on the Committee on Appropriations, should take official cognizance of this situation, because we, the Representatives of the United States of America, are asked to make an appropriation of several million dollars of the taxpayers' money for the benefit of the District of Columbia, when at the same time we are losing approximately fifteen or sixteen million dollars of revenue on the sale of liquor in this city because of the way it is being handled. We could not only eliminate the entire appropriation from this bill but also have several million dollars left over and never notice the difference as far as the price of liquor is concerned, according to the remarks just made by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. KITCHENS. I understood the gentleman to state that in the State of Pennsylvania around $100,000,000 last year was spent for liquors. I am wondering if that is the reason why the State of Pennsylvania is in such dire need for relief money from the Federal Government today.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Not being a resident of Pennsylvania, I am not familiar with their relief situation, but I assume the gentleman's conclusion is that they are spending too much on liquor and not enough for taxes or for essentials?

Mr. KITCHENS. Last year or year before last we spent in the State of Pennsylvania for relief purposes $214,000,000, and it seems they have used about half of it in the purchase of liquor. I voted against the $150,000,000 for relief the other day, and I voted against the $100,000,000 for relief. I did it as a protest against the manner in which our relief moneys are being expended in the United States, such as paying men in the State of Pennsylvania $68 to $90 per month for relief work and paying the people in Arkansas $19 to $32 per month.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thank the gentleman for his observations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn without objection, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For printing and binding, $53,300: Provided, That no part of the appropriations contained in this act shall be available for expenditure for printing and binding unless the need for such expenditure shall have been specifically approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or by the purchasing officer and the auditor for the District of Columbia acting for such Commissioners.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: On page 13, after line 20 insert the following:

"For the use of the Senate and House Committees on the District of Columbia, acting jointly or separately as the chairmen of the two committees may decide, to pay for technical counsel and for bill drafting, statistical, and other assistance in connection with legislation for the revision of the organization of the District of Columbia and for extra services performed in the making of sundry investigations and examinations and the drafting of proposals for the revision of the organization of the District of Columbia, to be expended without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (41 U. S. C. 5), $12,500, to be immediately available."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Not to exceed $350,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $500,000 contained in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1939 for beginning the construction in square 533 of the first unit of an extensible building for the government of the District of Columbia is hereby reappropriated and made available for beginning the construction in square 491 of the first unit of an extensible library building, including quarters for the administrative offices of the Board of Education, and the Commissioners are authorized to enter into contract or contracts for the construction of such first unit at a total cost, including improvement of grounds and all necessary furniture and equipment, not to exceed $1,118,000: Provided, That the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $60,000, contained in such act for the preparation of plans and specifications for a library building to be constructed on square 491 is continued available for the same purpose during the fiscal year 1940, and shall be available for the employment of professional and other services, without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, civil-service requirements, or section 3709 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language beginning on line 23, page 18, after the word "education", down to the end of the paragraph on page 19, ending in line 10. It is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COLLINS. The gentleman makes his point of order to the language beginning with the word "and", in line 23, and ending with line 10 on page 19?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. COLLINS. And not to the entire paragraph?

Mr. RICH. Not to the entire paragraph.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I feel it appropriate I should call the attention of the House and the country today to the condition which invariably exists when appropriations or legislation for the District of Columbia are considered by this body. My remarks I am certain will not be construed by the absentees as any criticism of their course in not being present on the floor today, but I call attention to the fact that there are but 25 or 30 Members of this body giving consideration at this time to the District of Columbia appropriations for the coming year, a bill which carries in it items of much interest not only to those who reside in the Nation's Capital, but to the country at large. I rise at this time to reiterate a belief that I have held during my entire tenure in Congress. It is to the effect that bona fide residents of the District of Columbia who have no voting privileges in any of the States should no longer be denied what is not only a right but is a responsibility. They should discharge their duties of the franchise in this particular section of the United States. I feel that it is basically unsound that any group of individuals, be they living in the smallest hamlet of America or in the Capital City of the land, should be denied participation in their Government by the direct use of the ballot. I call attention of the membership present today to the resolutions that have been pending before the Congress for a great many years, looking toward an amendment to the Constitution which would allow the voteless citizens of the District of Columbia to participate in the election of a President of the United States, in the election of a Representative in the lower House, and in the election of a Senator in the upper House, and also a certain amount of local self-government. These resolutions have been before the Congress for a great many years, one introduced by the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] who was at one time the distinguished head of the House District Committee. I have myself introduced a resolution somewhat similar, though somewhat different from the one that the gentlewoman from New Jersey sponsors.

In the other body Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, and Senator LEWIS, of Illinois, have sponsored identical resolutions as those now before the House. The reason I rose at this particular moment was to call the attention of the Committee to the fact that within the last 2 days the chairman of the important Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, the gentleman from Texas, Judge SUMNERS, able and distinguished Member of this body, has seen fit to introduce a resolution which embodies the thoughts of the other resolutions. I congratulate Judge SUMNERS, as chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, the committee which will have consideration of this legislation in the future as it has in the past. I believe it is safe for me to say today to those who are upon this floor that Judge SUMNERS introduced such a resolution not because of any group getting behind him to do that but because, in his solemn judgment, sitting here as a Member of Congress year in and year out, with a long service to his credit, he believes what I believe and what many other Members of this Congress believe, and it is that the people who reside in the District have not only the inherent right but the highest responsibility in the definite obligation of direct participation of government. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. It is conservatively estimated that 170,000 men and women live in the District of Columbia who cannot establish legal residence in any other State in the Union. A large majority of those individuals have no moorings in any other State. Under the laws they cannot be in those States as voting citizens. I have talked to dozens of men and women who were born in the District of Columbia, who are living their lives here, who properly desire, as citizens of the United States, to participate with the vote, upon matters which I have oulined—President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, and a degree of local government. Many of you will remember the large number of these persons who overwhelmingly, in a citizens' plebiscite last year, demonstrated their belief in such a principle. Their voluntary action was truly challenging to all of us.

I feel that it is not stretching the truth to say to the membership of this body that we are seeing in the world certain definite trends toward dictatorships, and we are aware of that fact, and we stand aghast at what is happening. In the United States of America we are happy to say that we live under a government in which the processes of democracy are extended to the citizens in the fullest degree. I believe it is timely that we can once again give attention to the realization, which I have in my heart and many of you have in your hearts, that we should extend the rights and responsibilities of democracy to all men and women in this country who are eligible to participate. Throughout America there are thousands and thousands of citizens who do not know that in the District here there is no voting power. Members of Congress are increasingly becoming determined to join in this fight for suffrage in Washington.

Again, I call to the attention of those individuals who are not especially interested in the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia or especially interested in the legislation that comes before you from the Committee on the District of Columbia, that those two groups are charged with heavy responsibilities; and today I congratulate the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations and those who worked with him for the diligence they have shown in connection with District of Columbia matters. The same words can apply to the membership of the House District of Columbia Committee. The work is not easy, but it must be done, and all Members should join in their efforts to see that fair play and proper measures are the result. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot help but sense the feeling that the "mayor" of the District of Columbia has for the people who would like to have the vote. I think that every citizen of this country should have the vote, but I cannot help but recall some of the history of this country at the time that George Washington and L'Enfant were trying to make a survey of an area 10 miles square which was supposed to be set aside as the District of Columbia, owned and controlled by the United States Government. Everyone who has read their history knows that that is the condition, that the Federal Government is supposed to look after and see that the District of Columbia is used for the purpose of the Federal Government as a whole. They separated it from any State so that no State could have control over this area of ground. Anyone who has moved into the District certainly knew that. Those who were born here certainly were taught that that was the purpose of this area. So I say they should have the vote, but in my own home district people have to go 3 or 4 miles to vote. There is no point in the District of Columbia where, if the citizens here would want to establish a residence they would have to go more than 2 or 3 miles into Virginia or into Maryland, and there they could vote for Representatives and could vote for Senators, and they could have the same rights and privileges that the people have in our own districts.

I am not trying in any way to interfere with the rights of the people of the District of Columbia, but I do think that whenever the time comes that we permit the District of Columbia to be operated by citizens who live here and that the Federal Government is not going to retain control over this area, then we are doing something that we will eventually realize is the wrong thing.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. POAGE. The whole purpose of establishing the District was to take it out of the control of the local political control, was it not?

Mr. RICH. That is right.

Mr. POAGE. Now, if we are going to give them the vote, why not give it back to the State of Maryland and let them pay taxes like everybody else in the United States pays?

Mr. RICH. Well, there are many arguments to be made about this. As far as the people of the District of Columbia are concerned, they can go and establish a residence in Virginia or in Maryland, and they will not have to go more than 3 miles. They can then vote for every office that you and I have the privilege of voting for in our own districts.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. The gentleman does not seriously contend that a resident of Washington could go into Maryland and establish a residence there for the purpose of voting?

Mr. RICH. There are people living here in the District of Columbia who have lived here for many years, yet who have maintained a voting residence in Pennsylvania. The same is true with respect to the States of Maryland and Virginia.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. A very small percentage.

Mr. COLLINS. Five percent.

Mr. RICH. I think certainly an arrangement could be made whereby through payment of a per capita tax to these States a voting residence could be established.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Not in Maryland. There we have a declaration of intention act.

Mr. RICH. I do not know anything about the laws of the various States, but I believe some arrangement of this kind could be made with the States of Maryland and Virginia.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I agree with the gentleman that he does not know anything about the law.

Mr. RICH. Such an arrangement could be made to give them the right to vote, but I think it is wrong to give to the residents of the District of Columbia the right to control this 10-mile square area which was set aside for the use of the Government of the United States.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. POAGE. Anyone who has once established a residence in Texas can remain a citizen of the State of Texas and go anywhere in the world to make a living, yet vote in Texas so long as he keeps his residence in Texas. We have a poll tax in Texas, and I am very proud of it. If he is willing to pay his poll tax in the State of Texas, he can vote there. We have several thousand people who come up here to make a living, but we are glad to have them vote in Texas so long as they pay a poll tax in Texas.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Does not the gentleman know that as a matter of fact when a person attempts to vote in a State where he does not actually reside that he is violating the law?

Mr. RICH. I am sure the gentleman from New York knows that I do not want anybody to disobey any law. I want the people to be able to do it legally, honorably, and as a matter of right.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For personal services of teachers and librarians in accordance with the act approved June 4, 1924 (43 Stat. 367–375), including for teachers colleges assistant professors in salary class 11, and professors in salary class 12, and including $12,200 for health and physical education teachers to supervise play in schools of the central area bounded by North Capitol Street on the east, Florida Avenue on the north, the Mall on the south, and Twelfth Street on the west, $7,170,140: Provided, That teaching vacancies that occur during the fiscal year 1940 wherever found may be filled by the assignment of teachers of special subjects and teachers not now assigned to classroom instruction, and such teachers are hereby made eligible for such assignment without further examination: Provided further, That the average of the salaries paid librarians in the public schools shall not exceed the average of the salaries paid employees performing the same grade of work in the Free Public Library.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language appearing in lines 19 to 23 on page 24 reading as follows:

Provided further, That the average of the salaries paid librarians in the public schools shall not exceed the average of the salaries paid employees performing the same grade of work in the Free Public Library.

Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is legislation on an appropriation bill and is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, this is clearly a limitation upon an appropriation and is in order under the rules.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PARSONS). The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair has read the language indicated by the gentleman from Wisconsin and feels that it is a limitation.

The point of order is overruled.

The Clerk read as follows:

Qualified Federal personnel is authorized with the approval of the head of the Federal agency concerned, and upon request by the Board of Education, to give lectures in the public schools on the effects of alcoholic liquors and narcotics.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in connection with the remarks made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania relative to the right of residents of the District of Columbia to vote, would the gentleman be kind enough to answer a question?

Mr. RICH. I will do my best.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am certain of that, and do it well. The gentleman does not contend that because we have a Constitution it is wrong for us ever to attempt to amend it, does he?

Mr. RICH. No, indeed.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Did the gentleman believe in the amendment which gave to the women of the United States the right to participate in government?

Mr. RICH. I think that the women of this country should have the right to participate in government.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am pleased that you believe that was a proper amendment.

Mr. RICH. I think any changes that we need and that are necessary for the benefit of the people of the country should be brought about in the way provided in the Constitution, by vote of the people of this country themselves.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Was the gentleman in favor of the constitutional amendment which brought about prohibition in this country?

Mr. RICH. That is water over the dam. We are now drinking beer.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am certain the gentleman is sincere in his remarks, and I always respect him.

I discuss this matter at this time only to bring out the fact that certain arguments have been made here today to the effect that it is wrong to attempt to amend the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. RICH. Not if the proposed change is submitted to a vote of the people of the country. If they themselves want to change the Constitution, if they want to give the people of the District of Columbia the right to control this area and run it themselves, their word is final.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The resolutions which have been introduced in the Congress of the United States, in the House and in the Senate, respectively, call, of course, for action by this Congress and then go to the States for ratification. I call attention to the fact that the procedure in connection with this matter is entirely right and proper.

I make the prediction this afternoon on this floor—and I know that predictions are dangerous—that some day in the United States—I do not know whether it will be in my lifetime or not—but some day the residents of the District of Columbia will be given the right to participate in the affairs of government. They will have the right to vote for President of the United States, the right to vote for Representatives in the Congress, and perhaps the right to participate in local government. That is a fundamental part of the processes of our democracy.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will all of the colored people have the right to vote like they have in Wisconsin, or will they be denied that right like they are denied the right to vote in dozens of States below the Mason and Dixon's line?

Mr. RANDOLPH. As the gentleman knows, I come from the State of West Virginia, which is a Commonwealth south of the Mason and Dixon's line. The colored population of West Virginia has the right to vote, and may I say that I am happy many of them are voting Democratic.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. There are a great many States below the Mason and Dixon's line that chase the colored voters away from the polls when they do want to vote.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman's observations may be true in certain parts of the country, but in West Virginia the prerogatives of the colored voters are well taken care of and they are exercising honestly this high right of citizenship.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. May I say to the gentleman from West Virginia that I do not desire to keep anyone in this country from voting. However, I believe the founders of our country made a wise provision when they tried to set apart a section of the country in which the Federal Government could own and control its own buildings and keep its operations free from interference by the citizens of various States. It was a wise thing to do this. I think we are making a mountain out of a mole hill by turning this right over to the citizens of the District of Columbia when it rightfully belongs to the citizens of the United States. However, if the citizens of the United States are willing to make the District of Columbia a place that may be owned and controlled by the citizens of the District of Columbia, then I have no objection and I think the people of the entire United States would have the right to say so. I question very much if the gentleman will ever live to see the day when the citizens of the United States will do this.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I think it does some good to discuss these matters on the day when the District of Columbia appropriation bill is being considered, as well as on other legislative days.

At first we had but few residents of the District of Columbia; however, I call the attention of the membership to the fact there are residing in the District of Columbia between 650,000 and 700,000 men and women today. Conditions have changed. There are heavy burdens of municipal government which face the men and women who reside here today which did not face the people here 125 or 150 years ago.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional fire-fighting apparatus, including two passenger automobiles at not to exceed $650 each, and two chiefs' automobiles, at not to exceed $1,100 each, $55,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for such purchases except by the exchange of fire-fighting apparatus and motor vehicles to be replaced.

Mr. SCHWERT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language on page 39, following the word "Provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's point of order comes too late. The Clerk read through to the Health Department provision.

Mr. SCHWERT. This is under the Fire Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order must be made at the end of the paragraph. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Gallinger Municipal Hospital: For personal services, including one chief medical director at $7,500 per annum, and two associate medical officers at $3,200 per annum each, to be appointed without reference to civil-service requirements, and including not to exceed $2,000 for temporary labor, $606,840, of which $26,760 shall be available for out-patient relief of the poor, including medical and surgical supplies, artificial limbs, and pay of physicians: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the care of persons, except in emergency cases, where the person has been a resident of the District of Columbia for less than 1 year at the time of application for admission.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER: Page 45, after line 10, strike out all of lines 11, 12, and 13, and to the first comma in line 14.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, may I say at the outset that no Member of the Congress has a higher regard for the medical profession and no Member realizes more that the members of this profession give perhaps more generously of their time and services than those of any other profession in this country. I call attention to the fact that this bill carries an appropriation for a chief medical officer at a salary of $7,500 and to associate medical officers at $3,200.

As I remarked to a member of the committee when he was making his statement, the Veterans' Administration secures very able men as chief medical officers in their hospitals throughout the United States at a cost of $5,600. We have read a lot in the newspapers during the past few months about the situation at Gallinger Hospital. I have been very much interested in all hospitals, and particularly those in Washington. I make this statement to indicate that I am not one who talks about a thing then does nothing about it.

I have visited Gallinger Hospital several times. A member of my immediate family in the past month has devoted 104 hours of free service to that hospital.

I believe its request for this appropriation is due to an agreement that was recently signed between the District Commissioners and Georgetown University and George Washington University. I have this agreement in my hand and a reading of it will convince anyone that under this agreement we are turning over the control of Gallinger Hospital to the medical authorities.

May I call attention to the fact that a medical school in the United States to be considered an improved medical school must have control of 200 free beds. In my own State we have Yale University, with its medical school, which university contributes $300,000 a year to the maintenance of the City Hospital in New Haven, Conn.

On July 1, last, pursuant to an act of this Congress, there were employed at Gallinger Hospital five resident physicians at a salary of $5,600 each. The record made by those five men is very interesting. Since their appointment the mortality rate has been reduced 20 percent. The average and total number of days per patient spent in Gallinger has been reduced materially since the appointment of this staff. I asked if these five men were to be continued, if there was provision in this act for their retention, and was told this was a continuing appropriation. So, by setting up a chief medical officer possibly to try to coordinate their activities and the activities of the visiting men, we are simply admitting that the superintendent of the hospital is not capable of doing that. I believe the record indicates he is well able to coordinate the activities not only of the resident staff but of the visiting men.

I wish to inject this one thought from the point of view of one who has suffered under the system. You cannot operate a hospital and depend altogether for control on visiting men. It is a rather tragic experience to be prepared on a certain morning for an operation by a visiting man, and then when you are all ready to go over and take the ride, to be told that So and so cannot come today, he has his private patients to take care of, and perhaps have that happen two or three times.

I appreciate the value to Gallinger of visiting men, and I appreciate the services that are rendered by the faculties of George Washington and Georgetown Universities and the services of the men in the District, but I maintain that the control of the hospital should very definitely be in the superintendent of the hospital and in the resident men. I hope this committee will see fit to strike out this appropriation of $7,500 for a chief medical officer and $6,400 for each of two associate medical officers.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. Briefly, what is the gentleman's objection to the addition to the staff at Gallinger Hospital of a chief medical director?

Mr. MILLER. There is absolutely no need of it. I dare say, the person has already been selected in the minds of some people. The salary of $7,500 is exorbitant in comparison with the salaries paid by other hospitals of like size and kind.

Mr. NICHOLS. Is it the gentleman's view that Dr. Bocock should be able to discharge the duties as laid down here for this medical director?

Mr. MILLER. He is the superintendent of the hospital; yes. He should be able to coordinate the activities of his staff of five plus the visiting men, and the control should certainly be in his hands, although it is not under this agreement.

Mr. NICHOLS. What is the agreement?

Mr. MILLER. The agreement to which I refer, as I stated in the record, is an agreement between the Commissioners and the Universities of Georgetown and George Washington. In my opinion, this provision in the bill is simply carrying out the purposes of this agreement.

Mr. NICHOLS. I believe that is surely what it is. I may say to the gentleman I have an open mind on this subject. Does the gentleman's amendment provide for the striking out of the appropriation for the two associate medical officers?

Mr. MILLER. The two associate officers and the chief medical officers. Of course, if this clause is not stricken out and the men are continued in service, I can see no reason why they should not come under the classified civil service.

Mr. NICHOLS. I know the gentleman's wife spends a great deal of time every day at Gallinger Hospital and is tremendously interested in that hospital.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. NICHOLS. I also know, by reason of having been for some time a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the legislative committee, that Gallinger Hospital has always been, to put it mildly, a pain to members of that committee. I thought surely this was an effort to relieve or cure some of the conditions existent at Gallinger Hospital which have given rise to all this complaint. I am frank to say I am convinced that the gentleman, by reason of his interest and his wife's daily activity at the hospital, probably is very much better advised on the subject than I am.

Mr. MILLER. May I say to the gentleman that if we can afford $14,000 more for Gallinger, there is a great deal more need for additional nurses. The employment of three or four well-trained social workers would bring greater benefit and more economy to Gallinger Hospital than can possibly be obtained by hiring an additional director.

Mr. NICHOLS. Then, is it the gentleman's opinion that if we are going to spend this amount of money it would be better to spend it at the bottom rather than at the top of the staff?

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman has put his finger right on the point of the question.

Mr. NICHOLS. I presume the gentleman agrees that something does need to be done at the bottom?

Mr. MILLER. Absolutely.

Mr. NICHOLS. And that the present appropriation is absolutely unnecessary?

Mr. MILLER. Absolutely, in my opinion.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as has been indicated by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS], Gallinger Hospital has been a pain to everyone whose duty it is to handle the affairs of the District of Columbia. We have two well-known medical schools in the District, Georgetown University and George Washington University. It is the duty of these schools to turn out capable medical men. Gallinger Hospital is a hospital with a large number of patients having various types of diseases and it is most useful to these medical schools in the training of students. After all, we must look to the medical schools for the competent physicians of the future. Under the proposal that was incorporated in the bill last year adding full-time resident physicians to the staff at Gallinger Hospital—and I quite agree with the gentleman that they are necessary and that they should be capable men—they were selected and are capable of, and are performing their work most efficiently. In one particular branch the mortality rate has been reduced by 20 percent, so I have nothing but praise for those men. Frankly, I imagine I was more largely responsible for these resident physicians being placed there than any other one man in the House. However, that scheme virtually took away from the medical schools the use of this hospital, and naturally they objected because they felt it should be used not only for the cure of the sick but to enable future physicians to become acquainted with all types of disease.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Let me finish my statement and then I shall be pleased to yield.

So there was quite a snarl and hearings and so on over it. This committee was very fortunate in being able to get the heads of the schools, Dr. Marvin and Father O'Leary, and Dr. Ruhland together so we would work harmoniously in the running of this hospital in the future.

Two of the men against whose appropriation the gentleman is objecting are night physicians. If you take them away there will not be any physician in the hospital at night except internes. Certainly, common humanity demands that these two men stay there.

Now, in order to give the Director of Health in the District of Columbia somebody who is a medical man of great capacity, so that the Director of Health in the District of Columbia would have absolute control over the hospital and so that the medical schools would not have control over it, it was decided and agreed that there should be a chief medical officer out there, and that his salary should outrank that of the full-time resident physicians.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I most emphatically deny the accusation the gentleman has made that anybody has been selected. I absolutely know that that statement is untrue. I know the gentleman made it innocently, but I know it is not true.

If we want this hospital run, and run correctly, and run for the benefit of the poor people who have to accept a charity institution, I think we ought to go ahead and try to work out the plan that has been formulated by these medical men and see if we cannot run Gallinger Hospital as it should be and as all of us want it operated. This is only for a year, so let us try out the experiment. These men, Father O'Leary, Dr. Marvin, and Dr. Ruhland, the Director of Health of the District, are outstanding men in their lines and I believe they are honorable men, and I do hope there will be no objection to trying out at Gallinger Hospital this experiment which we are proposing here today.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I asked the chairman of the subcommittee to yield to me a moment ago in the hope the gentleman would answer a question.

Mr. COLLINS. Pardon me.

Mr. NICHOLS. I do not mind having time taken out of my time for the chairman of the subcommittee to point out to the committee what the duties of this medical director will be.

Mr. COLLINS. The duty of the medical director will be to have general supervision of the medical activities of this hospital and his salary will not be in excess of the salary of the man who is in charge of Walter Reed or the Naval Hospital, both of which hospitals have a smaller patient load than Gallinger Hospital.

As a business administrator, the present superintendent of the hospital is an excellent man, but I am at the same time convinced, and everybody else who has had anything to do with this question is convinced, that we ought to have along with him a full-time man who stands high in the medical profession.

Mr. NICHOLS. I just yielded to the gentleman to answer my question.

Mr. COLLINS. I thought I was doing that.

Mr. NICHOLS. Now, Mr. Chairman, the statement of the chairman is that this gentleman's duties will be to have general supervisory control over the hospital. Why, Mr. Chairman, a distinguished man, a distinguished physician brought here from another city, Dr. Ruhland, of whom I know nothing except by reputation, was employed as Director of Health. Is that right?

Mr. COLLINS. This is only a small part of his activities.

Mr. NICHOLS. In addition to that, Dr. Ruhland could not administer the affairs of this hospital because of his other duties, so a Dr. Bocock, an eminent physician, I am advised, thoroughly capable and qualified, was hired, I presume, at an adequate salary as superintendent of the hospital.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. COLLINS. Dr. Bocock has been there for a great many years.

Mr. NICHOLS. All right, but he is a competent physician, is he not, and a man of high standing and qualifications?

Mr. COLLINS. I stated a minute ago I thought he was a good administrator.

Mr. NICHOLS. Well, is he not a good doctor?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not know anything about his medical ability.

Mr. NICHOLS. All right, Mr. Chairman, I am willing to take the record. It is Dr. Bocock's reputation that he is a good physician and he is superintendent of this hospital. I am frank to say I know very little about hospitals. I have never been a patient in one and, thank goodness, few of my immediate family have, so I know very little about them, but if Dr. Bocock is earning the salary that he is paid, then he ought to be able to run that hospital not only as an executive but as a physician, and not only is he there but this medical department has another man who is the business manager. I am speaking of Dr. Hayden.

Mr. COLLINS. No; that job has been eliminated, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. NICHOLS. All right; but anyway, Mr. Chairman, I certainly want to see anything done that will make Gallinger Hospital a better institution. The good women of this town, ever since I have been here, have been complaining about the conditions at Gallinger—not the personnel, if you please, but the conditions that exist there. I was hopeful this year the committee would bring in a recommendation which would provide better facilities, more nurses, something that would make Gallinger a better hospital; and it is my judgment and my opinion, based upon the statement of the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut—who, I submit, has been more interested in Gallinger Hospital than any Member of this House, not even excepting the distinguished chairman of this subcommittee——

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. COLLINS. The number of employees at Gallinger Hospital is increased by this bill by 82.

Mr. NICHOLS. Under this appropriation bill?

Mr. COLLINS. Under this appropration bill; and, together with W. P. A. workers, if we cut down the number of patients at Gallinger Hospital to the extent we believe we will do by adding to the appropriations for medical charities, we will have more than one employee at Gallinger Hospital for every patient we have there.

Mr. NICHOLS. All right.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman ask the chairman of the committee why or how the appointment of these five doctors interferes with the training of students, a statement having been made to that effect?

Mr. NICHOLS. Of course, that is asking him, as the gentleman well knows, and as everybody else does who is conversant with the thing, as to whether or not Gallinger Hospital should be controlled by a board of doctors appointed for that purpose or by doctors who are associate doctors, instructors in the different medical institutions. I do not know about that, and I do not think that should concern this amendment. I do not think it should creep in here, but I do agree with the gentleman that $7,500 for another executive for Gallinger Hospital will not cure the situation at Gallinger Hospital; and if this committee has brought in a sufficient number of employees, like nurses, employees in a subordinate position, attendants, to correct the situation in Gallinger, I am for that, and that is fine, but I do not think we ought to set up out there another high-priced executive to improve the conditions in the hospital, because I do not think it will do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the subcommittee. I would like the gentleman in charge of the bill to state whether this new medical director position, carrying a salary of $7,500 per annum, is to be filled by appointment under the merit system under the civil service or by political appointment under the spoils system?

Mr. COLLINS. Oh, there will not be any political appointment in it. As far as I am concerned, it can be civil service or in any other way. I do not believe you will get the best medical men to go into a competitive civil-service examination.

Mr. NICHOLS. There are no doctors under civil service.

Mr. COLLINS. Oh, yes; they are. If you are going to have it that way, I would not have any additional medical officers out there at all.

This is the best proposition made by anybody that has anything whatever to do with that hospital. If it is the wish of the Congress to strike this down and let bad conditions continue out there, well and good, but this is what the medical schools, the Director of Public Health of the District of Columbia, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, after many conferences, have decided is the best thing to do, and if it is done, Gallinger Hospital will go along in an orderly and efficient way. As far as I am concerned, I want to try it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor, and I will now yield to the gentleman in charge of the bill to answer the question. I do not yield for a speech. Does this bill provide that if we create this new medical director position, which pays $7,500 a year, that the appointment to fill the position will be made under civil-service provisions?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not know how he will be selected, and I do not care, so long as we get a good man. I am not interested in anybody and I do not propose to recommend anybody. I do not know anybody who is capable.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, it is clearly evident from the answer of the distinguished gentleman who has charge of the bill that we are about to create a new Government position carrying a salary of $7,500 a year and that that position will be filled under the political spoils system.

Mr. COLLINS. And I want to emphatically deny the truthfulness of the gentleman's statement in just as strong language as parliamentary usage will permit. It will take very much more than the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin to make me believe that the person appointed to this position will be a political appointee.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor, and now I ask the gentleman to point out the language under existing law, or language in this bill, which will make it mandatory that the position be filled in compliance with civil-service requirements.

Mr. COLLINS. I imagine the job will be filled by Dr. Ruhland, the Public Health Commissioner of the District of Columbia, with the collaboration of the presidents of George Washington University and Georgetown University, and I do not believe that they are political spoilsmen.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has answered my question and has admitted that this position will be filled without considering the civil-service merit system. As far as the oration delivered by the gentleman in charge of the bill is concerned, which would seem to indicate that he believes we cannot get qualified people for this position under the civil service, let me remind him that disabled war veterans in this country are hospitalized in Government institutions, for which the entire medical personnel has been appointed under the civil service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Without addressing myself to the controversy in connection with the new medical officer for Gallinger, and only taking cognizance of the debate here as it concerns conditions at Gallinger Hospital, I wish it to be said for the RECORD that the House District Committee, through a subcommittee on public health and hospitals and charities, under the leadership of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BATES], held what I consider to be painstaking and thorough hearings in connection with an investigation of conditions at Gallinger Hospital. I call upon my colleague [Mr. BATES] at this time, if he will be so kind, to tell the members of this committee what our findings were in connection with that matter.

Mr. BATES of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, we worked very hard on the investigation. We had before us the president of both institutions, Dr. Ruhland and Dr. Bocock, and it was our conclusion that there should be $200,000 more appropriated this year than last year to employ additional nurses, nurses' aides, and attendants. I do not think we had any evidence that would indicate that we needed this $7,500 man. That seems to have been worked out after we had our hearings.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the subcommittee has stated in brief manner what was brought before our committee in the way of testimony. I feel it is only right for the membership of this committee to know that the conditions which we found and which we then represented to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] and his subcommittee have in part been remedied.

Mr. COLLINS. More than in part. More than $200,000 has been added for the hospitalization of indigent persons.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman direct his answer to the question of mine, as to the number of nurses who, by the transfer system, will actually be given to Gallinger for work at that institution?

Mr. COLLINS. The number of employees, nurses, attendants, and so on, has been increased by 82. In addition to that, we have almost doubled the appropriations for private hospitals in the District of Columbia, so that those private hospitals in the future can take a still larger load of indigent persons. When they take this larger load, when the law is changed on mental cases so that a shorter time will elapse before incarceration in St. Elizabeths Hospital, that will reduce the daily average population by over 100 cases at Gallinger. With more beds for tuberculosis patients at Glenn Dale, we figure we are going to work the Gallinger Hospital load down to about 600. That will give us more than one nurse, attendant, or employee for every patient that we have at Gallinger Hospital.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I have said several times, and I repeat, that the District of Columbia Committee is only a legislative committee, and when we come here in the consideration of the District appropriation bill, we only exercise our individual rights and preferences in any matter. But for the RECORD I do repeat that your Committee on the District of Columbia, aside from its legislative duties, is doing its duty in investigating conditions in the District of Columbia, that we believe should be corrected or amended.

In connection with Gallinger Hospital, after a most painstaking and thorough investigation, we made recommendations and went before the Subcommittee on Appropriations, and I am certain that because of our work a number of the recommendations which the gentleman [Mr. COLLINS] brings in are included in this bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I think the committee headed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BATES] did a remarkable piece of work. Their recommendations are sound, and that committee should be complimented for a mighty able piece of work.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield for Mr. BATES to answer.

Mr. NICHOLS. Was this $7,500 job a part of the recommendations that your subcommittee made?

Mr. BATES of Kentucky. It was not.

Mr. NICHOLS. Well, let us have that clear.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

The question was taken; and on a division, there were ayes 10 and noes 29.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase, installation, and modification of electric traffic lights, signals, and controls, markers, painting white lines, labor, maintenance of non-passenger-carrying motor vehicles, purchase (including exchange) of a 1-ton truck at not to exceed $870, printing and binding, postage, telephone service, heating, electricity, repairs to equipment of inspection stations, continuation of the operation of parking meters on the streets of the District of Columbia, including maintenance and repair, not to exceed $7,500 for such expenses as the Commissioners, in their discretion, may deem necessary in connection with traffic safety education, and such other expenses as may be necessary in the judgment of the Commissioners, including not to exceed $32,000 for the operation and maintenance of electric traffic lights, signals, and controls, $136,250, of which not less than $25,000 shall be expended for the purchase, installation, and modification of electric traffic-light signals and $1,000 shall be available for directional signs: Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation contained in this act shall be expended for building, installing, and maintaining street-car loading platforms and lights of any description employed to distinguish same.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NICHOLS: On page 71, in line 1, after the second word "of" appearing in said line, and before the word "parking", insert the following words: "the present."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROWN of Ohio: On page 71, after line 16, insert a new sentence, as follows:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to designate, reserve, and properly mark appropriate and sufficient parking spaces in the streets adjacent to all public buildings in the District of Columbia for the use of Members of Congress engaged on public business.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I will accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. RAYBURN] having resumed the chair, Mr. PARSONS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5610) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next the gentleman from Maine [Mr. OLIVER] may address the House for 25 minutes after the completion of the legislative program for the day and any special orders that may have been entered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter written by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, with regard to pending legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from the Assistant Administrator of the Farm Security Administration with regard to the work of that Administration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KEE and Mr. MURRAY asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech I made before the League of Republican Women in Washington.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial appearing in the Janesville Daily Gazette, edited by our colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOLLES].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article by Paul Mallon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the late J. D. Ross, administrator of the Bonneville project, and to include therein three brief editorials.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short article appearing in a recent issue of the magazine Month.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short article on the use of riders on legislative bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Can the majority leader, who is now presiding as Speaker pro tempore, tell us what the program will be for next week?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As far as has been determined, Monday will be District day and there will be a number of bills from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

I may say that since talking with the gentleman this morning the gentleman from North Carolina, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, told me that that committee had unanimously reported a bill and that Members on both sides were anxious to have the bill considered and thought it could be called up by unanimous consent. I told the gentleman from North Carolina that if he would consult with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], and with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], and they were agreeable, that after the District bills were disposed of on Monday they might submit a unanimous-consent request to bring that bill up.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I understand that is perfectly agreeable to the Republican members of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then that will be done.

On Tuesday it is probable that the housing bill will be called up under a rule.

On Wednesday the calendar will be called under the Calendar Wednesday rule. The call rests with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. They have some legislation ready. If the housing bill is disposed of on Tuesday, then it is planned to bring up a bill from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, providing for stabilization and devaluation, under a rule, which will probably take Thursday and Friday.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by myself at the graduation exercises of the National Police Academy of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, the American people, and especially Members of this Congress, are constantly being coerced and intimidated by hundreds of propaganda agencies in an effort to compel the American people and Members of Congress to take sides in foreign affairs. The proponents of communism and nazi-fascism are insidiously making use of the radio and the press in an attempt to transfer to America the troubles of Europe and Asia in an effort to involve us on one side or the other of their numerous controversies. They have all become so bold as to declare that if an American citizen condemns communism he thereby arrays himself on the side of Hitler and Mussolini, and one who is patriotic enough to condemn nazi-fascism is immediately designated by some as a Communist. To any real, honest, thoughtful, patriotic American nothing could be further from the truth.

As a Member of Congress, I know that I speak the convictions of a vast majority of this House when I say that an overwhelming majority are endowed with a spirit of true American patriotism, and I believe that every Member of this House under his oath condemns and outlaws as foreign to our system of government the entire unholy trinity—communism, fascism, and nazi-ism.

Years before the people of America ever heard of nazi-ism-fascism the influence of bloody communism had manifested itself in America, and all thinking patriots have continually denounced it in no uncertain terms.

Since the rise of nazi-fascism in Europe and Asia, and especially during the last few months, the busy propaganda agencies who seek to involve the people of America in foreign entanglements, have heaped upon our people a barrage of propaganda against nazi-fascism, and due to the intensity of this campaign, I am fearful that the attention of many of our citizens has been diverted from the foul and evil influence of communism, because of the threat alleged to emanate from the forces of Hitler and Mussolini. Because nazi-fascism, for the moment, is claiming the front pages of our newspapers, and the air lines of our radio communication, and because the Russian Communist is apparently taking no active part in the events of the day, we are asked to believe that nazi-fascism is the chief and only menace to the welfare and maintenance of our democracy.

Secretly and cleverly, throughout this land, avowed Communists who have wormed their way into high places in the Government, are now seeking to aline us as allies of communistic Russia, and to identify Communist ideals as part and parcel of our future economy.

The sleek and oily Communist, who has already bored within our institutions, and has already undermined them, cleverly seeks to build up the picture by continual propaganda, so as to convince the people of America that nazi-fascism and Hitler are the real threat and that we must arm to the teeth and inject ourselves into foreign affairs in order to defend ourselves against the threat of Hitlerism.

The Communist, very cleverly and adroitly, has taken full advantage of the situation and under cover, and behind the shield of the passions of the people of America, is continually and secretly impregnating our democratic institutions with Communist ideas, while we are being blinded to the fact by the continuous anti-Hitler propaganda.

I want to call the attention of this Congress, and the people of America, to the fact that abhorrent to our sense of justice as have been the recent acts of Hitler, we cannot allow that situation to blind and confuse us, and cause us to give up the fight for one moment against what I conceive to be the greater menace to the welfare of this country that is to be found in the subversive and destructive actions of Communists and their "pink" sympathizers.

While I condemn as foreign to our ideas of democracy the principles of nazi-fascism, and while I condemn the attempt of foreign-inspired bunds or societies who seek to impose their ideas upon us through the dissemination of Nazi-Fascist propaganda and other foreign "isms," yet I want to direct your attention to the fact that no one has as yet accused nazi-fascism in America of inspiring sit-down strikes, sabotage of shipping and industrial plants, and the inciting of industrial riots and labor disputes; and no one has pointed out that the Nazi-Fascist organizations in America have wormed their way into the inner councils of the Government.

I am directing this to your attention because I am convinced that we must not relax for one moment our fight against communism, which is the real threat that we have to meet. I repeat that I condemn both communism and nazi-fascism as being entirely repugnant to the ideals upon which this democracy was founded and which have succeeded in building and maintaining the freest, most advanced, and finest system of government that the world has ever known.

Members of Congress, in the natural excitement incident to the clash rapidly developing on foreign soil, we must not forget that communism is our common and greatest enemy. I say to you that it is my humble opinion that if nazi-fascism is to develop as a serious threat in the domestic affairs of this country it will only be because of a continuation of the threat of communism to take possession of our form of government.

If we would safeguard ourselves against the Nazi-Fascist threat, the safest and best way to defend ourselves at home is to destroy communism and to outlaw communistic doctrine and to rid our country of those who are preaching it by deporting them back to the country whose ideals they continually laud. I repeat that the real, serious threat to our Government and its institutions lies in the insidious activities of Communists and their sympathizers, and that the threat of nazi-fascism will be reduced in this country only in the proportion that we stamp out the threat of communism.

I am happy to note that this House, without a dissenting vote, enacted legislation that would make it a deportable offense for any alien to advocate any change in our system of Government, and I am inclined to believe that the time is here when we must even go farther in legislation and curb the activities of alleged citizens who, hiding behind the constitutional guaranty of free speech and free assembly, continually advocate the destruction of our system of government and the acceptance of communism or fascist-nazi-ism.

I am of the opinion that the thing most vitally needed in America today is a militant, passionate revival of American patriotism. There was a time in the history of this country when the glamorous achievements of the civil, military, and naval heroes of this Nation were constantly being glorified in literature, in history, on the platform, and in the public schools to the end that we were thrilled, as Americans, by the constant recital of their magnificent achievements. There is not a Member of Congress or a citizen of this great Nation, whose bosom has not swelled with pride, and whose heart has not beat faster in harmony with our great symphony of progress, when the achievements of the heroes of the past have been depicted and directed to our attention.

For many years the youth of America were taught to respect and revere the memory of our great national heroes, and our forefathers and early citizens, who, by word and deed have contributed so much to the writing of a great national history. What a sad change has taken place since the smear artists of communism, or some other "ism" have been permitted in this free country to carry on a program designed and calculated to destroy the traditional spirit of patriotism surrounding the character and achievements of our great national heroes, and thus lay the foundation for the complete destruction of our system of government. These agitators carrying on their nefarious work under the guise of alleged historical research, have evidenced a common purpose to break down and destroy the patriotic impulses of the people of America by cleverly assassinating the character of many of our great national heroes, by causing them to be depicted in radio skits, alleged drama, and in contemporary literature as individuals unworthy of continued respect and adulation.

Time will not permit me to depict a long series of incidents that are available to indicate this purpose, but as one concrete evidence of this influence I direct your attention to the volume entitled "Washington City and Capital," published in 1937 under the direction of the Federal writers' project, Works Progress Administration, and printed in the United States Government Printing Office that you and I support and maintain with our contribution of Federal taxes. This work is distributed throughout the country as an alleged authentic history of Washington, the Capital City of the United States, and contains in it, among other things, a section beginning on page 68 thereof, under the heading "The Negro in Washington."

I do not want anything that I shall say to be interpreted as evidencing any ill-feeling on my part toward the Negro or his race, because I am fully aware of the splendid contribution that the Negro race has made, under very adverse circumstances, to our national life, and I have the most charitable feeling toward the thousands of fine, honest, hard-working, decent Negro citizens of this country who are continually adjusting themselves under adverse circumstances, and who are loyal to the institutions and traditions of this Government.

I am not insensible to the magnificent achievements of many members of the Negro race, and I recall as a boy the words of wisdom which I frequently had an opportunity to hear coming from the lips of that great Negro—Booker T. Washington. I have repeatedly been thrilled by the magnificent voice and artistry of Marian Anderson, and Paul Robeson, and I have been inspired by the poetic magnetism of Paul Dunbar, and I applaud the outstanding achievements of the Negro race in the field of athletics and sports. But, I say to you, Members of Congress, that in this discussion it makes no difference to me what an individual's outward color is if his or her heart and soul is red, exemplifying the flag of communism which has been drenched by the blood shed by millions of innocent people in Russia and Spain, I shall condemn and denounce them equally, because they are all part and parcel of the same vicious circle.

In reading the article referred to in this so-called guide book I was impressed by the very obvious spirit running through it, which indicated, to me at least, an attempt on the part of the writer to portray the oppression of the Negro by the white race and thereby stimulate a feeling of class hatred. To me this insidious propaganda, whether it be right or wrong, can only result in stimulating racial intolerance.

In this article, found on page 75 of this guide book, there appears a statement which to me supports this conclusion. The writer states, in referring to the disposition of hundreds of slaves who were freed after the Civil War:

> They were settled in Arlington in a place known as "Freedmen's Village," very near a tract left by George Washington Parke Custis to his colored daughter, Maria Syphax.

My attention was challenged immediately to this vicious statement, and I have deemed it advisable to pause for a moment and consider the full import and meaning of that statement. Any reasonable interpretation of the statement must force the conclusion that George Washington Parke Custis was the father of a colored daughter, and that he recognized his paternity by leaving a tract of land to his colored daughter in his last will and testament.

Although born and reared in the State of Wisconsin, I considered this statement to constitute a distinct attempt to defame the character and integrity of George Washington Parke Custis, and in considering the import of this statement, I was forced to realize that George Washington Parke Custis was the stepgrandson of George Washington, the grandson of Martha Washington, and the son of George Washington by adoption, thus making him a member of the first family of our country.

I recalled that George Washington Parke Custis was taken into the home of George and Martha Washington at Mount Vernon and reared under the careful guidance of the Father of our Country, and I envisioned the picture of the father of this young man dying in the arms of George Washington as a result of fever contracted in the service of the Continental Army, and the last request being made to the Father of our Country to take this young man and to educate and care for him. George and Martha Washington assumed this responsibility and contemporary history unequivocally records that as a result of their benign influence George Washington Parke Custis was the idol of his grandmother and the hope of his foster father, and the restraint placed upon him by his guardians was only that which might save him from habits of dissipation or licentious association. Contemporary writers have indicated that it was small wonder that as a result of this influence that George Washington Parke Custis should reach his early manhood with the loftiest ideas of honor and propriety of conduct; that his unswerving integrity was almost as marked as that of Washington himself; that he abhorred the licentious vices of other young men of his age, while his patriotism and generosity, which he breathed in with the atmosphere of Mount Vernon where he lived, were manifest throughout his entire life.

I further envisioned the fact that when young Custis came into his inheritance and married that he established a home at Arlington and as a result of a very happy union there was born a child who grew into beautiful womanhood and who was sought by many of the prominent young men of the day. Among those seeking the hand of the daughter of George Washington Parke Custis was Lt. Robert E. Lee whom she selected as her mate from among a large number of suitors, and thus, through this marriage, George Washington Parke Custis further became identified with the history of this Nation as the father-in-law of Robert E. Lee. The home which he built at Arlington, and which later was occupied by his daughter and General Lee, has been preserved by the people of this Nation as a national shrine to which thousands of American citizens make a pilgrimage to receive inspiration and revival of patriotic impulse.

With this historical background before me, and with the knowledge of the character and reputation of George Washington Parke Custis, you can well imagine what a shock I received to read in an alleged accurate historical document, published by the United States Government, under a Federal Writers' Project—Works Progress Administration project—that this great national character was the father of a colored daughter begotten as a result of a licentious relationship with a Negro slave in the employ of his grandmother, Martha Washington.

This statement so impressed itself upon me that I deemed it my duty as a Member of Congress to investigate, and I directed a letter to the head of the Works Progress Administration, Col. F. C. Harrington, who referred my communication to Mr. Henry G. Alsberg, director of the Federal Writers' Project under W. P. A. I desired to know the authority for this statement already referred to. My letter was answered by Mr. Alsberg under date of February 21, 1939, and he stated: "The authority for the statement you refer to has been taken from E. Delorus Preston, Jr."

I immediately contacted the Congressional Library and requested information as to E. Delorus Preston, Jr., and was advised that he is not listed in the public catalog as the author of any works in the Library, nor in the union catalog as the author of any works in any subscribing library, not in the cumulative book index as the author of any book or separately published article, nor in the several encyclopedias and Who's Who—either white or colored.

In view of the fact that I consider this statement to be a gross libel upon the character of one of our first citizens, I pursued the inquiry further and requested information as to who E. Delorus Preston, Jr., is or was, and I was advised by Mr. Alsberg that Dr. W. H. Siebert, of Ohio State University, would vouch for the historical reputation of Mr. Preston and his work. I immediately wrote Dr. Siebert for information, and on February 27 received a letter from Dr. Siebert, who is a professor of history at Ohio State University, in which he states as follows:

> Mr. Preston is a colored man whose parents live in Washington. He graduated from Howard University in June 1918, and taught in Negro schools in the South for several years. He entered the Graduate School of Ohio State University in September 1931, his major subject being history. He wrote a dissertation on the underground railroad for fugitive slaves through a section of Ohio. My recollection is that he has published other articles in the Journal of Negro History. I recommended him to various positions in Negro colleges, etc., since that time, but have no record of the places he may have filled.

In view of the very scant background of Mr. Preston as a historical writer, I deemed it advisable to pursue the inquiry a step further, and upon inquiry being made as to who directed the preparation of this material, I was informed by Mr. Alsberg that—

> The final writing of the essay was done by Prof. Sterling Brown, and the book was prepared under the editorial direction of Joseph Gauer, a member of my staff.

I ascertained that Prof. Sterling Brown was a member of the history staff of Howard University, which, by the way, is supported and maintained in large measure by appropriations made by this Congress; and on March 1, 1939, I directed a letter to Prof. Sterling Brown at Howard University, which has not been returned to me as the writer, in which I asked him to furnish me with the source of information upon which he based the assertion in reference to the character of George Washington Parke Custis. Despite the fact that the institution which he serves is, as already stated, supported in large measure by the taxpayers of the United States, I, as a Member of Congress, have not as yet received a reply to my letter and, despite repeated telephone calls, I have been unable to contact the gentleman.

It therefore appears—and I think the conclusion is inevitable—that here is a concrete evidence of a deliberate plan to put into a Government-sponsored publication a statement that could have no other purpose or effect than to tear down and destroy the character and reputation not only of one of the first citizens of Virginia but, by innuendo, the family and household of George and Martha Washington and Robert E. Lee.

Mr. Speaker, I made a further investigation and I found that the statement that—was absolutely false. I did find by going through the Congressional Globe, which contains much valuable material on this question, that due to the character of this man who abhorred slavery, when he came into his inheritance from his mother, he did receive a considerable number of slaves. This young woman Maria Syphax was the daughter of two old retainers who had served his grandmother and George Washington for many, many years. When she passed to him as part of his inheritance, he manumitted her or freed her, and upon her marriage he gave her a little 17-acre tract of land upon which she lived at or near the present Arlington.

> They were settled in Arlington in a place known as Freedmen's Village very near a trace left by George Washington Parke Custis to his colored daughter Maria Syphax—

I cannot conceive that this statement, based as it apparently is, upon the mere assertion of a young Negro student trained in Howard University, and the facts disputed by tremendous evidence to the contrary to be found in the Congressional Library, is but another evidence of the insidious influence that communism has prompted in cultivating racial prejudice. Here, in a Government-sponsored publication, with no authority other than the mere word of E. D. Preston, Jr., is a gross libel upon the character and reputation of one of our first citizens. This libel has been achieved and is being disseminated by the Works Progress Administration through the instrumentality of the Federal Writers' Project, a project that has cost the taxpayers of this Nation since the summer of 1935 through February 28, 1939, $15,016,632, and the net result of the effort is the dissemination of libelous misstatements and untruths that are continually found in these volumes, which are produced at your expense and mine.

As a citizen of America and as a Member of Congress, I do not intend to sit by and see this besmirching effort continued by appropriating funds which make it possible to scatter such libels to the four corners of the world.

I want to enter my vigorous protest, and I call upon you to protest, and I say to you that, regardless of whether the allegation is true or false, the effort to publicize the fact more than 100 years after a man's passing only merits reproach and condemnation; and I want to say to you Members of Congress that I hang my head in shame when I contemplate that this Government, which I love and respect, should knowingly, by its own actions, countenance and permit such a thing to take place.

I know, and you know, that the heart of America is sympathetic to the effort of the decent colored people of this country to increase their opportunity for racial betterment; but I say to you that when they and we allow the influence of communistically inspired agitators to write libels such as the one I have just referred to, they are serving no useful purpose in the advancement of racial progress. A Communist is a Communist, be he black, white, brown, or yellow; and we, as Americans, be we white, brown, or black, should unite in a common purpose to stop this menace wherever it raises its head in order that we may preserve the integrity and a continuance of the spirit of passionate American patriotism that must at all times be kept burning fiercely if the ideals and traditions of our democracy can be preserved. [Applause.]

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHEPPARD). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain excerpts from testimony before the Ways and Means Committee in the social-security hearings and certain private and other documents that were introduced at those hearings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my time to address the House at this time may be extended 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK]?

There was no objection.

THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT—OLD-AGE RESERVE ACCOUNT

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, the Ways and Means Committee has been engaged in holding hearings on proposed amendments to the Social Security Act since February 1. The question of aid to the aged and old-age benefit payments has been very largely and broadly discussed. One subject which has been covered by nearly every witness of prominence who has appeared before us has been the question of the size and the management of the old-age reserve account established under title II of the Social Security Act. Section 201, which establishes the account, reads as follows:

SEC. 201. (a) There is hereby created an account in the Treasury of the United States to be known as the old-age reserve account hereinafter in this title called the "account." There is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the account for each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, an amount sufficient as an annual premium to provide for the payments required under this title, such amount to be determined on a reserve basis in accordance with accepted actuarial principles, and based upon such tables of mortality as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time adopt, and upon an interest rate of 3 percent per annum compounded annually. The Secretary of the Treasury shall submit annually to the Bureau of the Budget an estimate of the appropriations to be made to the account.

(b) It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to invest such portion of the amounts credited to the account as is not, in his judgment, required to meet current withdrawals. Such investment may be made only in interest-bearing obligations of the United States or in obligations guaranteed as to both principal and interest by the United States. For such purpose such obligations may be acquired (1) on original issue at par, or (2) by purchase of outstanding obligations at the market price. The purposes for which obligations of the United States may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are hereby extended to authorize the issuance at par of special obligations exclusively to the account. Such special obligations shall bear interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum. Obligations other than such special obligations may be acquired for the account only on such terms as to provide an investment yield of not less than 3 percent per annum.

(c) Any obligations acquired by the account (except special obligations issued exclusively to the account) may be sold at the market price, and such special obligations may be redeemed at par plus accrued interest.

(d) The interest on, and the proceeds from the sale or redemption of, any obligations held in the account shall be credited to and form a part of the account.

(e) All amounts credited to the account shall be available for making payments required under this title.

(f) The Secretary of the Treasury shall include in his annual report the actuarial status of the account.

There has been much loose and some intemperate talking and writing about this account and about its management. It is for the purpose of informing the House as to just what this account is that I have asked for time today. It is not my intention to discuss the size of the reserve account, or whether one is desirable or necessary, though I think one is. Those questions I shall reserve for a later date. It is the soundness of the account and the propriety of its method of operation, which has been impugned, that I propose to cover. Some of this loose talking has gone so far as to charge slippery bookkeeping, embezzlement, misappropriation, or theft of the taxes that have been levied on a pay-roll basis under the Social Security Act and paid by employers and employees into the Treasury. Some statements and some articles which have appeared in newspapers and magazines might ordinarily be dismissed lightly, but when a large sum of money is involved, it is important that the operations of the account, no matter what its size may later by determined to be, be made understandable to the public, and particularly to those who are paying the taxes under the act. As matters stand now, the purpose of the old-age reserve account has not only been misunderstood but it has been misrepresented, possibly in some cases deliberately misrepresented for political purposes.

I had hoped and I still hope that we may consider amendments to the Social Security Act in committee and on the floor of the House in a nonpartisan way in order to solve the many problems necessary to bring social justice and security to our people in their declining years by making such changes in the law as experience in the administration of it makes desirable or necessary. I must confess this hope has been somewhat weakened on account of numerous questions asked by certain members of the minority in committee, which seem to indicate a studied desire to make the public believe that their future security is in doubt because the amounts credited to the old-age reserve account have been invested in United States Government bonds.

For instance, at the request of one of the minority members of our committee an article by Mr. John T. Flynn, a popular journalist, which appeared in Harper's Magazine for February 1939, was inserted in the RECORD, apparently for the purpose of discrediting the old-age reserve account. The article was headed "The Social Security Reserve Swindle." I do not know that Mr. Flynn wrote the title for his article.

Sometimes authors do not. But in the course of the article he not only stated, I quote:

No government would dare attempt to support itself out of a pay-roll tax if it honestly proclaimed its purpose—

And—

It is a grave mistake to associate taxes with pay rolls—

And further—

It (the Government) will not pay adequate pensions—this is the point I aim at—because all the time it will be spending the old-age insurance premium for other things—paying the ordinary expenses of the Government.

The whole article is an attack on the reserve system, although I must say that after he had thrown the last brick, as follows:

The idea of a reserve should be taken out of the act altogether—

Mr. Flynn did try to carry some water on the other shoulder by adding:

Of course, some reserve is inescapable—a billion or two, or even three or four. But the question would be well worth considering whether investment of such reserves ought not to be limited to the open bond market to prevent a political government from exploiting the reserve as part of the public fiscal policies.

In the words of Dr. J. Douglas Brown, professor of economics at Princeton University and chairman of the Advisory Council on Social Security, 1937–38—

In attacking the reserve he (Mr. Flynn) poured out the baby with the bath. That is, he overwhelms his point and attacks many other points concerned with the social-security program for which he does not give adequate proof of his position. For example, he attacks pay-roll taxes in one sense only, without adequate justification.

It may be added that Dr. Brown does not personally believe in a large reserve, so his condemnation of the attack is the more noteworthy.

Subsequently Mr. Flynn appeared in person before the committee and recanted, as far as pay-roll taxes were concerned. In his opening statement, as found on page 1695 of the unrevised committee print of the hearings, Mr. Flynn stated:

I am not opposed to the pay-roll tax, because I think that is the proper way to finance old-age benefits. I think the people should pay for their old-age benefits so that those who receive them may receive them without the imposition of charity.

But he did insist that if there were to be any reserve at all, it should be very small, simply to take care of cash payments and intervals when there was a discrepancy between collections and benefits. He stated in response to questions that he did not believe that it was right or sound to invest trust funds handled by the Government in Government bonds. Subsequently, Mr. Flynn, in an article appearing in the Washington News, and no doubt elsewhere, repeated this contention by extending his opposition to the manner in which the old-age reserve account has been invested to opposition to similar investments of such funds as the civil-service retirement funds and many others.

When as able a writer as Mr. Flynn uses intemperate language in connection with a perfectly legitimate financial operation of the Government sanctioned by long-standing practices it is bad enough. It disturbs the confidence of the public to have their country's obligations called I O U's, to have the old-age reserve account designated as empty, as it was shown in a cartoon appearing in the Washington Post of April 3, 1939, that bears every evidence of being boiler-plate stuff sent out from some political agency, when it is actually earning interest on moneys appropriated to its credit annually by Congress. Worse, though, have been statements made by Members of the House, which I would like to say had been thoughtlessly made were it not evident that they have been deliberately prepared. I refer to the joint political statement issued by the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee following the able presentation by Secretary Morgenthau of certain suggestions with reference to the size of the reserve account. Only the other day, March 27, on the floor of the House the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] sought recognition for 1 minute and, under leave to revise and extend his remarks, made a good many charges and statements which I contend are not supported by the facts. Personally, I am very fond of the gentleman from New York, and he is an able and useful member of the Committee on Ways and Means, but on this occasion for some strange reason he allowed his partisan prejudice and passion to overcome his usual sense of fairness and judgment. Perhaps the fact that on that day the Supreme Court had overruled his judgment on a question of constitutionality might have caused him to become upset and bewildered. In his remarks he chided the able and beloved chairman of our committee [Mr. DOUGHTON] for failing to note that he had introduced a concurrent resolution in 1937 on the subject of social security. I wonder if instead of Chairman DOUGHTON'S memory failing that of the gentleman from New York might not be faulty, as I do not recall nor do the records of the committee disclose that he ever sought or asked for its consideration by the committee. Even on April 14, 1937, when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] moved that the Ways and Means Committee proceed to hold hearings on 13 bills and proposals relating to old-age assistance the gentleman from New York did not ask that these hearings include his resolution. Possibly he was content with having made a political gesture.

The country also well understood the political gesture concontained in the Republican platform of 1936 to which he referred by administering the most overwhelming defeat any party or candidate ever suffered in our history. Political gestures will not deceive. The people remember that it was the present Democratic administration under the leadership of President Roosevelt which inaugurated and placed upon the statute books the most ambitious humanitarian social-security program ever undertaken.

I would not suggest that the gentleman from New York lacks intelligence to understand the principles underlying the Social Security Act. I would suggest, however, that he apply his undoubted mental gifts along more constructive channels rather than making wild assertions having no basis of fact. In his closing statement he stated:

This whole unsavory mess, this spending of trust funds for boondoggling and election expenditures, would never have occurred had the original recommendation of the President's Economic Council been followed.

The gentleman knows, for he put it in the hearings himself at page 1104, that that proposal provided for a reserve which on the actuarial estimates of the committee would be maintained at about $15,250,000,000, which would have likewise been invested in Government obligations, the proceeds of which would have gone into the General Treasury, and would thereafter be appropriated by Congress for Federal activities. The implication about election expenditures is not only uncalled for but a purely partisan effort to create an unfavorable public attitude not so much toward the account as toward social security as a whole. Yes; if confidence in the administration of the account can be destroyed, the whole old-age benefit system will ultimately feel the ax.

He continued:

Instead of adopting a wise, honest, straightforward policy, a rubber-stamp group listened to the persuasive appeal of the President to set up a fake reserve. The possibility of obtaining $1,000,000,000 to spend as political whim or caprice might suggest was as irresistible to the New Dealers as cheese is to a lot of ravenous rats.

I was amazed that the gentleman would make such an intemperate and scathing attack on a large majority of the Members of the House, especially Members of his own political party. I am equally amazed that none of his colleagues on that side of the aisle has seen fit to make reply thereto. An examination of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 19, 1935, discloses that those who voted for this unwise, dishonest policy, who were rubber stamps, who voted to set up what he terms a fake reserve, whom the gentleman from New York characterizes as "ravenous rats" were 372 Members. Of this number 74 were Republicans, practically 75 percent of the total Republican membership at that time. I shall not take the time to read the entire list of these 74 Republicans whom the gentleman characterizes as "ravenous rats", but will only mention a few of them. Among this list I find such stalwart Republicans as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], the gentleman from New York [Dr. CROWTHER], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART], the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF], all now colleagues of the gentleman from New York on the Committee on Ways and Means. In addition I find the names of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], the minority leader, the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT], the Republican whip, and the former minority leader, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]. This impugning of the intelligence or motive or honesty of his own Republican colleagues goes likewise to the sincerity and honesty of those outstanding men and women who constituted the Advisory Council on Social Security appointed by Senator HARRISON, of Mississippi, Senator BYRD, of Virginia, and Senator VANDENBERG, of Michigan, of the Senate Special Committee on Social Security, and the Social Security Board in May 1937. The members of this council for whose personnel and appointment Senator VANDENBERG claims considerable credit, in their final reports state:

On April 29, 1938, the council unanimously approved the following statement concerning the financing of the old-age insurance system.

"The Advisory Council on Social Security has been giving much attention to the problem of financing the old-age-insurance system. The council recognizes that there are other ways of financing the old-age-insurance system which upon further study may prove to have greater advantages than the present system. The entire subject, however, is so complex that the council is not yet prepared to express a final judgment as to the method of financing which would be most desirable from a social and economic standpoint.

"Upon one aspect of the general problem the Advisory Council deems it advisable to make a public statement at this time to allay unwarranted fears. This relates to the method of handling the funds collected for old-age-insurance purposes.

"In accordance with the statutes, the taxes collected from employers and employees under title VIII of the Social Security Act are paid into the general fund of the Treasury. While not expressly provided by law, it was understood at the time of the enactment of the Social Security Act that amounts equivalent to the entire proceeds of these taxes, less costs of administration, shall be appropriated annually by Congress to the old-age reserve account. Congress has not only done so, but to date has appropriated somewhat more to the old-age reserve account than has been collected from the taxes levied in title VIII of the Social Security Act. Thus, up to the end of March 1938, $636,100,000 had been invested to the credit of the old-age reserve account and $577,447,532 had been collected from the taxes for old-age insurance purposes.

"A proportionate part of the moneys appropriated by Congress to the old-age reserve account has been turned over periodically to this account and has been immediately invested in special securities of the United States Government bearing 3 percent interest.

"The special securities issued to the old-age reserve account are general obligations of the United States Government, which differ from other securities of the Government only in the higher rate of interest they bear and in the fact that they are not sold in the open market. The issuance of such special securities is not only expressly authorized by law but is required by the provision of the Social Security Act that the old-age reserve funds are to be invested so as to yield an interest return of 3 percent.

"The United States Treasury uses the moneys realized from the issuance of these special securities by the old-age reserve account in the same manner as it does moneys realized from the sale of other Government securities. As long as the Budget is not balanced, the net result is to reduce the amounts which the Government has to borrow from banks, insurance companies, and other private parties. When the Budget is balanced, these moneys will be available for the reduction of the national debt held by the public. The members of the Advisory Council are in agreement that the fulfillment of the promises made to the wage earners included in the old-age insurance system depends upon, more than anything else, the financial integrity of the Government. The members of the council, regardless of differing views on other aspects of the financing of old-age insurance, are of the opinion that the present provisions regarding the investment of the moneys in the old-age reserve account do not involve any misuse of these moneys or endanger the safety of these funds."

That is the opinion of the outstanding men and women who constituted the Advisory Council, and I insert herewith a list of their names in the RECORD:

REPRESENTING EMPLOYEES

G. M. Bugniazet, secretary, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers of America, and president, Union Cooperative Insurance Association, Washington, D. C.

Harvey Fremming, president, Oil Field, Gas Well, and Refinery Workers International Union, Fort Worth, Tex.

John P. Frey, president, Metal Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor, Washington, D. C.

Sidney Hillman, president, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, New York, N. Y. (Lee Pressman, general counsel, Congress of Industrial Organizations, Washington, D. C., served as alternate for Mr. Hillman.)

George W. Stocking, University of Texas, Austin, Tex.

Elizabeth Wisner, past president of the Association of Schools of Social Work, New Orleans, La.

Edwin E. Witte, University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.

It must be recalled, as I said before, that the investment of trust funds in special Government securities was no innovation under the Social Security Act. Hence by attacking this method of investment the gentleman from New York impugns the motives and action of the late Republican Secretary of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon, who in administering the adjusted-service certificate fund for World War veterans and the civil-service retirement fund invested the funds in special Government obligations. I point out to you that those securities bore 4-percent interest as against the 3 percent payable on the special obligations issued to the old-age reserve account. Since the late Mr. Mellon is no longer here to defend his handling of these reserve accounts and since no Member on the minority side has seen fit to defend his action I shall insert at this point the same extracts from Secretary Mellon's annual reports to Congress in 1925 and 1926 giving an accounting and his views on the investment of these funds in Government securities that I placed in the hearings before our committee.

CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT AND DISABILITY FUND

Section 11 of the act as amended authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to invest from time to time in interest-bearing securities of the United States or Federal farm-loan bonds such portions of the civil service retirement and disability fund as in his judgment may not be immediately required for the payment of annuities, refunds, allowances, etc., and that the income derived from such investments shall constitute a part of such fund for the purpose of paying such annuities, etc.

Where, under the provisions of section 12 of the act as amended, gross or net returns are made of funds previously contributed by employees, accrued interest is required to be included therein, computed at the rate of 4 percent per annum compounded on June 30 of each fiscal year.

The same consideration as to savings and simplified procedure are accordingly now applicable to investments made by the Treasury for account of the adjusted service certificate fund appearing in the article in the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1925, page 118.

The following procedure, therefore, was prescribed effective July 1, 1926:

(1) Investments for account of the fund will be made in special issues of Government obligations bearing interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum payable on June 30 in each year, or on earlier redemption, as follows: Certificates of indebtedness, civil service retirement fund series; Treasury notes, civil service retirement fund series. Such obligations will be issued in denominations of $100,000 or multiples thereof, and at par as of dates of issue.

(2) The Treasurer of the United States will act as disbursing officer for the investments in the same general manner as at present, making payments therefor from approved advances from the fund upon accountable warrants. The Commissioner of Accounts and Deposits will be responsible for the investments from available funds and the Commissioner of the Public Debt for issuance of the securities and safe-keeping thereof in the same general manner as is done with the adjusted service certificate fund. Credits to meet monthly requisitions of the disbursing clerk of the Bureau of Pensions for authorized payments will be provided from current deductions and through redemptions of the special issues, after such deductions or the proceeds of the redemptions have been covered into the Treasury to the credit of the fund.

ADJUSTED SERVICE CERTIFICATE FUND

On January 2, 1925, the Secretary of the Treasury made the following statement regarding the adjusted service certificate fund provided for in the Adjusted Compensation Act:

"The Adjusted Compensation Act provides for an appropriation on the 1st of January in each year to the adjusted service certificate fund of an amount, based upon the American Experience Table of Mortality, which, if kept invested at 4 percent compounded annually, would be sufficient to pay the face value of the adjusted-service certificates upon their maturity in 20 years or upon prior death of the veteran. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to invest and reinvest the moneys in the fund in interest-bearing obligations of the United States and to sell these obligations for the purposes of the fund.

In order that the fund shall be sufficient to meet the payments in accordance with the plan outlined by the act, it is necessary that the moneys be invested when received and kept invested until payments out of the fund are required. No purpose is gained by the investment of the fund in securities returning more than 4 percent compounded annually, since this would simply mean an accumulation in the fund of more money than was necessary to meet payments. On the other hand, if less than 4 percent compounded annually is received, the fund will be insufficient to meet all payments to become due. There are no Government securities in the hands of the public bearing interest payable annually (as distinguished from semiannually) and none which give the exact return of 4 percent annually on their market price. During each year the fund will be drawn upon to pay certificates matured on account of death, and this continuous liability will require almost daily realization of cash, which can only be obtained by the sale or redemption of securities in the fund. The greater part of the fund will remain intact until the maturity of the certificates at the expiration of 20 years, at which time cash will have to be realized. Since the securities then in the fund will probably not be suited to existing market conditions, the likely solution at that time will be for the Treasury to redeem the securities in the fund with the proceeds of new securities which will meet the market then existing. It is apparent, therefore, that the purchase for the fund of any of the present outstanding Government securities will not meet the exact requirements of the fund and will probably be unsatisfactory for sale when, on maturity of the certificates, the major fiscal operation to provide cash must be undertaken.

If the Treasury were in the Government bond market on the 1st of January in each year to buy $100,000,000 of its securities, the purchases could not be made in one day, nor could such a large order be filled without unduly increasing the market price which the fund would have to pay. If, also, the Treasury in the course of the year was required to sell securities to provide the fund with cash, the tendency would then be to depress Government securities on the market. So if the practice of buying and selling on the open market were used, the Treasury would be continually purchasing on a high market.

The $100,000,000 called for by the Adjusted Compensation Act of January 1, 1925, was authorized by the deficiency appropriation bill signed December 5, 1924. The Secretary of the Treasury has invested this sum in $50,000,000 par amount 5-year special Treasury notes, dated January 1, 1925, and payable January 1, 1930, and in $50,000,000 par amount special Treasury certificates of indebtedness, payable 1 year from date, with right in each case of certain prior redemptions. Both securities call for interest at 4 percent per annum, payable annually, or on the prior redemption of the security. It is expected that these special certificates of indebtedness will be redeemed from time to time during the year to provide the fund with cash with which to meet current obligations; that any such certificates remaining unredeemed at the expiration of the year will be refunded into other certificates or into notes; and that at the maturity of the notes, they will be refunded into securities of similar tenor until payments become due on the maturity of the adjusted-service certificates some 20 years later.

This method of handling the adjusted service certificates fund has the following advantages:

1. The securities exactly fit the actuarial requirements which are by law made the basis for fixing the appropriations for the fund.

2. The bond market is not disturbed by a purchase of a very large block of securities early in January and by a subsequent continuous pressure for the sale of securities to provide cash for the fund throughout the year, the effect of which would be buying on a high market and selling on a low market.

3. Commissions to brokers on the purchase and sale of Government securities are saved.

4. It is not necessary to borrow on December 15 (the usual financing day nearest January 1) additional cash and carry this cash, with a consequent loss of interest, until it can be invested in Government securities on the market after the first of the year when the appropriation becomes available.

5. Cash demands of the fund can be immediately satisfied by the redemption by the Treasury of the special certificates of indebtedness and the whole plan has great flexibility.

6. When the adjusted-service certificates mature about 1944, the Treasury will be in position to do the necessary financing to meet the conditions then existing without being compelled to sell a lot of miscellaneous Government securities perhaps unsuited to the market and to the Treasury's program.

The working of this plan can best be illustrated by its first operation. On December 15, 1924, the Treasury, in addition to any money to purchase investments for the fund, required $225,000,000 to carry it through to the next financing period in March 1925, and sold for cash about $225,000,000 of its 4-percent bonds of 1944–54. As of January 1, 1925, the Treasury sold to the fund $100,000,000 of its special certificates of indebtedness, making total sales in December and January of $325,000,000 of Government obligations. This was the plan actually used. Had the other method of applying the appropriation to the purchase of securities in the open market been adopted, the Treasury would have had to sell for cash $325,000,000 of its bonds on December 15, 1924, and consequently would have lost the interest of $100,000,000 from December 15 until the securities for the fund could be bought on the market after January 1, 1925. There is, as will be noted, no difference in the final amount of public debt incurred between the plan of selling special securities direct to the fund and the plan of using the fund to buy securities in the market. In either case the fund would hold $100,000,000 of Government obligations and there would be $100,000,000 less of such obligations in the hands of the general public. It seems quite clear, therefore, that the sale of the special securities direct was the only feasible way of handling the investment required by the Congress.

Nor are these the only cases where funds, trust or otherwise, have been invested by the Secretary of the Treasury or the Treasurer of the United States in Government securities. The total as of December 31, 1938, of Government securities and Government-guaranteed obligations held as investment in trust funds, which by law are under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury or the Treasurer of the United States and in accounts under the control of certain governmental corporations which are handled through the Treasury Department, was $4,988,048,906. In addition thereto there were investments in Federal farm-loan bonds, Philippine, Puerto Rican, and certain other bonds sufficient to bring the total amount to $5,032,381,290. I insert herein a table showing the exact investment in these funds, as previously placed in the committee hearings.

Government securities, by issues, and other securities held as investments (1) in trust funds which by law are under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury or the Treasurer of the United States and (2) in accounts under the control of certain governmental corporations and agencies the investments of which are handled through the facilities of the Treasury Department, as of Dec. 31, 1938

It is not enough to call attention to the fact that misstatements and misrepresentations have been made. I regret them, but there is always the opportunity open to every Member of the House to carefully study the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee when they are in final form and to learn from the record, which is a comprehensive one, just what the true facts are. At this moment I merely want to call your attention to some of the errors that those who are attacking the present law have fallen into from a substantive standpoint, the chief of which are the nature of the reserve account set up and the failure to realize that the pay-roll taxes are not earmarked for any special fund.

The taxes which are levied on pay rolls are paid into the general fund of the United States Treasury. They are no different from taxes collected on customs or excise taxes.

It has been charged that these moneys have been spent for purposes other than the payment of benefits to the aged. These moneys were never earmarked for the aged and they never were intended by the Ways and Means Committee to be so earmarked. They are just as much subject to congressional appropriations as any other tax money.

Title II of the act deals with the benefits and the manner in which the money to pay benefits shall be accumulated in the old-age reserve account. When money is appropriated to the account by Congress the excess over the amount needed for paying current benefits is to be invested in special obligations of the United States bearing 3 percent interest. At the time the act was passed it was felt that the ultimate cost of the old-age insurance system would be about 9.35 percent of the estimated pay rolls in 1980. And let me tell you that 1980 was not taken as a year blindly out of the air; 1980 is the year when those young men and women who were 21 when the insurance system started will become 65 and become entitled to their old-age payments, and this is the year in which the old-age insurance system will reach its maximum peak load.

The tax on employers would raise 3 percent, the tax on employees 3 percent, and the interest on the Government obligations, including reinvested interest in the early years, would account for the other 3.35 percent. That is the reason for the requirement in the law that these obligations bear 3-percent interest. If they do not bear that rate or if no interest-bearing reserve is set up the tax rate on employers and employees must be much higher in the latter years of the system than is provided for in the present act.

The payment of this interest, however, should entail no new taxes in addition to those which would have had to be levied without the reserve, since the same interest would be payable to private holders of the debt if the old-age reserve account had not displaced borrowings of similar amount from private investors. Therefore, it is very misleading to intimate that the interest payments are a totally new burden which would require new taxes for their payment.

Title VIII, the tax title, was written separately for the deliberate purpose of avoiding any question of constitutionality when the act should come before the Supreme Court. There still is, in my opinion, and in the opinion of the best judicial minds in this House, more than a doubt as to whether Congress has any power to levy a tax for a specific benefit. The money must go into the General Treasury first.

In section 201 of the Social Security Act, quoted earlier, Congress is authorized to appropriate to the old-age reserve account, which is established therein, an amount sufficient annually to provide for the payments required under title II, basing that amount on a reserve basis, in accordance with accepted actuarial principles. The popular notion that the law provides for a reserve of the excess tax payments with interest thereon probably arose from the fact that the original recommendation of the Committee on Economic Security contemplated a reserve of that kind. The bill that our committee actually presented to the House, and which was enacted into law, was very different. Instead of an old-age insurance fund into which the proceeds of the pay-roll taxes are to be paid, we set up an old-age reserve account, which is not connected with title VIII taxes in any way. The act does not provide that title VIII taxes shall be appropriated to the old-age reserve account. On the contrary, it expressly authorizes Congress to appropriate money enough to pay the costs of the benefits under title II, computed on an actuarial basis. It was never anticipated that Congress should each year appropriate to the old-age reserve account the yield of the taxes in title VIII. An examination of the report of our committee and of the act itself definitely establishes this.

It can be seen, therefore, that the reserve which has been made the basis for the attacks before our committee and elsewhere is not the actually contemplated or existing reserve. In other words, most of those who have written or spoken on this subject simply have not realized the difference between what they are talking about and what the act provides.

Under the Social Security Act, the old-age reserve account serves two purposes. First, it gives the public an accurate picture of the liabilities of the Government as to future old-age benefits. Secondly, its very existence encourages Congress to make annual appropriations sufficient to meet the currently accruing liabilities. It is contemplated that Congress will make these appropriations whether the yield of taxes under title VIII is greater or less than the amount necessary to meet them. If Congress fails to do so, the Secretary of the Treasury is required to call attention to the unprovided-for liabilities in his annual report to Congress.

If we merely appropriate enough money to the old-age reserve account to meet current disbursements without disclosing what the accruing liabilities are, we might truly be accused of slippery bookkeeping. The adoption of such a system might result in the undisclosed Federal debt or its promised obligation to the aged, exceeding the acknowledged debt.

It is alleged that the account will reach a sum of $47,000,000,000 eventually, and much has been made of this allegation. However, there is not one economist or businessman who has appeared before us who has not testified that this figure is wholly mythical, and the consensus of opinion is under no circumstances, even under the present rate of taxation and the present method of accumulating the account, that the fund will ever approach that amount. The $47,000,000,000 figure is derived from a table placed in the Senate hearings on the original Social Security Act of 1935. The estimates of population and life expectancy used by actuaries in calculating this table were figures of the 1920s. We now realize that by 1980 there will be between 13,000,000 and 15,000,000 annuitants in the old-age insurance system as compared with an estimate of 6,000,000 annuitants made by actuaries in 1935. Actuaries then assumed that there would be 26,000,000 people in the old-age insurance system at the outset and 35,000,000 people by 1980. Actually by the end of the first year of tax collections 38,000,000 people had social-security account numbers, and about 32,000,000 had wage credits. It is obvious, therefore, that the huge reserve that has been talked about will never actually develop.

As I said, it is not my purpose, however, to discuss what the size of the reserve should be, for we have had very conflicting testimony before the committee as to what is really needed to protect the system. What I have been concerned about is the use of mythical figures such as these to scare the public. Actually the reserve fund in existence will be $1,172,000,000 by the end of the fiscal year. Certainly not an undue amount to have on hand to cover contingencies in a Nationwide system of old-age insurance.

Not content with scaring the people about the size that the fund will ultimately reach, efforts are being made to undermine the confidence of the people in the security of that reserve; such efforts ought to be resented by everyone who desires to protect the good name and the credit of the Government. As to the soundness of the policy of investing the account in Government bonds, I quote a few expressions from those who appeared before us, some of whom are against a large reserve, some of whom are for a large reserve, and one of whom proposed to carry a reserve for the employees' contributions and none for the employers.

Dr. Brown, to whom I have already referred, said:

> There has been a great deal of talk about the mishandling of funds and fraud. I think that is an entire misconception. I think the Treasury is performing its functions exactly and with the greatest integrity; it has followed out the law as passed by Congress.

Mr. Gerard Swope, president, General Electric Co., said:

> Much discussion has been occasioned by the estimate of the enormous reserve which will be accumulated in 1980. I have never taken this seriously. * * * Nor have I any fears that these funds in the hands of the Government are in any sense insecure.

Later Mr. MCCORMACK asked him:

> You don't consider that the investment of the money in special obligations is embezzlement, legalistic or otherwise?

Mr. Swope:

> Certainly not. It is a shame to so designate it.

The following colloquy occurred when Mr. Marion B. Folsom, treasurer, Eastman Kodak Co., was on the stand:

Mr. COOPER. I don't understand you to be offering any criticism of the methods employed up to now.

Mr. FOLSOM. No, sir; I do not. I do think there has been an awful lot of criticism of the handling of these funds which has not been at all justified.

Dr. Paul Studenski, professor of economics, New York University, a low-reserve advocate:

I don't conceive that the investment of these funds of the Social Security in Government bonds are merely investments in Government I O U's, or that we need to be very much worried about it. I have deep faith in the future of the credit of the Federal Government despite the extensive borrowing that the Federal Government is engaged in.

Dr. Edwin E. Witte, professor of economics, University of Wisconsin, and formerly executive director, President's Committee on Economic Security:

I will put it this way: That you cannot find among economists or financiers or anybody who understands the operations of finance or governmental finance a person who thinks that these funds are lost to the beneficiaries. They are, on the contrary, the most secure investment you can have.

This unanimity of opinion among those who are familiar with the financial operations of governments in the handling of trust funds ought to silence those who are misrepresenting these operations, and ought to convince those who have not followed this subject closely, that there is no danger to the ultimate payment of the benefits to which contributors will be entitled under title II of the Social Security Act.

I have not been addressing the Members of the House politically, and I wish to emphasize that fact in the hope that our deliberations in the committee and in the House on this important subject will be conducted on a nonpartisan basis.

I invite the members of the minority especially, and I invite all of the Members of Congress to join in a patriotic effort in considering amendments to this great piece of humanitarian legislation entirely free and apart from any hope of political reward or fear of any political punishment. [Applause.]

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCK. I yield for a question.

Mr. CARLSON. The distinguished gentleman from California has given this subject much study. Does the gentleman admit, as he is pleading for nonpartisan consideration of this measure, that there may be an honest difference of opinion as to the reserve fund?

Mr. BUCK. I stated a few minutes ago that we had had a good deal of conflicting testimony about it. I did not want to discuss the size of it today; I was emphasizing more the security of the investment in Government bonds.

Mr. CARLSON. I did not want the gentleman to leave the impression, and I, at least, did not want to get it, that we could not have an honest difference of opinion as to the reserve fund and other items.

Mr. BUCK. I know that when the gentleman from Kansas differs from me he always does so honestly. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CONFERENCE

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, we have in this country a surplus of both raw materials and manufactured products to market which our Government at great expense to the taxpayers is endeavoring to move through the channels of international trade under the handicap of an unworkable system of international exchange. It is apparent and generally admitted that this medium of international exchange money is not functioning in financing our foreign trade, with the result that in many cases we are forced to resort to barter with foreign countries and are placed under a serious disadvantage in competing for foreign markets for our surplus products, particularly in South America.

In an effort to relieve the situation and place our international trade, particularly with the countries of the Western Hemisphere, on a sound and stable basis by eliminating the inequalities of foreign exchange and establish a stable monetary base for the currencies of the several countries of the Western Hemisphere it is apparent that our Government in cooperation with the governments of the Western Hemisphere can with advantage enter into an international agreement to standardize the coinage of the several nations to maintain the integrity and stability of international commitments and promote the general prosperity by the freer movement of goods in international trade. Such a monetary plan was successful under the agreement entered into by the nations of the so-called Latin union—France, Italy, Belgium, Switzerland, and Greece—when the money of these nations was standardized and made interchangeable.

Mr. Speaker, to revise, broaden, and apply the monetary plan that proved successful under the Latin union, I urge the Congress to pass a resolution requesting the President to call an international monetary conference in an endeavor to effectuate the policy of the United States under the provisions of the law placed on our statute books and never repealed—United States Code:

SEC. 311. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to continue the use of both gold and silver as standard money, and to coin both gold and silver into money of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value, such equality to be secured through international agreement, or by such safeguards of legislation as will insure the maintenance of the parity value of the coins of the two metals, and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts. And it is hereby further declared that the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed to the establishment of such a safe system of bimetallism as will maintain at all times the equal power of every dollar coined or issued by the United States, in the markets and in the payment of debts. (Nov. 1, 1893, c. 8, 28 Stat. 4.)

SEC. 312. Whenever the President of the United States shall determine that the United States should be represented at any international conference called by the United States or any other country with a view to securing by international agreement a fixity of relative value between gold and silver as money by means of a common ratio, between these metals, with free mintage at such ratio, he may appoint five or more commissioners to such international conference, and for compensation of said commissioners, and for all reasonable expenses connected therewith, to be approved by the Secretary of State, including the proportion to be paid by the United States of the joint expenses of any such conference, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated. (Mar. 3, 1897, c. 376, 29 Stat. 624.)

SEC. 313. The provisions of sections 146, 313, 314, 320, 406, 408, 411, 429, 455, and 751 of this title and sections 51, 101, and 178 of title 12, banks and banking, are not intended to preclude the accomplishment of international bimetallism whenever conditions shall make it expedient and practicable to secure the same by concurrent action of the leading commercial nations of the world and at a ratio which shall insure permanence of relative value between gold and silver. (Mar. 14, 1900, c. 41, 14, 31 Stat. 49.)

I submit, Mr. Speaker, it is clearly demonstrated on every side that our monetary system and the existing arrangements for financing international business is unworkable and it is absolutely necessary that our Government call an international monetary conference and use its influence to standardize the coinage of the several countries as basis for sound currencies and stable international business relations. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution authorizing the President to call an international monetary conference may appear at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, the joint resolution to which I refer is as follows:

Joint resolution to promote international trade and eliminate the inequalities of foreign exchange and provide for a sound currency and establish a stable medium of exchange between the countries of the Western Hemisphere and effectuate the declared policy of the United States as set forth in the act of November 1, 1893 (28 Stat. 4), and the act of March 3, 1897 (29 Stat. 624)

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to call an international monetary conference of the representatives of the nations of the Western Hemisphere to meet one or more commissioners to be appointed by the President, to represent the United States at a place and time appointed by the President, for the purpose of entering into an agreement to standardize the coinage of the nations of the Western Hemisphere, to regulate the weight, fineness, title, and form of their gold and silver coins, with the unlimited coinage and legal tender of both gold and silver at a ratio to be fixed by international agreement.

SEC. 2. In order to carry out the provisions of this joint resolution there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, not to exceed the sum of $100,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SMITH of Washington, for today, on account of important official business.

SENATE

FRIDAY, APRIL 7, 1939

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 6, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Reverend James Shera Montgomery, D. D., Chaplain of the House of Representatives, offered the following prayer:

Out of the depths of our being, Almighty God, we thank Thee for the gospel of love which poured itself in all fullness on Calvary's brow. In it is the revelation of the Father's heart which makes the whole world akin. We unveil the cross and behold infinite love struggling for infinite expression; we thank Thee that in the glory of the gloom there is mercy beyond our pain. In the valley of humiliation and death, we kneel to Thee, O Christ, and glorify Thy memory. Oh, here may we learn to serve and give, gather love to live and die. Thou art the music that knows no discord, the beauty that suffers no blemish, and the love that touches no limit. We rejoice that, through Mary's holy Child, there is a place where no eye weeps and no heart bleeds. Harken, gracious Lord:

Let us lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, who, for the joy that was set before Him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.

In the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Thursday, April 6, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 5287. An act relating to the importation of distilled spirits for consumption at the New York World's Fair, 1939, and the Golden Gate International Exposition of 1939, and to duties on certain articles to be exhibited at the New York World's Fair, 1939; and

H. R. 5610. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	King	Pittman
Andrews	Donahey	La Follette	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Downey	Lee	Reed
Austin	Ellender	Lodge	Reynolds
Bankhead	Frazier	Logan	Russell
Barbour	George	Lucas	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Gerry	Lundeen	Sheppard
Bilbo	Glass	McCarran	Shipstead
Bone	Green	McKellar	Smith
Borah	Guffey	McNary	Stewart
Bridges	Gurney	Maloney	Taft
Brown	Harrison	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Hatch	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Burke	Hayden	Murray	Townsend
Byrd	Herring	Neely	Truman
Byrnes	Hill	Norris	Vandenberg
Capper	Holman	Nye	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Holt	O'Mahoney	White
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Overton	Wiley
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] is detained from the Senate because of illness in his family.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are unavoidably detained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the annual convention of the New Mexico Cattle Growers Association at Clovis, N. Mex., protesting against the present method of negotiating reciprocal-trade agreements with foreign nations, and urging that all future reciprocal-trade agreements be ratified by the Senate of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens of Birmingham, Ala., praying for the enactment of the so-called Wagner-Van Nuys-Capper antilynching bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for an appropriation of $150,000,000 for the Works Progress Administration program, as recommended by the President, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Workers Alliance of San Francisco, Calif., Mack Posey, president, praying for an appropriation of $150,000,000 for the Works Progress Administration program, as recommended by the President, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, War Department, transmitting copy of a resolution adopted by the National Assembly, Commonwealth of the Philippines, endorsing the recommendations of the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

Mr. BARBOUR presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of New Jersey favoring the consolidation into one act of the several Federal estate-tax acts, with provision therein for allowance as a credit on account of the Federal estate tax of an amount equal to the death duties paid to any State or States, said credit to amount to at least 50 percent of the Federal estate tax assessed, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

(See resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 6th instant, p. 3864, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Oklahoma praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. HOLT presented a memorial of members of the OnIzed Rod and Gun Club, of Fairmont, W. Va., remonstrating against the repeal of the so-called Pittman-Robertson Act, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of Williamson, W. Va., protesting against the construction of a dam and reservoir on New River at Bluestone, W. Va., for the purpose of flood control and hydroelectric power generation, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented resolutions of the City Council of Wheeling and the Board of Commissioners of Ohio County, W. Va., protesting against the construction of a canal from Beaver, Pa., on the Ohio River to Struthers, Ohio, and thence to Lake Erie, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented memorials of members of Local Union No. 5998, United Mine Workers of America, of Premier, and Kenova Local, No. 372, Oil Workers' International Union, of Kenova, in the State of West Virginia, remonstrating against amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution of the Huntington (W. Va.) League of Nations Association, in favor of the United States becoming a member of the League of Nations, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of Triadelphia, W. Va., relating to foreign relations and the preservation of peace, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of the pastor and members of the Bethlehem Baptist Church, of Grantsville, W. Va., praying that religious bodies be exempted from the operation of the social-security system, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of officers and members of Local No. 4021, United Mine Workers of America, of Dakota, W. Va., favoring adoption of the so-called Townsend recovery plan, providing old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of Rev. C. M. McDonald and sundry other citizens of Moundsville; the Handley Baptist Church, of Handley; the Summerville Baptist Church, of Summerville; the Salem Baptist Church, of Zela; the Judson Baptist Church, of Judson; the Flat Top Baptist Church; the Daniels Baptist Church; the Hatchers Chapel Baptist Church; and the Bethel Baptist Church, all in the State of West Virginia, remonstrating against the inclusion of religious bodies under the operation of the social-security system, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of members of the Keyser (W. Va.) W. C. T. U., praying for the prompt enactment of the so-called Neely bill, being the bill (S. 280) to prohibit and prevent the trade practices known as compulsory block booking and blind selling of motion-picture films, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented resolutions of the KY-O-VA Traffic Club, member of the Associated Traffic Clubs of America, the board of directors of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce, and the Huntington Manufacturers' Club, all in the State of West Virginia, protesting against the enactment of legislation providing statutory rate making, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of 15 citizens of Clarksburg, W. Va., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the Railroad Pension Act and also a better disability clause, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution of the Woman's Club of Clarksburg, W. Va., and vicinity, favoring the enactment of Senate bill 1305, to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the following resolution of the House of Delegates of West Virginia, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

House resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to appropriate moneys for the construction of a dam on the Little Kanawha River

Whereas the recurring yearly floods, which inundate the Little Kanawha Valley, bring destruction of property and crops to the extent of millions of dollars and frequently the loss of life; and

Whereas the Government engineers, after a survey, have stated that a dam constructed near the town of Burnsville, Braxton County, W. Va., is necessary as a part of the Federal program of flood control; and

Whereas the completion of this dam is essential to the Ohio River flood control projects and will save the property and protect the lives of those living in the Little Kanawha Valley: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of delegates, That the Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized to appropriate the moneys for the construction of said dam at the present session of Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of the house of delegates be instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States; to the Honorable M. M. NEELY, United States Senator; to the Honorable RUSH D. HOLT, United States Senator; to each Member of the House of Representatives from West Virginia; and to the Honorable William M. LaFon, president of the State Senate of West Virginia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2056) for the relief of the Shipowners & Merchants Towboat Co., Ltd., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 255) thereon.

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 2050) to authorize a sale of the old Carson City (Nev.) Mint site and building notwithstanding the provisions of Joint Resolution No. 18 of February 23, 1865, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 256) thereon.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5219) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1939, and June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 257) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on April 6, 1939, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

S. 60. An act for the relief of Dierks Lumber & Coal Co.;

S. 128. An act for the relief of Fred H. Beauregard;

S. 303. An act for the relief of the Ocilla Star;

S. 463. An act for the relief of the Fitzgerald Leader;

S. 512. An act for the relief of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department;

S. 529. An act for the relief of Margaret Rose Uncapher, Milton E. Uncapher, Jr., and Andrew G. Uncapher;

S. 584. An act for the relief of John R. Holt;

S. 885. An act to authorize and direct the Comptroller General of the United States to allow credit for all outstanding disallowances and suspensions in the accounts of the disbursing officers or agents of the Government for payments made to certain employees appointed by the United States Employees' Compensation Commission;

S. 1174. An act for the relief of Alex St. Louis and Dr. J. P. Lake; and

S. J. Res. 46. Joint resolution authorizing appropriation for expenses of a representative of the United States and of his assistants, and for one-half of the joint expenses of this Government and the Government of Mexico, in giving effect to the agreement of November 9–12, 1938, between the two Governments providing for the settlement of American claims for damages resulting from expropriations of agrarian properties since August 30, 1927.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CAPPER:

S. 2101. A bill for the relief of Wayne E. Saunders; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURKE:

S. 2102. A bill granting a pension to Bert R. Reynolds; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FRAZIER:

S. 2103. A bill to repeal the act entitled "An act to conserve and develop Indian lands and resources, to extend to Indians the right to form business and other organizations, to establish a credit system for Indians, to grant certain rights of home rule to Indians, to provide for vocational education for Indians, and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1934, and the act of June 15, 1935, supplementary thereto; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SCHWELLENBACH:

S. 2104. A bill for the relief of Richard E. Roach; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2105. A bill to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Wenatchee National Forest; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. BYRD:

S. 2106. A bill to provide for the advancement on the retired list of the Navy of Russell H. Quynn, lieutenant, United States Navy, retired; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. REYNOLDS:

S. 2107. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act granting pensions and increases of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and nurses of the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, or the China Relief Expedition, and for other purposes," approved May 24, 1938; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

S. 2108. A bill to amend section 509 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended; to the Committee on Commerce.

(Mr. WILEY introduced Senate bill 2109, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. ANDREWS:

S. 2110. A bill to provide for purchase of fish (including shellfish) and products thereof by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

S. 2111. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service," approved February 15, 1893, as amended; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

DUTY ON ZINC

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, yesterday I introduced a bill and presented a statement relative to a restoration of the duty on silver- and black-fox furs, as it was effective prior to the enactment of the recent trade treaty between the United States and Canada. Today I am presenting a similar measure to restore the cut in the prevailing tariff rates on zinc ores and slab zinc as defined in the new trade treaty with Canada. I believe it is desirable that attention be directed to the prevailing zinc tariff rates because it is more than possible that they constitute a genuine menace to the American zinc industry and its employees. It is apparent also that this menace, with its resultant shut-downs, will seriously curtail production of a product vital to national defense. Moreover, the threatened curtailed operation of our zinc mines means a distinctly uneconomic waste of ore reserves.

A comprehensive brief discussing the zinc problem on a national scale has been presented to the Committee for Reciprocity Information and is readily available to any Member of Congress, so we need not discuss it today. A little over a year ago, on March 1, 1938, the national situation was further discussed in the House of Representatives by Representative WHITE of Idaho. Members of the Senate are undoubtedly familiar with both of these presentations and with the administration viewpoint as indicated in memorandums from the Committee on Reciprocity Information.

My purpose today is not to review these facts, which are already known to us, but to illustrate specifically the effect of the zinc tariff reduction in the State of Wisconsin as it has been outlined to me by Wisconsin authorities.

On November 17 the announcement was made that the tariff on zinc ore and concentrates would be lowered $6 per net ton and on spelter or slab zinc $7 per net ton.

Prior to this announcement for the first time in some months there was a gradual upward trend in the ore and spelter markets. The mine operators in the Wisconsin and Illinois district were greatly encouraged. In my State the largest-scale operator is the Vinegar Hill Zinc Co. They had just completed extensive improvements at their plant at Cuba City. Here they intended to stabilize their mining operations so that their operations would absorb hundreds of unemployed miners in this district. Of course, they did not anticipate a lowering of tariff walls that would permit cheap foreign zinc to enter the United States.

After all, the ore market in the very week prior to the announcement of a tariff reduction established a price of $34 a ton. That was quite a rise from the $27 a ton that had been the price for many months. After the announcement spelter prices dropped $11 a ton and zinc concentrates fell to $29 a ton. Please remember that the old duties on spelter and ore had remained substantially unchanged for 16 years, during which time consumers never paid an exorbitant price for zinc. During those years there were prosperous zinc- and lead-mining operations in 17 States. All of this has been menaced by foreign zinc dumped on the domestic market. In my State this dumping has had an adverse effect on mine production and, of course, on mine employment. It is seriously questionable as to whether ultimately the existing zinc tariff will not result in a complete shutdown of all mining operations in this district.

Here again, as in the fox-fur industry, we have the sorry picture of American workers unable to compete with cheap foreign labor. It is utterly futile to legislate for American wage and hour standards and then subject these standards to foreign competition, where such standards are unknown. Mr. President, I believe that a restoration of the former zinc tariff and the subsequent establishment of more uniform and profitable prices for lead and zinc would result in a renewed activity for the mines of southwestern Wisconsin and northwestern Illinois and would partially solve the unemployment problem in these districts.

I am presenting at this time to be included in these remarks a report reviewing the southwestern Wisconsin mining industry and its possibilities. This report has been submitted to me by a mining engineer from Mineral Point, Wis.

Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce and have printed in the RECORD at this time a bill relative to a restoration of the former tariff levels on zinc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and properly referred, and the bill and report referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2109) relating to the rate of duty on zinc imported into the United States, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any provision contained in any foreign trade agreement entered into under authority of section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, (1) the rate of duty on zinc contained in zinc-bearing ores of all kinds, except pyrites containing not more than 3 percent zinc, imported into the United States after the date of enactment of this act, shall be the rate provided for in paragraph 393 of the Tariff Act of 1930; and (2) the rate of duty on zinc in blocks, pigs, or slabs, and zinc dust imported into the United States after the date of enactment of this act shall be the rate provided for in paragraph 394 of the Tariff Act of 1930.

The report presented by Mr. WILEY is as follows:

A REVIEW OF THE SOUTHWESTERN WISCONSIN MINING INDUSTRY AND ITS POSSIBILITIES

There are three considerations for the review of the mining industry of southwestern Wisconsin. These are: (1) Area, (2) production, (3) employment.

We shall consider first the area, which is composed of parts of the three counties of Iowa, Lafayette, and Grant in Wisconsin, and for practical purposes a part of Jo Daviess County in Illinois, and also a strip 80 miles long in Iowa along the Mississippi River. The main producing area is situated in Wisconsin, and the main production has been from Wisconsin.

The area in Wisconsin is composed of sections where mineralization is known to exist, and those sections where evidences of mineralization are present and geologically possible, but which would require prospecting to determine the extent and commercial value of deposits.

The area by counties follows:

County	Sections	Sections with known ore bodies	Sections with unknown ore bodies
Grant	792	288	504
Lafayette	630	255	375
Iowa	510	240	270
Total	1,932	783	1,149

The total of 1932 sections equals 1,236,480 acres. Then considering that 10 percent of the area, or 123,648 acres, has been worked out and an additional 5 percent, or 61,824 acres, as being composed of streams which have cut down through the zone of mineralization, there are 1,051,008 acres remaining.

Second, let us consider the production of this area. The main ores produced are ores of zinc and lead, and for a time iron sulphide (miner's sulphur). Until 1860 the only ore mined was lead ore. The first recorded production is from 1839–43 for 15,000 tons of lead ore, all of this produced by hand labor. "In 1860, 160 tons of zinc-carbonate ore (dry bone) were shipped. Tonnage increased until 1867, when the first shipment of zinc-sulphide ore (black jack) of about 420 tons was made." [1]

The tonnage of zinc-sulphide ore shipped continued to increase and surpassed the tonnage of both zinc-carbonate ore and lead-ore shipments. "From 1890–1904 this area produced an average tonnage of 8,000 tons of zinc-sulphide ore per year." [2]

In 1914 the production had risen to: [2]

	Tons
Zinc ores	134,362
Lead ores	2,528
Iron-sulphide ore	15,791

The peak production was reached in 1917, with the tonnage as follows: [2]

	Tons
Zinc ores	247,993
Lead ores	6,954
Iron-sulphide ore	28,481

The iron-sulphide market closed in 1920. "The local market at Mineral Point for zinc-carbonate ore closed in 1929 with 161 tons reported shipped as against 488 tons in 1928. The value of the mine output of lead and zinc ores sold in 1929 was $2,435,688." [3] This amount from 783 sections in 3 counties.

[1] Vol. 1, Geology of Wisconsin, p. 641.
[2] Vinegar Hill Zinc Co. records (courtesy of C. E. DeWitt).
[3] Department of Commerce Bulletin—Minerals in Upper Mississippi Valley, 1929.

The total production in tons for zinc, lead, and iron-sulphide ores from 1890–1938, from records available, are as follows: [2] [3]

	Tons
Zinc ore, 1890–1938	2,870,248
Lead ore, 1907–38	95,453
Iron-sulphide ore, 1913–20	178,341

The value for zinc ore at an average price of $12 per ton equals $34,442,976. This value does not take into consideration the tonnage or value from 1860–90. If we make a conservative estimate of an average of 2,000 tons of zinc ore per year for the 30 years from 1860–90, at which time production was 15,000 tons per year, we have an estimated 60,000 tons, valued at an average of $10 per ton, equal to $600,000. This gives us a total value for zinc of $35,042,976.

The value for lead ore at an average price of $40 per ton equals $3,818,120. This value does not take into consideration the tonnage or value from 1839–1907. If one were to make a conservative estimate of 3,000 tons per year for 68 years at an average price of $40 per ton, we have $8,160,000, or a total value of $11,978,120 from 1839–1937.

The value for iron-sulphide ore at an average price of $6 per ton equals $1,170,046.

The total value for zinc, lead, and iron-sulphide ores equals $48,191,142.

We might add this note in regard to production of other ores: There has been produced an estimated 500 tons of copper ore. There has been no copper ore produced or sold since 1877. Approximately five carloads from the vicinity of Mineral Point and the same amount from near Gratiot. The average price was about $5 per ton, and this would amount to $1,250. There has also been sold a small amount of barite ore obtained as a byproduct from zinc or lead mining. Approximately 10 carloads, or 500 tons, at an average price of $8 per ton, equal to $4,000.

The total value for this area of actual and estimated production from 1839–1938 has been $48,096,392.

The third consideration is the employment. At the peak of production in 1917 there were 7,000 men employed in the industry and an additional 5,000 partially dependent upon the mining industry (merchants, blacksmiths, etc.). At the present time there are 250 men employed in the industry and 100 partially dependent upon the industry.

There are several facts worth noting: The production for 1937 was—zinc ore, 19,680 tons; lead ore, 1,170 tons; employment, total and partial, 350 men.

Some of the conclusions which can be drawn are these: If the protective tariff were restored keeping out foreign ore, then additional expenditures for prospecting would be warranted for exploration and development of additional ore bodies. New ore bodies mean additional income for this area, money spent for development, machinery, and employment, reduction in W. P. A. rolls, with resulting decrease in taxes.

PACIFIC TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 745) for the relief of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co., which was, on page 2, line 1, to strike out all after "Provided," down to and including "$1,000", on line 13, and insert—

That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE H. PIERCE AND EVELYN PIERCE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 545) for the relief of George H. Pierce and Evelyn Pierce, which were, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "$7,793.88" and to insert "$7,713.88"; and on page 2, line 2, to strike out all after "Provided," down to and including "$1,000", on line 15, and insert—

That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 246) making a further additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday afternoon, the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] expressed the hope that he might be recognized this morning to continue the speech he was then making. Therefore, the Chair feels that he should recognize the Senator from New York, and does so.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, yesterday when I assumed the floor I explained that I was motivated by a desire to enhance the public welfare and to attain a degree of national prosperity higher than is the case at the present time.

I explained during my remarks that I believed the members of the subcommittee which considered this measure were actuated by motives of sincerity, loyalty, patriotism, and a desire to render justice to our unemployed. Nevertheless, I maintained that those who supported the amendment to be presented by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] were likewise motivated by a desire to enhance our national well-being, and to render justice to the unemployed workers of America who would be the victims of a reduction in W. P. A. appropriations at this time.

I explained that on numerous occasions since the coming of the complex industrial age in which we live, we have enjoyed prosperity and endured poverty, and that particularly since the coming of the World War we have enjoyed prosperity only when abnormal markets were available for our high productivity.

I explained that the European war was an occasion for one of those periods, and that later on our entry into the war provided a market for our surplus goods.

I then went on to relate that prosperity was in eclipse until we began to lend fabulous sums of our money to the peoples of other nations of the world so that they might enjoy public-works programs with the use of our wealth.

When that period was over and we asked for the payment of the debts due us, our economy again went into a tailspin, and only with the coming of the New Deal public works program, in which we appropriated billions for the employment of Americans on American projects, did we again enjoy a prosperous era.

In recapitulation, let me say, as I said yesterday about the period from 1929 until 1933, that for those 3 years the policy of attempting to restore prosperity by reducing expenditures proved a colossal failure. It was a deflation policy, and its persistence again in 1937 is in a marked degree responsible for our present-day condition.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Do I correctly understand the Senator to say that every movement made in this country to reduce expenditures was a colossal failure?

Mr. MEAD. No; the Senator is covering too much ground—not every movement; I was talking about an economy drive in 1930, 1931, and 1932, and I specifically mentioned those years.

Then I said yesterday that the economy drive of that period, coming at a time when we were suffering from an impoverished buying market, a time when unemployment had reached its all-time height, was a colossal error; and even though its friends claimed that it would bring about prosperity, it accomplished the direct opposite. It has done none of the things its proponents claimed it would do. It caused a decline in annual wealth production from a normal of $90,000,000,000 to an approximate $40,000,000,000. It dried up our sources of revenue until income-tax payments dropped from $3,000,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 annually. It caused vast expenditures for unemployment relief. It unbalanced the National Budget to a degree until that time beyond precedent in history; and, therefore, at a time when we were suffering from a lack of consuming power, when industry was laying off men all over the country, for the Government to follow that example was a tragic mistake, and events have proved it to be a colossal failure.

Since that time all over the United States, in fact all over the world, men have been giving time and thought to this question of increasing the consuming power of the people, of bringing about a balance between that which our modern machinery is capable of producing and that which our normal economy should permit of our consuming. There have been inaugurated in this country a number of movements, the ultimate objective of which is to enhance the buying power of our people.

We witnessed in the last few years the efforts of the late lamented Huey Long and his "share-the-wealth" plan, which attracted widespread attention only because of his desire to enhance the buying power of the people of America. Under normal conditions, or in the old days of the crude-tools economy, that movement would not have been given a polite hearing. More recently an effort was inaugurated by Dr. Townsend, the object of which was to buoy up buying power by increasing the pension rates as they applied to our older people. This movement has attained national prominence, all because of the need of buoying up the buying power of our people. The ranking conservative Members of the Senate, oftentimes referred to as reactionaries if you will, are the stanch advocates and champions of this more liberal pension policy. Not only is that effort receiving rapt attention, but it has virtually won the support of 90 percent of the conservative forces of staid old New England.

Father Coughlin initiated another plan to liberalize the Nation's monetary system; and that plan, like both of the preceding plans I have outlined, was welcomed by the people because of the promise it contained to eliminate the stagnation that has destroyed the Nation's economy.

The presence of abundant surpluses of goods, and at the same time the visitation of want and misery and grief upon the communities of America, attracted the attention of the people, and they were anxious to follow a leadership that offered a solution of their problem.

Not so long ago a man rose up in western Canada and for a time little attention was paid to him and to his party; but when the people of Alberta—people who were conservative and liberal, and noted for their patriotism and loyalty to their Government—went to the polls, they swept out all the old parties, and gave over the Government almost in its entirety to Mr. Aberhart and his advocates of the "social credit" system.

Why have these leaders been received by the people of this and other countries? Why is it that Members of the Congress of the United States, in their perplexity to find a solution of the dilemma which confronts us, support either one or the other, and sometimes several, of these various proposals? It is all because of the rapt interest the people take in these movements, in the hope that they will find a solution for our pressing economic ills.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, the Senator is entirely correct in his description of the appeal these programs are popularly making. Will the Senator indicate what happened in Alberta subsequently, and as to whether or not the things which were promised actually developed?

Mr. MEAD. The Senator is not taking his stand with or against any of these propositions, but is merely making the point that they grip the imagination of the people because of the desire to find a solution for our present pressing economic ills. I understand, however, that in Alberta critics of the Aberhart administration have charged it with being a failure, and proponents of the Alberta venture have maintained that interference by or lack of cooperation on the part of the Dominion Government is responsible for the stalemate which exists there. Personally, I do not believe that the plan is a logical way out, and I merely make the point that it is receiving the attention of the statesmanship of the Province of Alberta, just as is the case here in the United States with reference to the several movements which I have mentioned.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I knew the Senator did not intend to endorse or embrace the plan. It just occurred to me that when he is correctly pointing out the popular appeal these schemes have it might be wise and prudent to point out that they frequently prove to be utter illusions in their ultimate consequences.

Mr. MEAD. The Senator intends to point out that in the New Deal recovery program, rather than in the Alberta plan, the right answer to our economic ills is to be found.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator could also point out, in that connection, that the New Deal has some of the illusions to which I refer.

Mr. MEAD. The Senator might be able to do that to his own satisfaction, but the Senator now speaking cannot agree with the distinguished Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am sure we would disagree on that subject. I chiefly had in mind the fact that we started with 12,000,000 unemployed, and still seem to have that number unemployed.

Mr. MEAD. And the chances are that unless we proceed consistently with the program, which I understand the distinguished Senator from Michigan had a great part in aiding and in developing, we will never find the solution to our problems.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LEE. The Senator from Michigan must have in mind that he would deprive the people of the right to try any plan they might want to try because he believes that he would be doing them a favor by denying them the privilege of democracy, namely, trying any plan which appeals to the people. That is what I understand democracy to be, and I believe the Chief Justice of the United States has said that in the end the people will have their way.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Inasmuch as the Senator from Oklahoma is putting his interpretation on my observations, I should like to put my own interpretation on my observations.

I would not foreclose the American people from making any mistakes they want to make; that is their democratic right. I am merely suggesting that they ought to make the mistakes with their eyes open and that both sides of these experimental things should be presented to them.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. DOWNEY. I would suggest that it might be well for the distinguished Senator from Michigan to characterize the illusion when Herbert Hoover, in December 1928, with the coming panic almost immediately in front of us, characterized the period which we were entering as one of ever-increasing, permanent, and abounding prosperity.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should say that he was guilty of about as big an illusion as I know of. But two illusions do not make a right.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, with regard to these so-called illusions, I readily agree that when a man attains the deserved greatness of being a Presidential possibility—or impossibility—it is absolutely essential that he follow the straight and narrow path. But when a man is only aspiring for a seat in the House of Representatives or in the Senate, it might in his judgment oftentimes be compelling, in order that he might aid in the saving of the country, that he adopt one or more of these so-called unsound measures to which the Senator from Michigan has just alluded.

I read a few days ago of a distinguished Senator who is said to be a "possibility," and I agree that he is. Among other things it was said of him that he regretted that on one occasion he embraced one of these illusions and that now that he was a candidate for the presidency, he was following the straight and narrow path.

Let me say that as we pass from a discussion of objectives contained in these efforts by the leaders I have just mentioned, they may not have the key to the solution of our enigma. It is admitted that President Hoover did not have it when the opportunity fell to him. But I am one who believes that in their striking out in the dark for an objective that is right, they will make a contribution to the solution of our difficulties, by pointing out the fundamental bases upon which our economy must be builded. They jar the memories of our recalcitrant reactionaries. They make men think along liberal lines, and they intensify the drive for liberal government, whether it be for liberal pension plans, or a liberalization of our monetary system. In the main and in the end they make a constructive contribution.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Do I understand from what the Senator from New York says that he terms any person "reactionary" in this country who believes that we should stop this huge deficit spending?

Mr. MEAD. I must again disagree with the Senator.

Mr. BRIDGES. I understood the Senator to make that statement or to infer that anyone who is against wholesale spending, or the so-called recovery program—I call it a program of ruination—of the present administration, is a reactionary. I just wondered whether the Senator meant to make that statement.

Mr. MEAD. I cannot fathom the Senator's understanding, because I have just concluded a statement which brands the so-called leaders—and they are leaders—as being liberals; and they disagree in most part with the program of the present administration. Therefore, how the Senator can find any agreement between the understanding at which he arrives and the statement I made is beyond me. I certainly do not hold everyone who disagrees with the present administration as being reactionary. I just mentioned a number of individuals, a number of leaders, who have other plans, which disagree with those of this administration. I listed them, for the Senator's information, as being men of liberal thought.

Mr. President, the majority of the Senate are liberals. Conservatives in this body are in a very hopeless minority. There is not a handful of so-called rigid Budget balancers in the Senate. If we read the roll calls on all the bills appropriating vast sums of money for the relief of this, that, and the other thing, we find that there are about 75 Members of the Senate who at one time or another in recent sessions supported the agricultural subsidy and public-works program, and have on the hustings in their own States embraced liberal pensions policies.

Only a day or so ago a bill passed the Senate returning the cotton impounded by the Government to the cotton producers of the country at a price far below that which the Government has already loaned on the cotton; and it was in keeping with the economic forces at work in the sections suffering as a result of surpluses of cotton that the Senate was actuated in approving that bill.

Time and time again, in voting parity payments, in approving huge expenditures for the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, in supporting W. P. A. and P. W. A. appropriations, and in the advocacy of liberalized social-security payments, a vast majority of the Senate, totaling approximately 75 Members of the Chamber, have taken their stand as liberals. Our difficulty, Mr. President, is getting all Senators to agree at the same time on the same program, and then to continue to be consistent when related bills come before the Senate.

This body is not economy-minded. Some of us may oppose W. P. A., and satisfy ourselves by supporting some other liberalized effort. There are others, however, who recognize the basic fundamental needs of our economy, and consistently carry right on through in support of every measure that has for its objective the solution of this difficult and vexing problem of want and unemployment in the midst of abundance and plenty.

Mr. President, yesterday I pointed out that the Roosevelt administration, instructed and informed by the Chicago Democratic National Convention, made an honest attempt to carry out the mandate of that body, and enacted a program of legislation which had for its attainment a 25 percent reduction in Federal expenditures. Happily, however, the administration, in due time, discovered that the instruction of that convention to cut public expenditures by some 25 percent was an unwise program, and while sweeping cuts were made effective on March 20, 1933, it was not long before the National Recovery Act was under way. It was based upon an altogether different concept, that of increasing the national income by higher wages, enhanced consumption, shorter hours of labor, and wider diffusion of jobs.

Many developments of the past 6 years have proved that to be the wisest course to take, and many a sermon could be delivered on this text in the light of intervening developments.

Just now, unfortunately, the international situation, whose wide repercussions no one can forecast, demands public thought in America, but, in the final analysis, the economic law, like natural law, will go steadily on its way, proving in substance that among nations, as among individuals, we cannot prosper unless our neighbor prospers; and it is to make our neighbor prosperous that we are now supporting the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

I said yesterday that after the present administration changed its policy and inaugurated the national recovery program, our annual income increased from a low of $35,000,000,000 to a high of $69,000,000,000 in 1937. We were on the right road then, but, unfortunately, we were detoured by those who believed that to balance the Budget at that time was the right pathway to take.

I have before me a recent issue of the United States News. It contains, on page 12, a pictogram which explains the month-to-month record of the Federal Government's cash income and cash outgo. It shows that the cash outgo rose rapidly ahead of cash income until the beginning of 1937, and then throughout the year and until the spring of 1938 cash income outdistanced cash outgo, and America was well on the way to a balance in her Budget, and also in her national economy.

The writer of the article goes on to explain that—

> Both Mr. Eccles and Mr. Roosevelt think that the Budget actually can be balanced, but not by the process of reducing the Government's cash expenditures.

And I agree with them.

> Their expressed view is that if businessmen will take advantage of the bulge in business activity caused by the outpouring of Government cash and will wholeheartedly cooperate to carry forward the upturn that this recovery tends to generate, then a balance can be achieved from the greatly increased tax revenues to be realized from the increase in corporation and individual income.
> HEAVIER TAXES AS ALTERNATE SOLUTION
> If businessmen, however, do not increase their investments for one reason or another, or if for any reason real recovery does not take hold, then the President and the Reserve Board Chairman doubt that the Federal Government's Budget can be balanced except through much heavier taxation of income.
>
> Point is made—

And I will say, well made—> of the fact that in the calendar year 1937, with recovery going strong, the Federal Government came within $100,000,000 of achieving a balance in its Budget of cash income and cash outgo. That was the nearest approach to a balance since 1930.

It was unfortunate, it was tragic, that we reduced expenditures at that time, and it was pitiful that private enterprises immediately on that accomplishment laid off thousands and thousands of persons, and added to the relief burden of the local and the National Governments.

Mr. President, much criticism has been made of what is called the boondoggling program of W. P. A. I am one who will admit that in the beginning, and particularly when it was organized to a large degree by State agencies, W. P. A. or its predecessor was guilty of boondoggling and deserved to a marked degree the criticism leveled at it. Today W. P. A. has achieved wonderful progress. Its work by and large has shown a greater degree of improvement than that of any other department of the Federal set-up. That will be found to be true by anyone who looks over the annual report of the Works Progress Administration and visualizes the achievement of this great army of builders, many of whom have been outlawed forever by private enterprise because they are 40 years of age and over, and many of whom have been given new hope in life because of an opportunity to use their talents in productive and constructive enterprise.

Mr. President, outstanding among W. P. A. contributions to the public facilities of the Nation can be listed the 17,600 new public buildings which have been completed for cities, counties, and States.

Repairs and improvements have been made to 46,300 buildings and additions to 1,700 more.

Two hundred and eighty thousand miles of highways, roads, and streets have been constructed and repaired.

Twenty-nine thousand new bridges have been built and 23,000 have been repaired and improved.

Twenty-six thousand seven hundred new dams for conservation purposes have been completed.

Four thousand one hundred new storage dams have been finished.

Six thousand one hundred miles of new water mains, aqueducts, and distribution lines and 8,900 miles of new storm and sanitary sewers are completed as the result of W. P. A.

One thousand eight hundred new athletic fields have been built and 1,500 athletic fields have been improved.

One thousand one hundred new parks have been established, as well as 4,200 improved and enlarged play areas.

One thousand six hundred new playgrounds have been built and 5,000 playgrounds improved.

Eight thousand seven hundred miles of new and 5,000 miles of improved ditches for mosquito control have been built.

Eleven thousand five hundred miles of other types of ditches and drains have been excavated or improved, exclusive of roadside drainage in connection with road projects.

The program of W. P. A. is a constructive one. It has enriched not only the individual by giving him new hope and new confidence; it has enriched the Nation itself. It has reduced the expenditures of local communities, and it has raised the morale of men and women who would otherwise be subject to the dole. The W. P. A. program, so far as its Federal direction is concerned, is one which merits our consideration. If politicians are meddling with W. P. A., they ought to be stopped. From my experience and observation, they will not be stopped by turning the administration of relief over to the localities, because in the localities where men who are now eligible for relief are assigned to W. P. A. projects, in many instances and in many localities the only chance for those men to be assigned to the W. P. A. is with the O. K. of the local political boss.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. LUCAS. On that point I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from New York whether or not there have been any complaints in his State about discrimination in the certification of persons for the W. P. A.?

Mr. MEAD. There have been numerous complaints in my State, with the exception of four or five of the large counties which are for the most part made up of the populations of big cities. I have in mind the rural counties. In those counties the local relief agency, the county welfare set-up, is in too many cases subservient to the political leaders. Before a man can be approved for a W. P. A. project and obtain employment on the W. P. A. he is required to have the approval of a local political leader.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question, or for an observation?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. LUCAS. In connection with the very important question which the Senator from New York is discussing, I should like to make one observation with respect to what is going on in the State of Illinois in connection with the certification of those eligible for employment on the W. P. A. In Illinois the supervisor of the township is the individual who certifies those seeking employment, and who are unemployed.

At the present time approximately two-thirds of the supervisors of townships in Illinois are Republicans. During the past 6 years, while the Democratic Party has been in power, it has received condemnation because of politics in relief. I wish to say on the floor of the Senate that at this moment the Republicans in the State of Illinois, who hold supervisory positions, and the Republicans who control municipalities—such as mayors, boards of supervisors of counties, and county highway engineers—are playing politics with relief in a way never dreamed of by the Democratic Party in the State of Illinois. I know what I am talking about, because I went through a campaign last year. I speak from experience. I say to the Senate that the junior Senator from Illinois was crucified in many a spot by W. P. A., because it was controlled, hook, line, and sinker, by the Republican politicians in certain sections of the State.

It is high time, if we are to continue to dole out millions of dollars throughout the country for relief purposes, that the individuals who are entitled to relief, irrespective of politics, should be employed. If we are to continue to spend and spend in order to take care of the situation, it strikes me that the Government should have its own certifying officers in the counties in order that every man may receive a square deal so far as the W. P. A. is concerned.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to supplement what the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] has said?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I think practically every student of the relief situation in the United States today takes the position that if the Federal authorities are to provide the money they should also provide the agencies to decide who should receive it.

Mr. LUCAS. Is that the viewpoint of the distinguished Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ADAMS. It is. I have on my desk a statement from one of the chief officials of the W. P. A. making the same declaration, which statement, of course, he did not care to put into the record. As a matter of fact, there is a definite conflict. I know that the situation to which the Senator from Illinois refers exists in my own State. The Congress is appropriating billions of dollars. Since 1935 we have appropriated over $11,000,000,000 for relief, and we have not controlled the agencies through which it was expended. It seems to me that in our statutes we should do something more than merely turn over to a single individual the distribution of the money and the determination of who shall make the selection of the recipients.

Mr. LUCAS. I certainly concur in the remarks made by the Senator from Colorado. Will the Senator from New York pardon a further interruption?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to.

Mr. LUCAS. In Illinois last week we had one supervisors' election after another, in which the sole question in connection with whether John Jones or Bill Smith was going to be defeated was the question of relief. That was the political issue in every township. Of course the individual in power sees to it that his friends are certified. That is done regardless of politics. I am not standing here attempting to defend the Democrats or Republicans on that score. They are both guilty of playing politics. I say that it is wrong to have elections throughout the country depending upon the sole political question of the relief of individuals who are suffering for want of the necessities of life. Perhaps I shall have something further to say on this question before the debate is concluded. If the debate continues, I propose to discuss conditions in connection with the W. P. A. in down-State Illinois as I see them and understand them. The conditions are abominable, Mr. President; and something serious should be done in order to bring about a better situation.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit another comment?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. ADAMS. When the condition which the Senator from Illinois describes exists, waste of the public money is inevitable. If we had a more efficient system, Congress would be able to accomplish its purpose with a lesser expenditure. In other words, the form of administration which has been devised is not an efficient form but a wasteful form.

Mr. LUCAS. In my judgment what the Senator says cannot be successfully challenged. The question is not debatable. It seems to me it is vital that the Congress of the United States should work to perfect the administration of relief in order that individuals on relief or those seeking relief may have a better opportunity to receive that to which they are justly entitled.

(At this point Mr. MEAD yielded to Mr. REYNOLDS and Mr. Mr. ELLENDER, whose remarks appear at the conclusion of Mr. MEAD's speech.)

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, while it afforded me great pleasure to yield to a number of distinguished colleagues, I will be forced, in order that I complete my speech in time to meet other engagements, to yield hereafter only for a question.

I ask that the speeches delivered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] who has just concluded, and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] who spoke a few moments ago, be inserted in the RECORD after the conclusion of my speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERTON in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, in order that we might go back to the theme I was developing, let me again explain to the Senate that I was taking issue with the committee which reported the pending proposal, because I think it is the wrong thing to do at this time, because it is not meeting the President's request, and because I believe it would result in untold injury to the proper progress of W. P. A. throughout the country. It is in the interest of the public welfare to oppose the attitude and the position taken by the Senate committee which reported this proposal, and it is in the interest of the public wellbeing to take a decided stand in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. President, I have said it is not in keeping with the President's request. Let me read excerpts from the annual message of President Roosevelt before the joint session of Congress on Wednesday, January 4, 1939. Among other things President Roosevelt said on that occasion:

> We suffer from a great unemployment of capital. Many people have the idea that as a nation we are overburdened with debt and are spending more than we can afford. That is not so. Despite our Federal Government expenditures, the entire debt of our national economic system, public and private together, is no larger today than it was in 1929, and the interest thereon is far less than it was in 1929.
> The object is to put capital—private as well as public—to work.

We want to get enough capital and labor at work to give us a total turn-over of business, a total national income, of at least $30,000,000,000 a year. At that figure we shall have a substantial reduction of unemployment, and the Federal revenues will be sufficient to balance the current level of cash expenditures on the basis of the existing tax structure. That figure can be attained, working within the framework of our traditional profit system.

The factors in attaining and maintaining that amount of national income are many and complicated.

* * * * * * *

The whole subject of government investing and government income is one which may be approached in two different ways.

The first calls for the elimination of enough activities of government to bring the expenses of government immediately into balance with income of government. This school of thought maintains that because our national income this year is only $60,000,000,000, ours is only a $60,000,000,000 country; that government must treat it as such; and that without the help of government it may some day, somehow, happen to become an $80,000,000,000 country.

* * * * * * *

The other approach to the question of Government spending takes the position that this Nation ought not to be and need not be only a $60,000,000,000 nation; that at this moment it has the men and the resources sufficient to make it at least an $80,000,000,000 nation. This school of thought does not believe that it can become an $80,000,000,000 nation in the near future if Government cuts its operations by one-third. It is convinced that if we were to try it, we would invite disaster—that we would not long remain even a $60,000,000,000 nation. There are many complicated factors with which we have to deal, but we have learned that it is unsafe to make abrupt reductions at any time in our net expenditure program.

Mr. President, some time ago in a speech which I delivered in the House of Representatives I stated that it is necessary for the Nation, in this complex economy of ours, to effect an economic balance; that that balance was a balance between the number of men available for jobs and the number of jobs; that it was a balance between that which the Nation could produce and that which its people should be able to consume; that it was a balance between credit and the use of money; a balance between wages and the cost of living; a balance between imports and exports; and that that balance would eventuate into a balance between the expenditures of government and the revenues of government.

Economic health consists in the maintaining of a series of balances, and to argue that we can balance the Budget while all other major economic factors are out of balance is ridiculous, and would result, not in national health, but in national disaster.

Mr. President, argument has been advanced here that we can well afford to turn this work over to the States, that we can well afford to leave not only the administration of the law, but much of burden of carrying it out, to the State and to the local government. Our experience with regard to the administration of the personnel indicates that that would be an error. Observation from time to time by political economists, and by students in Government, has shown that there is more efficiency of operation in the Federal set-up, and, at the same time, less politics and waste, than is the case with the government in the locality.

As was stated a moment ago by the junior Senator from Illinois, there is much politics in W. P. A., but by far the greater degree of politics comes from the welfare and relief agencies located in the counties back home.

I received information from a postmaster in my State just a few days ago that the only way for a man eligible for relief to secure employment on a W. P. A. project was to receive the O. K. of the political leader of his town; and if the political leader was not of the same faith of the political leadership which directed the appointments on the county relief set-up, he would have to go to some other leader of the same political faith or he could not get on a W. P. A. project.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. The leadership in most of these counties is Republican leadership. I do not point out the partisanship of that leadership merely to place the onus on the particular party I have mentioned, but I mention it because time and time again the Democratic administration has been denounced and criticized for politics in W. P. A., when the politics in W. P. A., so far as the Federal administration is concerned, is only a drop in the bucket in comparison with the politics in the local administration of W. P. A. personnel.

I am glad to yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. When the Senator hears our Republican friends talk about taking W. P. A. out of politics and turning it over to the local communities, does not the Senator think that what they want to do is to put it in politics in those communities where the Republicans have control, that they want to get hold of W. P. A. and send it back to the local communities so that in those local communities and in those States where Republican organizations are in charge they will be running the show, and not the Democrats? That is the kind of politics they want, is it not?

Mr. MEAD. In those counties and in those States where the situation is as the Senator has explained, they have most of the politics now, and they want the rest of it, and for that reason they favor turning W. P. A. over to the localities. When that happens, there will be 100 percent politics in W. P. A.

The point was made that the States and the cities are not assuming the burdens which they should logically assume under existing conditions, and that it is better for the Federal set-up to taper off on the W. P. A. appropriations. Such is not the case in my State, because this year the State of New York is appropriating for the operation and maintenance of the State government $415,000,000, which is an all-time record high, and indicates that our State is doing its full share in meeting every requirement in this national emergency in an attempt to attain to a greater degree of economic prosperity. The same is true of the city of New York, and I might say of many other cities located throughout the Empire State.

Mr. President, I take issue fundamentally with those who believe that it is time for us to retrench, that it is necessary for us to balance the Federal Budget, and that we must cut appropriations to the bone. I take issue with them because I believe that experience directs us in the opposite direction, along a different pathway. The program advanced by that school of thought, which includes not only a balanced Budget but tax relief, the restoration of confidence and the encouragement of capital investment, is a commendable program, but it will not solve the present problem. It will not create a demand for jobs. It will not result in increasing the power of the people of America to consume the goods which the present processes are capable of producing.

One of the favorite suggestions made is tax relief. We are told that tax relief will provide money for plant expansion for new modern machinery. Mr. President, we are probably suffering from too much modern machinery, from too much plant expansion, from too much efficiency in production. Unfortunately production races ahead of the power of our people to consume.

But, Mr. President, let me point out that the reduction of taxes which were condemned with far more vigor than the taxes they condemn today, did not stop the economic collapse in 1929. Therefore, we should not go back to experiments which failed us in the past.

Those same taxes, Mr. President, together with the additional taxes with respect to which they criticize us today, did not retard our development when the Nation was gradually and healthfully increasing its income in 1936 and again in 1937. Taxes have neither helped nor harmed in the past when we were plunging to disaster or when we were rising again to prosperity.

A balanced National Budget is the chief point of all the ballyhoo advanced concerning economic remedies by those who would have us turn our backs to the national-recovery program, which has commonly been called the program of the New Deal.

Mr. President, I admit that, like tax relief, a balancing of the Federal Budget would be commendable. But I believe a balancing of the Budget will be brought about more expeditiously by following the school of thought which takes its position in this debate with the Senator from Florida, whose amendment providing for $150,000,000 will shortly come before us for action, than by following those who believe in cutting Federal expenditures to the bone and just arbitrarily balancing the Federal Budget by adopting that sort of a program.

Mr. President, balancing the Budget will not create a greater demand for goods, nor will it increase the American market. We have no fear for our monetary system today. We are not on the verge of a period of deflation, nor are we about to suffer from inflation.

Mr. President, the people of other nations of the world think so much of the stability of our monetary system that they are shipping untold millions of their dollars here in order that they might secure an island of safety. If one will but observe the prices of commodities in America, he will realize at a glance that inflation is far off. If he will compare the funded debt of our country with the indebtedness of the big strong powers of the world he will find that America is in the most favored and comfortable position of any nation on earth. He will find that when we are appropriating millions of dollars so that men might live other nations are appropriating untold millions so that men might be regimented into youth military organizations in order to enable them to kill and destroy. The European nations are appropriating over 50 percent of their revenue in preparation for a defensive war. America has set an example for mankind by putting her unemployed to work in building constructive projects that will enrich the Nation and ennoble the Government.

I say, Mr. President, that balancing the Budget, with every other economic factor out of balance, would be ridiculous, if not tragic.

Mr. President, those who disagree with the school of thought I represent and whose position I have been advocating in the debate today advance the claim that a restoration of confidence is all that America needs at this time—a restoration of confidence so that business and enterprise might be stimulated and millions of unemployed might find their way back to work. "Restoration of confidence" was overworked and overplayed throughout the closing years of the Hoover administration. Of course, it is true that without confidence business will not take normal risks in many instances. But with too much confidence which we enjoyed in 1927, 1928, and 1929, the Nation was plunged into an orgy of legalized speculation, which resulted in overexpansion, in overproduction, and terminated in the greatest panic and depression in the history of America, if not of the world.

The last suggestion they make is that we must encourage capital enterprise. Listed alongside their favorite remedies—tax relief, a balanced Budget, and the restoration of confidence—is the encouragement of capital investment. Investment in what, Mr. President? Investment in more factories, more shops, more railroads, more banks, more stores? We cannot find markets—outlets for those we now have. We do not need plant expansion. What we need is plant operation. Therefore, with the possible exception of the housing industry and the electrical industry, it is not expansion but it is operation that we need now in this country.

I said, Mr. President, that the recovery program, commonly referred to as the New Deal program, is sound and logical and rational.

From my observation of the experiences of this Nation since the coming of the complex machine age, together with my observation of the situation and the circumstances to be found in the recent histories of the industrial nations of the old world, the present plan is the only plan which merits the dignity of being referred to as a plan.

Under the plan invoked before the inception of the present plan our Nation almost came to ruin. Under the plans adopted in other industrial nations of the world there came a series of radical and violent systems of government which robbed the people of their freedom and liberty and clothed the totalitarian states with all the power which, in the ideal tradition of the noblest form of government on earth, we hold dear to our hearts.

Mr. President, it was the force of economic pressure, and not the President of the United States, which developed the New Deal program. The eternal restlessness of men, the eternal striving of men in all the ages of history for a greater degree of economic security and for the freedom which we have enjoyed, necessitate a constant change in government to meet constantly changing economic and social conditions. Governments abroad failed to yield to economic pressure and were destroyed, and new systems of government came into being. This administration recognized economic pressure and the need to adapt itself to the changing demands of our time. That is why we live in comfort and contentment today. The only nation in the world without apprehension ripping the hearts of its people is the United States of America.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. In connection with the Senator's able statement it might be well to remember that if we encourage hunger, poverty, and destitution by lack of proper public works, and our unemployment rolls keep mounting, or if we follow those who have the opposite theory in mind and pursue a policy which does not cure unemployment, we in the United States may encounter new and undreamed-of forms of government. If we wish to be true to the oath of office which we took to uphold our democracy, we had better supply a plenitude of public works for our people so that we shall not have to argue with hunger.

Mr. MEAD. The Senator is quite correct. Our democracy is in danger. Mind you, Mr. President, no military operations abroad will save us. As the Senator well said, we must raise the standards of our people and give to the farmers of America an opportunity to enjoy an economy which will reward them for their labor. We must give to our millions of people, herded into the big cities by the giant corporations, a better degree of economic security. Unless we do so there will be constant and continuous demand for change, which will assert itself in the government which will come to guide the destinies of this country in the future.

Let us not turn back now, Mr. President. Let us remember that our farms are becoming more efficient as the years go on. Our machines are producing more and more with each successive day. More than 1,000,000 boys and girls become of working age every year, and the demands for employment will be greater, while under existing circumstances the availability of jobs will grow progressively less. We cannot condemn our unemployed to idleness and to poverty. The proper procedure to follow is to support the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and to continue along that line until such time as we have effected not only a balanced Budget but a balance in all the economic factors which I recited a few moments ago.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield for a question.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the Senator believe that we shall return to an economic balance and return the unemployed to employment by continually running the Government in the hole to the extent of about $12,000 per minute?

Mr. MEAD. I am very sorry the Senator was not in the Chamber when I covered that situation. I thought I covered it thoroughly. I will say to the Senator that if he will take time to read my remarks, and to read again the President's speech on the same subject, he will find that by following the course which the President has taken, by supporting, if he will, the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, we will attain a balance in our Nation's economy which will eventuate in a balance of our Budget.

We will not attain that object by following the direction which the Senator indicates he will take, by arbitrarily balancing the Budget and reducing expenditures by one-third, and by lopping off all the men and women who are today working for the W. P. A. and earning a livelihood for themselves and their families, intensifying the buying market, and making it possible for farmers to sell their goods. The Senator believes that we can thus attain that perfection of prosperity—which I am sure we will not attain—which we experienced when we had perfection in government back in the heyday of 1929.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the Senator believe that as a result of all the spending to date we have made material progress on the road to permanent recovery?

Mr. MEAD. I will not ask the Senator to read my remarks in the RECORD. I will ask him rather to read a conservative weekly newspaper, one published by friends of the Senator. I hand to the Senator a copy of the newspaper to which I have referred. If he will read it and digest it he will find that there is opportunity for the Government to effect a balance by following the program which I am advocating today.

Supplementing that statement, let me ask the Senator to read the numerous articles which are now appearing in the public print by economists of note who warn us not to reduce Government expenditures arbitrarily at this time. If the Senator can learn from the light of experience, and will disregard the unhappy plight of our country when it was under the leadership of his party in 1929, I will ask the Senator to review the record of 1935, 1936, and 1937. He will then learn that when we decided to turn his way the Nation plunged rapidly downward. We choked agriculture. Industry was stagnated. The sources of taxation began to dry up, throwing the Government's Budget out of balance to a greater degree than was the situation in the months just preceding that unfortunate move.

Mr. BRIDGES. May I ask the Senator if Mr. Roosevelt, the head of his party, has ever made a serious attempt to balance the Budget and to start on the road to recovery in that manner?

Mr. MEAD. I am very glad to tell the Senator that in the early days of his administration the President followed the philosophy embraced by the distinguished Senator and by legislative decree lopped approximately 25 percent from Federal expenditures. When that course would not work, the President was wise enough to change his mind. Then came the National Industrial Recovery Act, with the new concept that increasing wages meant intensifying buying power, and that reducing hours meant increasing employment. From that day on, this administration has embraced that philosophy. If the Senator believes, with an expanding complex machine organization storing the Nation's warehouses full of goods, that we can balance the Nation's Budget by reducing the activities of government, by retrenching and saving, by setting the bad example of reducing wages, rather than by advocating the direct opposite; then he has been going in one direction and private enterprise has been racing in another direction. Only by expanding and increasing the frontiers, by expanding the influence and activities of government to meet the demands of this machine age, will we hope eventually to balance the Nation's Budget.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I am glad to yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. About how many years would the Senator say it would take, with a continuation of his program and the program of Mr. Roosevelt, before we eventually see the balancing of the National Budget?

Mr. MEAD. If the Senator had only read the article which I handed to him, he would find that cash outgo and cash income were within $100,000,000 of a balance when we embraced the Senator's philosophy, and from that day on in 1937 we have been going in the other direction. So, if we follow the Senator's philosophy, we will not balance the Budget in his time or mine. If we follow the philosophy of the President of the United States, stick to it, and stop turning around, we will balance the Nation's Budget within a reasonable number of years, depending upon our adherence to the program, the support of business and industry to that program, and the stability of world conditions. That is my answer to the Senator's question.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator would not believe, if we continue this program along the lines advocated by the Senator and the President, that we would balance the Budget in the lifetime of any Member of this body, would he?

Mr. MEAD. The Senator from New Hampshire will speak for himself. I will say we will balance the Budget within a reasonable length of time unless we make the mistake of following the Senator's philosophy of government. That is my attitude. Unfortunately, it is not the Senator's; but it is my attitude that this is the only way out; there is no other program. If the Senator has a program, if his party has a program, if he or his party will point out specifically and completely what their alternative program is, then the Senator from New York will be able to give his opinion of that program which is not now known to the country or to the world.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. May I inquire of the Senator if he can remember a very definite change in the direction of the President since he was elected in 1932, and since the action of the Congress upon his recommendation in 1933 with regard to expenditures of the Government as compared to the revenues of the Government?

Mr. MEAD. I wish the Senator would state his question again; I did not catch its purport.

Mr. REED. I am asking the distinguished and able junior Senator from New York if he remembers that the President about faced from the position he took in the campaign he made in 1932, and again made a departure from his own program as laid down in 1933? The first about face was by the President of the United States.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I can now understand the question that has been put to me by my distinguished colleague from Kansas, and I will say to him, "yes," the President of the United States has taken a stand entirely different from the stand taken by the Democratic National Convention in 1932.

I will say further to my distinguished friend that we tried in the closing years of the Hoover administration to promote prosperity and the public welfare by enacting economy measures, by reducing employment, by decreasing wages. We made not only the Government employees suffer under President Hoover, but we made the veterans take reductions in their compensation and their pensions. Then, if I may say so——

Mr. REED rose.

Mr. MEAD. I am answering the Senator's question. The Democratic National Convention recommended that we further reduce the expenditures of the Federal Government by an additional 25 percent. Then the present President of the United States, in conformity with that mandate, immediately upon his inauguration recommended an economy plan, and further reductions were made; further penalties were imposed upon Government workers and upon the veterans; and a further impairment of our buying power resulted from the economy program of the President of the United States.

Mr. REED. The business of the United States improved up to and including 1936.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me there?

Mr. MEAD. I should like, first, to answer the question of the Senator from Kansas, but I am glad to yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. MALONEY. I wish to point out that business did not improve until we repealed the dangerous provisions of the Economy Act, and that, as a matter of fact, after the passage of the Economy Act of 1933, business speeded down hill until the Congress made the necessary corrections.

Mr. MEAD. If the Senator from Kansas will take the time to look at the graphs and charts or the statistics, he will find that he is almost correct. Business did improve until we embraced the economy policy again in 1937; but it did not improve in 1933 until the country realized that they had a man of action in the White House, and the country enjoyed faith and confidence that was lacking in the closing days of the Hoover administration. Banks stopped closing; industry started to look up; and, instead of fear and apprehension in the hearts of the people, there were confidence and hope. But it was only when the President of the United States changed his attitude, turned his back on the economy program, as has been so well pointed out by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], that we started to parade in the right direction to national prosperity. I am warning the Senator for fear that experience has not yet taught him the lesson, the tragic lesson of 1929, the futile lesson of 1933 and 1934. I plead with the Senator to stand with us in our effort to defeat this economy move that has, within the experience of the last few years, resulted in ruination.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. REED. I am overdue at a committee meeting, but I thank the Senator for granting that I am "almost correct." If I ever reach the point where I am a hundred percent correct, I hope to be then in the class of the junior Senator from New York. But may I ask the junior Senator from New York how he regards the vote of the American people in every State where there was a free election last fall as reflecting an opinion upon the policies of the present administration?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I do not know of any State in which there were not free elections. Secondly, if I accept what my distinguished colleague from Kansas has said, that the people took a decided stand for economy in government, then I must go into various districts and States and ascertain whether or not the Senator has in mind the Representatives from New England, who came out almost to a man for the Townsend plan.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am wondering if the Senator from Kansas has in mind Senators elected from other States who denounced the W. P. A. because W. P. A. salaries were altogether too low?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. MALONEY. Of course, the Senator from New York knows, in spite of the fact that the Senator from Kansas would have it appear that he does not know, that the Democratic Party was victorious in the election of last November. They returned a majority to the House of Representatives and to the Senate, and if a Democratic candidate for President had been running in the election of last November he would have been elected; all of this in spite of the fact that some of those of the opposing party, appreciating that they did not have or would not have the responsibility of running the Government, were able to be a little careless in their promises and their implied promises during the November campaign.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MEAD. The Senator from Connecticut has stated the situation accurately. And again I yield to my distinguished friend, who said a moment ago that the people of America, in sweeping into office both him and his associates, mandated us once again to embrace economy with all its tragic consequences.

I am happy to be reminded that the Senator was slightly in error when he made the point that his party swept the Nation.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BANKHEAD in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. REED. I said in the States where there was a free election.

I have but a moment or two. I am overdue now at another place. I desire to answer both the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] and the junior Senator from New York.

I say to the Senator from Connecticut that, regardless of what party or what man succeeds the present Chief Executive of the United States, he is going to have one tough time, believe me.

To the Senator from New York I desire to say on behalf of my New England Republican associates who were victorious in last year's election, that being so close to New York, I am afraid some of them may have been contaminated by the example set by the Democratic candidates for the Senate from New York.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MEAD. Just one moment. Let me make this observation: The Senator from Kansas says "in States where they had a free election." I say to the Senator that I know of no State in the Union where there was not a free election. Certainly there was a free election in New York. When the Senator talks about the difficult time the succeeding President will have let me remind him that this President faced difficulties in following the President who had preceded him. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. I agree with the Senator from New York in that statement.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I had asked the Senator from New York to yield, but he has said what I was intending to say. I may add, however, that if and when the Republican Party does come into power, if its members spend as much time as we are now spending in quibbling about a relatively small amount of money for work-relief purposes, while appropriating tremendous sums for other purposes, it is going to have worse than a rough time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the last time?

Mr. MEAD. Just for a question. I desire to finish my speech.

Mr. REED. I did not understand that the Senator from New York was in a hurry.

Mr. MEAD. Go ahead.

Mr. REED. I freely grant that the present President of the United States succeeded to a very difficult situation in 1933; but with all the earnestness at my command I say that the difficulty of the situation to which the present President succeeded in 1933 is in no way comparable to the situation which anybody who is elected President of the United States next year, whether he be Democrat or Republican, will succeed to in 1941.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to inquire if the Senator from Kansas is giving some advice to a few Senators I see around here who, I think, want to be President in 1941? [Laughter.]

Mr. MEAD. I am sure the Senator from Kansas is not trying to discourage anybody.

Mr. President, as I conclude, let me remark that I reiterated throughout my argument in favor of the amendment offered by the distinguished junior Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], that it was the course of wisdom to follow the President's leadership. I went on to point out that experience has taught us that to follow the philosophy of the opposing school of thought was a mistake. I wanted to leave the thought, before concluding, that the recovery program is logical and sound and rational, and that all that is required is for us to continue to support the leadership of the President, and the policy of the Congress as it has been developed during the past 5 or 6 years.

It is a well-rounded program, and in my judgment it will eventuate in a balance of all the factors necessary for a healthy economic condition. It will relieve the next administration of the burdens and the problems we have been called upon to solve.

In the years that will follow we shall modernize our Government in conformity with modern-day problems. Within a short space of time, when the Social Security Act will be liberalized and amended, and when it will be in full operation throughout all the States of the Union, those who administer it will take over some of the problems now assigned to the Works Progress Administration.

European nations for a score of years have had experience with social-security programs, and in times of large and abnormal unemployment they have had the comfort of such agencies to carry them through.

Mr. President, when the wage and hour law shall have come into full operation in the Nation and in the States, and when that principle, which originated in the National Recovery Act, shall be accepted by private industry and properly administered by local administrators, there will not be the wide gap that today exists between jobs and available workers. When the power of labor asserts itself, as a result of the dignity we conferred upon labor in giving to labor by law the right to bargain collectively, and when employers in our country subscribe to the principle that there must be democracy in industry if there is to continue democracy in every other element of our national well-being, more men will be employed by private enterprise, and there will be less need for W. P. A.

Mr. President, when the Monopoly Investigating Committee concludes its splendid work, when the riddle of the giant corporate machine of this day and age is unfolded to the statesmanship of Congress, then that Frankenstein which has proved a modern paradox to the economists of this and other countries will yield to a solution that will bring the full fruits of the labor of the men who toil to their homes and to their loved ones, and we shall bask in the sunshine of the greatest economic age in all the history of our Republic.

Mr. President, we are on the right road. We have a well-rounded program. To embrace an economy which has proved so tragic and futile in the past is not becoming to the statesmanship of this Chamber. I hope that in voting on the amendment before us Senators will be guided by that experience, that they will be actuated by a desire to give us a full and complete balance in the Nation's economy, and that they will take their stand against hunger and starvation and joblessness in America, and let us work out our destiny as a democracy, setting an example for the people of the world in the comfort and in the security that we have come to enjoy during the past few years.

During the delivery of Mr. MEAD's speech,

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the junior Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield for an observation.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have listened with much interest to the very profound and intelligent discussion of relief funds. I know that the Senator who has discussed it at great length is very much interested in the subject.

This morning I received a telegram from the Honorable Charles Z. Flack, chairman of the Rutherford County (N. C.) Democratic Executive Committee. The telegram reads as follows:

FOREST CITY, N. C., March 29, 1939.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

Understand that Works Progress Administration is making plans to reduce relief load in this county April 10 of approximately 150, with further weekly reductions. We appreciate that national expenditures should probably be curtailed, but because of our peculiar position of worthy projects started and large expenditures made by sponsors, as well as those on relief being especially needy, that necessary arrangements should be made not to retard projects and throw needy back on our county and towns.

CHARLES Z. FLACK,
Chairman, Rutherford County
Democratic Executive Committee.

When I received that telegram from Mr. Flack, who, incidentally, is a personal friend of mine, I telegraphed him that it was my present intention to vote for the committee's recommendation for an appropriation of a hundred million dollars, as I rather felt that if those in charge of administering relief appropriations would properly and economically administer the hundred million dollars it would be sufficient to take care of the needs of Rutherford County.

Now, I wish to say to the junior Senator from the State of New York, Mr. President, that I have repeatedly stated that I shall never decline to vote for appropriations to feed those in America who, unfortunately, are hungry; but, at the same time, I know that in so voting the taxpayers of the country will have to pay the bill, and we should be as careful of the expenditure of their money as we would be of our own.

With the Senator's kind permission, let me state further that on yesterday, while the Senator, I think, was temporarily out of the Chamber, I brought to the attention of the Senate an example of the manner in which the taxpayers' money is being expended. A W. P. A. worker was sent to Europe to travel there and ascertain how one, speaking only the English language, might travel there for $2 a day. The woman W. P. A. worker who was sent there came back and is now engaged in instructing W. P. A. workers how to see Europe on $2 a day, while speaking only the English language.

I have a letter referring to another little incident concerning W. P. A. expenditures which, I think, may be of interest.

The letter is published in The Tablet, of April 1, 1939, under the heading "An Example of Relief Fund Expenditures." I bring this to the attention of the Senator from New York, because I know the Senator from New York, like every other Member of this body, regardless of political affiliation or whether he is termed a liberal or a conservative, is interested in making provision for feeding the hungry and affording some assistance to the unfortunate. The letter is addressed to the editor of the newspaper in which it is printed, and reads as follows:

DEAR SIR: In the March 18 issue of The Tablet, in the "Readers' Forum," is a letter captioned "Protest Against Firing Mr. Dawson Asked." After reading this letter and personally knowing the facts are as they are presented (as I am employed by the Federal Theater project), I wonder when something or somebody is going to do something to correct the un-American administration of a project which was created to help worthy theatrical people, but instead of helping them, is forcing them to lose their self-respect in order to protect the loaf of bread which it means to many of us.

This letter should be of particular interest to the Senator from New York, who has the floor, because, as we all know, the center of the theatrical interests of America is in the once-upon-a-time melting pot of the world—the city of New York.

The writer of the letter continues:

Last week I attended a preview of a supposed-to-be musical review, Sing for Your Supper—

In other words, "bark for your food" [laughter]—

which, without a doubt, is a filthy thing, which is bad enough, but its cast are rank amateurs who seek between the downright filth to spread the leftist gospel and actually ridicule the United States Government.

Here are some facts about Sing for Your Supper—

Or "bark for your food"—

1. It has an administrative staff of 10 people, who receive salaries ranging from $1,860 per annum to $3,000 per annum. With the exception of one person on this staff, not one of them was ever connected in the remotest manner with the theatrical profession, and the one that was, was just an ordinary actor.

In other words, we set up this Federal theater project for the purpose of feeding the unfortunate actors of America who were affected by the depression, as was everyone else; but we find, according to the author of this letter, that the actors are not being provided for. He goes on to say:

2. It has a cast of over 100 people and not more than 15 of these were ever on a professional stage.

3. It has now been in rehearsal for over 19 months.

And they have never yet given a performance.

4. For more than 5 months the Adelphi Theater has been kept in darkness, to rehearse this Sing for Your Supper, at a rental of $3,000 per month.

5. The producer of this "turkey", who is also the director, one Harold Hecht, a former Y. M. H. A. camp counselor, never had any connection with the American theater, but holds some degree from an East Side "delicatessen college," is employed at $3,000 per year, and has been so employed on the project for the past 2 years on this Sing for Your Supper.

"Sing for your supper, brother," or "bark for your food"— which, in fact, isn't an even "belch for your lunch."

[Laughter.]

6. A supposed-to-be lighting technician, one Abe Feder, a former electric appliance salesman, has spent more than $40,000 for lighting equipment for this show and his result is that you can't see anyone on the stage.

[Laughter.]

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I did not catch the name of the gentleman referred to. Would the Senator from North Carolina object to repeating it?

Mr. REYNOLDS. His name is given as Abe Feder.

This is nothing new, and, it is said, this man in the past 3 years has been responsible for the purchase of over a million dollars worth of electrical lighting equipment for Federal theater shows, and all of them that I have seen are practically played in the dark. But Mr. Feder is a protégé of Halle Flanagan, who, by the way, receives $10,000 a year from a relief project, which is just about three times as much as she ever received from Vassar College. In addition she has an allowance for travel and a car and chauffeur who incidentally receives $225 per month. (What a relief.)

6. The costumes and production cost over $100,000, and after 19 months the net result is one-quarter of a million dollars of the taxpayers' money thrown away by this ghetto intellectual group, while they play at theater, and in the meantime hundreds of needy, competent theatrical people have been dropped from the project to make room for these so-called chosen people.

Who is to blame for it? Not Harold Hecht. Many say Mr. George Kondolf, director for production for the New York City Theater project, and Mr. Paul Edwards, the administrator, who must release the money for these abuses.

Mr. Edwards, it is said, admits all the abuses but quoted: "I know it is wrong, but if the people in Washington found out about the true conditions, they would close the entire project, and you know I have my job to protect."

Self-preservation is the first law of nature.

He gets $9,600 per year, with a car and chauffeur, and lives in Teaneck, N. J. In no other business but the business of making a career out of the misery and suffering of a lot of worthy theatrical people, could any of them make $40 a week, and I don't believe ever did. All of Mr. Edwards' executive staff have been recruited out of New York City limits, and conditions under his administration are worse than they ever were before.

I am not a crackpot or a letter writer, and I can prove by actual fact and project documents that the contents of this letter are undeniable facts; but what are you going to do about it? If you publish my name I will be fired the same as Dawson; but if Mr. DIES or any public officials want facts on the abuse of this project, I will supply them, if they will correct the abuse and protect my position.

Please do not publish my name or address. How about the Legion of Decency getting after this Sing for Your Supper?—T. V.

I thank the Senator from New York. I thought he would particularly like to hear that letter read, because it deals especially with theatrical people, who are so numerous in the great Empire State of New York.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, if I received a letter of that character, unsigned as it is, it would be immediately consigned to the wastebasket. It is in error from the beginning to the end. From my own personal observation, it is unworthy of the time given to it in this august body. But if my distinguished friend, whom I admire and respect, derived any pleasure or comfort from it, if it makes any point for any bill he has in mind, I am very glad that I gave him the time to read it; but otherwise I would not waste my time either in reading it or in listening to it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator again. I want to say to the Senator that I could not bring myself to the point of believing that the officials of the United States Government who were selected to administer W. P. A. funds could be guilty of such gross neglect. As a result thereof, when that clipping was sent to me, I telegraphed to the editor of the newspaper, asking that I be furnished the name of the author of the letter. If I am successful in getting it, I shall be very happy indeed to bring it to the attention of the Senator, because I know that he, like myself and everybody else, wants to correct these abuses; for we desire to have the money of the taxpayers of the United States, when withdrawn from their pockets, converted into food for the stomachs of the hungry people of America.

Mr. MEAD. If my distinguished friend is going to be bothered by all the unsigned letters that come to his office or that he reads in the newspapers, and if it is his desire to correct all these errors and these mistakes, he is going to be the busiest man in the world. I will say to him, for his own comfort, that there are so many constructive things to do, there are so many big men and women who are always willing and ready to sign their names to communications they write; that if he will just listen to their advice and counsel, and if, when he speaks, he will speak with their authority as well as his own, he will be doing a constructive work that will command the respect and the admiration, which I know he seeks, of all his colleagues, who hold him in such high and affectionate regard.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New York to yield to me for a few minutes.

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana.

SPECIAL GUARD DUTY AT LINCOLN MEMORIAL

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, with the kind permission of the Senator from New York, I wish to advert for just a few moments to a subject which may not be pertinent to the issues now under discussion.

Since I became engaged in carrying on an investigation with reference to the administration of civil service I have been besieged with many telephone calls, letters, and telegrams from all over the country.

Yesterday and this morning I was deluged with numerous telephone calls pertaining to an order that was issued by Charles A. Peters, general manager of buildings here in Washington, dated April 4, 1939. It will be noted from this order that the general manager of buildings in Washington has demanded that all special guards, not only of the buildings of the Interior Department but of all the principal Government buildings in Washington, shall stand guard on Easter Sunday when Marian Anderson sings at the Lincoln Memorial. I think it is very unfortunate that some Negro theater or hall was not provided for this singer; but I believe it sets a bad precedent for Mr. Ickes to permit the use of the Lincoln Memorial for this occasion, and especially was there a lack of good judgment in the issuance of the order that I am now about to read.

Subject: Special orders for Sunday, April 9, 1939.

No officers of the guard or guards will be signed off on Sunday, April 9, 1939. No annual leave except in emergency cases will be granted for April 9, 1939. This shall not apply to employees on extended leave heretofore granted.

FIRST RELIEF GUARDS

All first relief guards and officers of the guard will report in uniform to the inspector of the guard at the Lincoln Memorial for temporary duty at 3:30 p. m. on Sunday, April 9, 1939.

SECOND RELIEF GUARDS

All guards and officers of the guard who would ordinarily be signed off will report to the inspector of the guard at the Lincoln Memorial for temporary duty at 1 p. m. on Sunday, April 9, 1939, and will remain on temporary duty until relieved. All second relief guards and officers on duty in the buildings will remain on duty until relieved by the third relief.

THIRD RELIEF GUARDS

All guards and officers of the guard of the third relief will report to the inspector of the guard at the Lincoln Memorial at 2:30 p. m. on Sunday, April 9, 1939, for temporary duty until released.

ALL GUARDS

All officers and guards ordered for temporary duty on Sunday, April 9, 1939, will be in uniform and, if practicable, will be furnished nightsticks. Officers of the guard only will be armed.

When the telephone calls to which I have just referred began to pour into my office and I personally made inquiry of the Interior Department as to what authority the general manager of buildings had to issue this order, another order which I will read, was canceled:

ELEVATOR CONDUCTORS

All male Negro elevator conductors and their supervisors who can be spared from their regular duty will report in uniform to Assistant Superintendent Walter Cunningham at the Twenty-first Street gate, southwest corner of the Munitions Building, at the foot of Twenty-first Street, at 2 p. m. on Sunday, April 9, 1939, for temporary duty until relieved.

All female Negro elevator conductors and their supervisors who can be spared from their regular duty will report in uniform to Assistant Superintendent Albert Harrell at the Lincoln Memorial at 3 p. m. on Sunday, April 9, 1939, for temporary duty until relieved.

Superintendents will report in writing to me the number of guards and officers of the guard, and the number of elevator conductors, male and female, that will be available for this temporary duty not later than 1 p. m., Wednesday, April 5, 1939.

CHARLES A. PETERS,
General Manager of Buildings.

Mr. President, many of the persons affected by this order, they tell me, had made arrangements to leave Washington tomorrow for the Easter holidays, to be with their families and have a good time; but because of this summons they must stay and do guard duty, to act as escort—for what purpose? Is there anything official about this performance to warrant the presence of armed guards or uniformed men to carry nightsticks? If Mr. Ickes has any secret fears, has he forgotten the Metropolitan Police?

It may be that Mr. Peters had the authority and the discretionary power to issue this order, and I think he does have it in case of emergency; but in this instance I believe it is an abuse of such discretionary power, to say the least, to keep these many employees on duty Easter Sunday because the Secretary of the Interior has seen fit to permit the unwarranted use of the Lincoln Memorial for Marian Anderson's concert.

I believe it pertinent that this matter should be brought to the attention of the Senate. During the civil-service hearings our special committee have been holding for the past 2 weeks many employees in the lower grades testified they had been forced before their superiors and disciplined for much less offenses than I contend are incorporated in this order; and I think this abuse of official power seems timely for the Senate's consideration.

I want to thank the Senator from New York for his kind indulgence.

After the conclusion of Mr. MEAD's speech,

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 246) making a further additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, at the outset I wish to say in perfect candor that I am not finding fault with members of the committee or with the committee's report. I am not finding fault with any Senator who votes against the pending amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]. I concede to other Senators the same honest convictions of heart and of soul that I claim for myself.

I realize that on the face of the question before the Senate there is not very much difference between the amendment of the Senator from Florida and the committee measure. As I see it, there is something more involved in the question than $50,000,000, the difference between the two proposals. I think the question before us is a larger question. If I had the opportunity, instead of voting for a $50,000,000 increase, I would gladly vote a $100,000,000 increase. Yet I share with the Senators on both sides of this Chamber the idea that we ought to stop the spending campaign as soon as we can.

It is very desirable to balance the Budget, and I realize, too, that we cannot go on forever without balancing the Budget; but, as I see it, there is something involved more important than balancing the Budget. It is a question of mercy; it is a question of humanity. Our brethren are starving; ragged women and hungry children are suffering for the necessaries of life. They have not been convicted of a crime; they are just as honest, just as patriotic, as we are. They are suffering through no fault of their own; but everyone knows that they are suffering.

Mr. President, it is immaterial to me what is in any party's platform about what the party is going to do if and when it is entrusted with power. We are confronted with a proposition more serious; we are confronted with a question involving humanity; we are confronted with the issue whether little children whose fathers and mothers are on relief, or who have jobs under the W. P. A., are to get sufficient food to nourish their frail bodies. Are they going to grow up to be healthy men and women, fit to take the places which we must soon vacate, or are they to grow to womanhood and manhood emaciated, their little bodies diseased, weak, unable to meet the battle of life which will soon confront them?

I may be entirely wrong, but I can only act on what is presented to me, and what influences my heart and my conscience when I am called upon to take official action. It seems to me that there are too many in the Senate and out of the Senate, in the counties, the States, and the municipalities, yea, in the world, whose viewpoints on life have been changed, too many who think we cannot afford, on account of dollars, to save our people from starvation and our country from ruin.

I think the question is important as a national one. There are too many of our people who have chips on their shoulders, who are ready for a discussion, a quarrel, a fight, if you please, to preserve some unreasonable idea in their minds, an idea which may seem unreasonable to me, though perhaps I may be unreasonable in my opinion. If what I am saying can be construed as a criticism of my fellow Senators and my fellow men, I will be willing to admit that I may be wrong. I want the same rule applied to me. But when I get through with it all, and am called upon to take official action, I must follow the dictates of my conscience.

Mr. President, this is no partisan question. The question as to what party is in power or what party wants to get into power may control the votes of some in the Senate. I cannot complain. They have a right to take that position if they desire to do so; but, as I see the problem, that has nothing whatever to do with the question.

We have before us a question of humanity. We ought to go down deep in our hearts and in our souls in passing on this question, and cast out, if we can, any jealousies, any prejudices, any political or partisan bias or feeling, any feeling because of some injury, either imaginary or real, on account of what someone else has done to us. This is beyond personalities. It goes further and deeper. It is a matter of the human heart, it strikes me, and human mercy ought to move us now. We cannot see our brethren suffer and die, regardless of how they came into their present condition.

So far as the question before us is concerned, I do not care whether we can blame the present condition on this party or that party, this faction or that faction; we have presented to us the picture of millions of our fellow citizens, loyal and true to our flag and our Government, suffering for the necessaries of life. It seems to me we cannot refuse, if we have the milk of human kindness in our hearts, to go to the succor of our fallen brethren, to go out and help the innocent women and children, regardless of who brought about the conditions under which they are suffering.

I am interested in the other questions; I have definite ideas in regard to them, but on this vote I do not believe they ought to move us. We are faced with a condition and we must meet it. It is a matter which appeals to the human heart; it is a matter which appeals to our ideals of justice and mercy; to save the stricken and the fallen, to save those who are suffering for the necessaries of life.

Mr. President, I once had a lawyer friend whom I had come to despise. I thought he was unprofessional; I thought he was dishonest; I thought he had no heart, and I was honest in my conviction.

One day, after an absence of several days from my home, I returned on the train. When I alighted at the front and walked along the platform to the rear of the train, I met my lawyer friend just coming out of the Pullman car, and I asked him if he had been away from town. He said, "No; I have just taken my wife and baby into the car. They are going back to my wife's folks in Ohio." As we stood there, the train slowly moving along, there came the open window, with the little child, his only boy, his only child, in fact, held in its mother's arms. She held him up to the window, and as they passed us he waved his baby fingers and said, "Goodbye, papa." As the train sped away out of sight my friend turned to me and, with the bitter tears rolling down his cheeks, he said, "There goes my baby boy. There goes my only child. I may never see him again, but if I do not I will always remember him as I saw him looking through the car window, held in his mother's arms, while he waved his little hand and said, "Good-bye, papa."

I knew then, Mr. President, that I was wrong about my friend. I knew that I had misjudged him. I knew that, after all, he had a heart; and that little baby boy in his mother's arms speeding toward Ohio carried the key to his heart. When the train disappeared and I saw how his feelings had overcome my friend, I then realized that down deep in his soul there was a chord of human love which, touched by baby fingers, brought forth a music that was sweeter far than any that ever emanated from heavenly harp when fanned by angel wings.

Some writer has said:

> There is so much good in the worst of us, and so much bad in the best of us, that it ill behooves any of us to find fault with the rest of us.

Mr. President, I have seen the Senate pass bills appropriating millions of dollars to send food and money and relief to human sufferers in distant parts of the world. I have seen Congress equip a ship and send supplies across the waters to relieve human suffering. I mention that not in criticism but in praise. I have seen go through the Congress appropriation bills the purpose of which was to relieve human suffering resulting from tornadoes, from floods, from earthquakes. I have seen Congress appropriate large sums of money to provide help to be carried to innocent sufferers in our own country, as we have sent relief to sufferers in many foreign lands.

We now have before us the question of providing relief for our own people. I believe in doing common justice to our own people, our own brethren. I cannot for the life of me understand how anyone who considers what is involved in the question before us can vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RADCLIFFE in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I think everyone agrees with the sentiment just expressed by the Senator from Nebraska. No one would want to vote against a measure if his vote would deprive anyone who was hungry of food or necessary relief. I surely do not want to do so. I think my record in the Senate has demonstrated that I have voted for practically every bill of this nature. Today I shall vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida for various reasons not important to the question I desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska.

The bill which we are now considering appropriates money for work relief, not for the relief of distressed and hungry men and women and little children. It appropriates it for those who are able to work.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from New Mexico will not try to make a speech. If he will ask a question, I shall try to answer it.

Mr. HATCH. I do not want to make a speech, I certainly do not want to take up the Senator's time, but I wish to say that in my State practically as many persons are certified as eligible for relief as the number of those who are receiving it. The number is about equal. In addition to that, there are great numbers of the unemployed whom this bill does not purport to reach. I should like to have the Senator discuss the general proposition of entire and effective relief.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think this is a relief proposal. It provides for work relief, the best kind of relief, the most scientific kind of relief, although it may cost more money than direct relief. I have always believed in taking care of the unemployed, if possible, of giving jobs to men who are able to work, to have them work on something permanent, something which will be beneficial to our people in the years that are to come.

We just heard the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] ably tell what the W. P. A. has done, and we have heard the same story heretofore. It is a wonderful record. Relief came in wages to the men who carried on. The W. P. A. is not the only instrumentality of relief. We have many others. The best method of extending relief is by the payment of wages—employing men at useful occupations. That is what is to be done with the money proposed to be added by the amendment of the Senator from Florida. In my opinion, no relief has ever been suggested which equals work relief.

I do not want the Senator from New Mexico to think that what I have said is in any way intended as a criticism of his vote. I tried to make plain in the beginning that I find no fault with a Senator who takes the other side of the question from that taken by me. I concede his right to do so; I do not criticize him for doing so; but I am trying to vindicate the vote I shall cast. I am responsible only for my own vote. I feel a great responsibility with respect to this question. If I were to vote contrary to my convictions, I should burden my conscience with an evil thought which would stay with me as long as I lived.

While I feel deeply on the question, I know that someone else may feel just as deeply the other way, and vote the other way. That is his privilege. It is also his burden. I should like to help him carry it if I could, but I cannot. All that I can do is to carry my burden. I am not finding fault with my brethren here because they do not agree with me. I realize that probably a majority of the Senators do not agree with me. Nevertheless, that does not lessen my burden.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator has eloquently and very ably stated that work relief, job relief, is the best kind of relief. The American people are entitled to that form of relief. We believe in adequate preparedness and defense, and we are voting sums adequate for that purpose. We are voting for upward of $2,000,000,000 for that purpose. We provide plenty of money for battleships. But if I have to choose between battleships and bread, jobs, work, and wages, I am going to stand by the American people to the best of my ability. In the great struggle between battleships and bread, I cast my vote for bread—for jobs and bread. Let us remember that Admiral Sims, commander in chief of our naval forces in the World War, repeatedly stated that the safest place for battleships in the next war is as far up the Mississippi River as possible.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, for reasons heretofore stated, I have not discussed the question of what we have spent for preparedness, especially in view of what is now in the air. I voted for the measures dealing with preparedness. I supported them. I did so because of the conditions which now exist, whereas a few years ago I would not have supported them and voted for them. It seemed to me that it was necessary now to make the provisions we have made.

However, I do not want to burden the present question with a discussion of the other question, interesting though it may be. I agree with the Senator from Minnesota. As between bread for my own people and battleships to destroy other people, I would vote for bread. I would vote to sustain those in my own country in preference to those in another country.

But in a broader sense I would not forget humanity, no matter where it is. I regret as much as any man living can regret that this old world seems to be topsy-turvy, and that good people are suffering all over the world because of the rule of dictators.

When I took the floor, Mr. President, I intended to confine my remarks entirely to what I think is the only question involved. It is right before us. Our people are suffering. Must we let them suffer and die? Shall we stop to say to the man, or woman, or the little child suffering from lack of food, shivering with cold because of lack of clothing, "If this party or that party had been in power, you would not have been here? If it were not for the reactionaries, or the progressives, or somebody else, you would have been better off. I am going out to defeat those fellows who hurt you and put you there. As soon as I have them defeated, I am coming back to help you."

I do not think that is the question before us. I do not care how the unfortunate persons reached their condition, so far as the present question is concerned. Regardless of who put them there, they are suffering for something, and we have the something in the way of an appropriation which will give them a job, so that they may help to create something which children unborn, when they grow to manhood and womanhood, will enjoy. The W. P. A. workers will build roads; they will build schoolhouses; they will improve sanitation; they will help educational facilities; so that even centuries after they are gone those who are to follow will benefit from their toil, from the work for which we pay them out of the appropriation which we ought to make.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	King	Pittman
Andrews	Donahey	La Follette	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Downey	Lee	Reed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. DOWNEY obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it has been desirable and I have been anxious that we might dispose of the joint resolution today, not only because of the need for prompt action upon it, but in order that we may avoid a session tomorrow, many Senators having previously arranged to be out of the city.

Looking toward a possible disposition of the joint resolution today, I ask unanimous consent that at an hour not later than 5 o'clock today the Senate proceed to vote on the amendment now pending, and all amendments thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. PEPPER. I object.

Mr. NEELY. I object.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that a number of Senators are out of the city, and others have arranged to be away, I shall submit another unanimous-consent request. I had contemplated a session tomorrow unless we could dispose of the joint resolution today. In order to obviate that necessity, I now ask unanimous consent that at an hour not later than 3 o'clock on Monday the Senate proceed to vote on the amendment now pending, and all amendments thereto, basing that request on the understanding that if it is agreed to, we will not have a session tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, just one comment. I believe the joint resolution was passed in the House a week ago today. The subcommittee on deficiencies of the Senate Appropriations Committee, impressed with the necessities, and yielding to the call of emergency, set about hearings the next morning, on Saturday. We have pushed and crowded in order to bring the bill before the Senate.

Today we have heard at great length appeals on behalf of persons who are being dropped from the relief rolls because of the lack of funds, and yet those who are appealing upon that ground are the ones who have taken time during which, if the bill had been passed as the committee recommended, the money would have been on its way, the orders for the discharge from the W. P. A. would have been canceled, and those in whose interest there is so much concern would have been back at work. Now, as I understand, those whose hearts are bleeding for those in distress are the ones who are unwilling to have a vote today; they have objected to that; and now, in substance, they say to us that the debate will continue through today, through tomorrow, and, if necessary, until—as a Senator has said—until next week, unless we acquiesce in their view.

Mr. President, I simply want the responsibility placed where it belongs, upon those who, under the guise of being interested in the unfortunate and those who may be dropped from W. P. A., are preventing the passage of the bill which would appropriate money and which would put on the relief rolls 450,000 every month from now until the 30th day of June next.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH and Mr. PEPPER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has the floor. Does he yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from California yielded to me to make the request I have made, and I presume it is the pending question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has the floor. Does he yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield first to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, in view of the remarks of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], I should like to suggest to him that if those who are now so solicitous about obtaining speedy action upon this $100,000,000 appropriation, because of the fact that they do not want anyone removed from the relief rolls, had shown the same solicitude toward the people on the relief rolls when the original relief appropriation bill came into this body, and had been willing at that time to grant an appropriation of $875,000,000, there would not be any necessity for any sort of action at this time. So the responsibility for any delay that may occur at this particular time cannot be placed upon those of us who happen to believe that $150,000,000 is the amount which should now be appropriated.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Kentucky propounded a unanimous-consent agreement that a vote be taken at 3 o'clock on Monday. Was there objection to that request?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that is a question I can answer. The request was made, but it was not agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I heard no objection.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the request has not been disposed of.

Mr. McNARY. I think I can dispose of it. I think we ought to vote today; failing to vote this afternoon, I think we should vote tonight; and, failing to vote tonight, I think we should have a session tomorrow. Entertaining that view, I shall object.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me for a brief statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish to say, first, in response to the statement made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], that the records of the Senate will disclose that this bill came over from the other House several days ago, and that some 3 or 4 days, at least, elapsed in consideration of the bill by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

In addition to that, at least one Member of the Senate stood here 2 or 3 days before the 3d of April—that Senator happened to be the junior Senator from Florida—and read a telegram from the administrator of his State who said that on the 3d of April 7,000 people in his State would be dropped from the relief rolls if the pending appropriation bill was not passed.

Mr. President, I had a personal telephone conversation with Colonel Harrington about 5 minutes to 12 o'clock today. Colonel Harrington said that tomorrow the last of the 200,000 people who, according to the announcement we had made here under our understanding, were to be dropped from the relief rolls during the first part of April, would be dismissed from the rolls. So the Senator from Colorado waits until just 1 day more elapses between this discussion and the time when the last of the 200,000 will be dropped from the rolls—definitely will be dropped; not may be dropped from the rolls—and then, all of a sudden, he develops a great solicitude, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] has pointed out, for those who are about to be discharged from the relief rolls, when he knew or should have known more than a week ago that that result was about to occur.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I wish to say, in reference to the request made by the leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], that I know there are several Senators who desire to discuss this question, who believe it their duty to discuss it; they have no desire to occupy any protracted length of time, but I am sure that I express the sentiment of the Senators who are in favor of the pending amendment when I say that the Senator from Kentucky made a very reasonable request that a vote should be had by agreement not later than 3 o'clock Monday afternoon, and that the session not be continued tomorrow, because there are Senators on both sides who want to go home, who have made personal engagements of one kind and another, and who will be seriously inconvenienced if we have an unanticipated Saturday session.

If the Senator from Oregon will be kind enough to withdraw his objection, I doubt if any Senator who is in favor of the amendment would make any objection to the very reasonable request made by the Senator from Kentucky that a vote be had not later than 3 o'clock on Monday afternoon, with the understanding that we conclude at a reasonable hour this afternoon and resume the session at the regular hour on Monday morning. I earnestly hope that the Senator from Oregon will withdraw his objection.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Florida will be kind enough to withdraw his objection for a vote at 5 o'clock this afternoon, I will withdraw my objection to the request for a vote on Monday.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Florida does not have any authority to accept the invitation of the Senator from Oregon, for there are Senators on this floor who desire to express their sentiments on this question. I do not know of any emergency that is so great that Senators should not have a fair opportunity to discuss this proposed legislation, which they think important to the country and to the country's welfare. I hope the Senator from Oregon will not insist upon the position he has just taken, and I wish to reiterate that, in my opinion, the proposal made by the Senator from Kentucky will give fair opportunity for discussion and not interfere unduly with the disposition of the question involved.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am not interested in jockeying for position and I am not interested in trying to lay responsibility on one man, or one group, or another for a delay in voting on the pending measure. In my honest judgment, no votes are going to be changed on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida by debate. The result of the vote on that amendment, I think, would be the same if had now as it would be on Monday, or tomorrow, or any other day.

I have no desire to limit any Senator who wishes to discuss the pending question on one side or the other. Before the vote is had I myself hope to make a very brief statement as to my own attitude and the reasons therefor; but I should be willing to forego that if we could get a vote today.

My request was based upon a practical situation. We all realize that, if those who are advocating the pending amendment desire to do so, they can prevent a vote today; they can prevent a vote tomorrow; so that the matter would go over, anyway, until Monday. In view of that situation and in view of the objection made by the proponents of the amendment to a vote today, I thought that it would be reasonable to ask that the Senate vote not later than 3 o'clock on Monday, assuming that, if we met tomorrow, which we will do unless an agreement is obtained to vote on Monday, and unless my motion, when it is made, to adjourn or recess until tomorrow is voted down, we will accomplish just as much by an agreement to vote not later than 3 o'clock, or some other convenient hour on Monday. I wish to say that, unless we obtain some sort of an agreement, I shall move at the proper time when today's proceedings shall have been concluded to recess until tomorrow, and we will proceed with this bill without any limitation or any agreement.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me for two inquiries?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. DOWNEY. I do.

Mr. NEELY. First, my inquiry of the able leader of the majority, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], is Would he be willing to modify his request so as to provide that the Senator from California may deliver his address on this subject this afternoon, and then further to the effect that the time on Monday from 12 o'clock until 3 shall be controlled on the basis of some proper division between those who favor and those who oppose the amendment? Otherwise, one Senator may obtain the floor on Monday at 12 o'clock and hold it until the roll call at 3 o'clock.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize the danger to which the Senator from West Virginia calls attention, and I was the victim of a similar situation when the former measure on this subject was before the Senate.

If the agreement I have suggested is entered into, it will in no way interfere with continuing the session today until the usual hour of adjournment, around 5 o'clock. If the agreement is entered into, it is not my purpose that we shall stop work today at this time and wait until Monday to resume the discussion because, if there are a number of Senators who wish to speak on the amendment, they will have at least 2 more hours today in which to do it. I do not feel that it ought to be suggested that if we enter into the agreement today, we shall then adjourn until Monday. We shall have at least enough time for the Senator from California, and probably other Senators, to speak before we recess today.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I included in my inquiry the suggestion that the Senate remain in session until the Senator from California shall have concluded his address because I understood the able Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] to indicate that unless the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] withdrew his suggestion that we remain in session until 5 o'clock the Senator from Oregon would not withdraw his objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, if the Senator from Florida should withdraw his objection to voting at 5 o'clock, and no other Senator should renew the objection, it would not make any difference whether or not the Senator from Oregon withdrew his objection, because the matter would be disposed of by a vote at 5 o'clock; so that is a moot question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky renew his request?

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest that we proceed for a while and see if we cannot work out the matter later.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I should like to propound an inquiry.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I desire to suggest that if Senators will decide this question after I shall have spoken they will have just as much opportunity then as they would have now. Otherwise I prefer to yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I take it that no one could have listened to the very noble and moving words of the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] without having rise in his heart a profound sense of melancholy as he reflects upon this wealthy empire and the multitudes of unhappy, suffering, insecure people within it. I do not desire to engage in any discussion over figures, and I am expressing merely my own estimate; but it is my fixed opinion that in the State of California alone we have at least 300,000 families whose heads are desperately seeking for work and succor, and who vitally need the $50 per month which $50,000,000 would provide for that number of families.

I may be mistaken in that belief, but in the past 10 years I have seen such distress and insecurity among hundreds of thousands of California families that I feel free to express this opinion.

I do not desire, however, to speak today upon the humanitarian aspects of this measure. I can well endorse the sentiments of the Senator from Nebraska. I desire rather to address myself to the economic issues involved in this matter; and I say to you, Mr. President, that not only is there involved in this question the well-being and security of hundreds of thousands of desperate, unhappy families but there is involved in this question of a balanced or unbalanced Budget the very preservation of this Nation.

More than 10 or 15 years ago I made statements of so pessimistic and alarming a nature that my clients, my friends, and my very relatives went around the block to avoid meeting me. I therefore avoid, whenever I can, making pessimistic and gloomy prophecies. I prefer to read from some economic publication or authority, and, through them, speak my message to this body and to the American people.

Some 2 or 3 months ago Fortune Magazine, the publication of the industrial aristocrats of this Nation, had a round-table discussion on political and economic issues. At that discussion there were present noted business leaders of America, noted economists, and noted labor leaders. They disagreed widely upon many of the issues, but they all agreed upon the statement which I now desire to read to this body:

> We do not believe it is alarmist to say that unless America can make greater headway in solving its economic and political problems and unless we can develop a new spirit of unity this country before many years may be confronted by the danger of internal dissolution. This danger certainly is more real than that of foreign invasion.

Since a great economic publication made that statement, I desire to declare to this body and to the American people that we, as officials of this body, confront in the economic depression which still vexes us a more desperate and tremendous crisis than if great foreign armies were massing in Mexico and Canada, for I propose to attempt to show by the statements of economists whose declarations cannot be denied that we are but 1 year or, at the utmost, 2 or 3 years away from another great depression; and just as the facts and figures in 1928 should have shown to every man the coming of the panic of 1929, and just as in 1937 the indexes pointed to another depression, so it is claimed today that unless fundamental remedies are applied to our sick economy the American people will again be devastated by panic and by depression.

Within the past year the orthodox economists of this Nation have entirely changed from their optimistic prophecies to gloomy forebodings. There is at Harvard University one of our leading economists, Professor Hansen, noted not only for his ability but for his conservatism. In last December, speaking as president of the American Economic Association, he declared in dismal words that we are face to face with a disintegrating civilization because of the superfluity of savings in our financial structure. He but echoed the words that we pensionites have been declaring now for 10 or 15 years—that as we have moved out of the era when savings were needed, pensions will be required more and more not to build more farms and cities and factories but to consume the boundless and endless products that will flow from the present farms and factories whenever our unemployed are given the right to work in them.

Let me read to you the declaration by Professor Hansen which I state to you expresses the opinion of 80 percent of the economists in Washington today. I say to you without fear of contradiction that if the economists in Washington today would speak to you frankly and fearlessly, they would tell you that another great depression impends, and that that depression will be upon us whether we have a Republican or whether we have a Democratic President.

I have no desire to appeal to party platitudes or to party partisanship. I desire to state my position as a simple matter of arithmetic, and address myself equally to the gentlemen upon the right as well as to the two groups upon the left.

Let me now read, for the RECORD, what Professor Hansen says:

> The swift stream of events in the last quarter century offers overwhelming testimony in support of the thesis that the economic order of the western world is undergoing in this generation a structural change no less basic and profound in character than that transformation of economic life and institutions which we are wont to designate loosely by the phrase "the industrial revolution." We are passing, so to speak, over a divide which separates the great era of growth and expansion of the nineteenth century from an era which no man, unwilling to embark on pure conjecture, can as yet characterize with clarity or precision. We are moving swiftly out of the order in which those of our generation were brought up, into no one knows what.

Mr. President, that declaration comes from one of the citadels of orthodoxy, from the hand of a great, conservative economist. It speaks plain words to us here in the Senate, telling us that if we would not be derelict in our duty to the suffering multitudes of this Nation, we had best state at last with clearness and frankness the economic problem before us, and then take the measures necessary to solve that problem.

Mr. President, the amount of the appropriation here in dispute is comparatively insignificant. Fifty million dollars would add to our already noble debt of forty billions a mere one-eighth of 1 percent. Our annual Budget now approximates about $10,000,000,000 a year, and this would not materially add to that sum. But, insignificant as $50,000,000 comparatively is, its bare consideration involves the question of a balanced or unbalanced Budget.

I wish to say to those who oppose my ideals that I impugn neither the integrity, the ability, nor yet the humanity, of anyone who takes a different position on the proposed amendment. We are confronted with two great evils. One of them is a further expansion of an already swollen debt. The other is the cutting of purchasing power by balancing the Budget, which, in my opinion, would within 90 days precipitate us into another depression. We are therefore confronted with an alternative choice between two evils. I think too often public officials in opposition with each other come to believe there is a choice between the good and the evil. That is not true as a general rule. Statecraft must concern itself generally with the choice between the lesser and the greater of two evils. All of us abhor war, but all of us want our own liberty, and while war is a great evil, we may embrace that evil to escape the yet greater evil of the loss of our liberty. So I say, Mr. President, that in the matter before us, I shall be among the first to recognize the intelligence and the rationality of those gentlemen who point out that an already inflated deficit, if allowed to accumulate for a few years longer, will undoubtedly imperil every bank and insurance company in the United States; yea, the very stability of our economy.

At the heart of public credit is public confidence, and let public confidence, once stricken, die, and public credit dies with it. In whatever I say I desire that all who hear me should realize that I know full well that every million dollars added to our debt will further imperil us in the course along which we must go.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, I am convinced that in the tremendous mathematical crisis which I shall attempt in a moment to depict we would be taking the wrong course if we failed to appropriate every dollar possible, within reasonable limits, however much it might increase the Federal debt. I am convinced that, if we were today to balance the Budget, within 90 days the depression and panic of 1929 and 1937 would repeat themselves.

I desire to place before this body, as a social scientist and a mathematician, a formula which I have developed and thought about for over 15 years. That formula indicated with clarity and precision that the panic and depression of 1929 must come, it indicated with clarity and certainty that the depression of 1937 must come, and it indicates beyond the peradventure of a doubt that within the next year, possibly, and certainly not more than 2 or 3 years from now, we will again be precipitated into a disastrous depression.

Mr. President, it is surprising to me that many men of ability, many men who are profoundly intelligent in their own work, have never understood or conceived the basic operation of the capitalistic system; and that I may not be misunderstood, let me say that I am for the capitalistic system. I think any attempt to introduce communism or state socialism, under a bureaucracy operating here at Washington, would cause our internal break-down and the dissolution of the American Commonwealth. When I say that I am going to discuss the basic operation of the capitalistic system that does not mean that I shall make any attack upon it, but rather attempt to find the means of keeping a free economy operating here in the United States, which may possibly be the last refuge of free people.

Mr. President, the basic operation of the capitalistic system is simple. Under that system, businessmen produce the goods and services of the Nation. But, remember, that in the production of the goods and services of our people, businessmen do something else; they generate the national income. Production of national income and production of goods are simultaneous processes. The wages, interest, rents, profits, bonuses, salaries, and pensions which we enjoy are paid out by business in the production and distribution of our wealth. Consequently, it amounts to this: That the national income is nothing more than tickets upon the wealth which we produce; and to the extent that those tickets are not used, wealth in the form of inventories must accumulate, or that wealth must be sold beneath the cost of production.

Mr. President, there is not an economist in the world who will deny the statement I have made. I say it is the most fundamental fact of our existence. We cannot judge any of these great problems which engage our attention without a clear and unmistakable understanding of the basic operation of our capitalistic economy.

This matter is so important that I desire to read to this body definitions given by orthodox economists. I could multiply these definitions endlessly, but I will read merely two definitions, taken from America's Capacity to Consume, one of the publications of the Brookings Institution. I am stressing and emphasizing this point because it lies at the very heart of the argument which I desire to present. I read from page 10 of this publication:

> It should also be understood that the wages, salaries, rents, interest, and profits received by the population as a result of productive activities in the course of a year are virtually identical with the aggregate value of the goods and services which constitute the national income. That is to say, the sums distributed to the various claimants constitute the cost of producing the national product. This money income, as distributed, becomes the purchasing power by means of which the people acquire the commodities which are being turned out. In short, in a pecuniary society the productive process gives rise to a flow of monetary income from production to the hands of individuals, by whom it is directed either to consumption or investment channels.

I now read from page 137:

> From the national standpoint, production and income are what may be called simultaneous equivalents. Production generates income and, measured in terms of money, the two are exactly equal; the net value of the national product is made up of the parts distributed as wages, salaries, profits, rents, interest, dividends, and such undivided profits as are retained in corporate business. The national income may therefore be defined as the money equivalent of the goods and services produced within a given period of time or, stated in another way, the goods and services equivalent of the purchasing power disbursed in the process of production.

Mr. President, in 1937 we had a national income of over $69,000,000,000. This merely means that business, in producing goods and services of the Nation, paid out over $69,000,000,000 in the form of wages, salaries, rents, interest, and profits.

Mr. President, we come now to our second and most important factor. Under a capitalistic economy we have that phenomenon we call savings. Savings are the excess of income over expenditure, either for the individual or for the Nation. Those savings are diverted out of the money which industry has produced, and which industry must recapture if it would remain solvent.

Over a period of 150 years, during the industrial revolution in the United States of America, the national savings have amounted to 10 percent, 15 percent, 20 percent, 25—yes; even 30 or 35 percent of the national income, increasing or diminishing according to the prosperity of our people.

Mr. President, for 150 years those savings were diverted out of the national income into our banks. Had they remained there the capitalistic economy could not have operated for 30 days. If they had remained in stagnation, or even 5 or 10 percent of them had, our economy must have disintegrated and fallen. But over the course of 150 years, up until 1910, we had insufficient savings to develop and build this great Nation, and the need was not to find an investment outlet for savings but to find savings for development. We utilized not only the savings of our people, but we anticipated savings by borrowing from banks, which involved the creation of new purchasing power, and by obtaining foreign loans.

Yes, Mr. President, it was the savings of our people which made possible the capital growth of this Nation. But remember something else. It was also the development of the Nation that made savings possible. Never forget that things equal to the same thing are equal to each other. Savings made possible capital growth, and capital growth made savings possible. That is axiomatic and cannot be denied.

The economists are generally agreed that by 1910 we had entered an era in which the savings passing into banks would have difficulty in finding an outlet. The reasons for that could be discussed for more than an hour, and I shall not undertake to do it. I myself am convinced that had the Great War not come on and by its fury and hate and passion destroyed hundreds of billions of savings in this Nation, the depression with which we are grappling today would have arrived 20 or 25 years sooner. But in 1914 Europe engaged itself in one of those periodic wars that have devastated that unhappy continent now for a thousand years, and shells and shot, torpedoes and bombs destroyed vast accumulations of savings, and temporarily the problem of savings itself.

Mr. President, during our participation in the Great War we increased our public debt at the rate of $1,000,000,000 a month; almost $25,000,000,000 in 25 months. That tremendous purchasing power coming from borrowed money was sufficient to release idle funds and to speed up our industrial and commercial processes. While at the beginning of that war we had two or three million persons idle, the tremendous suction and power of the billion dollars of purchasing power a month destroyed all unemployment almost overnight, so we finally found no unemployment in the Nation during that war period.

I was living in Sacramento at that time. I was wont, before that period, to walk down into the slums and the lower parts of town, and I saw thousands of the wrecks and waifs of civilization there. When the Great War came they vanished overnight. Submarginal workers as they were, they were drawn into industry and into production and became decent, law-abiding people. Multitudes that had filled the police courts of this Nation entered productive employment.

Mr. President, from 1914 to 1920 we had no residential or business building to speak of, no capital formation except for war purposes. We emerged from that war a creditor rather than a debtor nation. Despite the horror and the destruction of war we emerged with an active, energetic people and a great and growing national income. As Senators will recall, we went into the depression of 1920, when the inventories in the hands of businessmen accumulated at a great rate, but we soon came out of that. Starting in 1921 with a national income of fifty or sixty billion dollars, according to the Brookings Institution we built that income up to $86,000,000,000 by 1929. And according to the Brookings Institution the savings of this Nation increased from six or seven billion dollars in 1920 to over $19,000,000,000 in 1929. Yet, Mr. President, from 1925 on it was plainly apparent that the depression of 1929 had to come. Why was that? As our national income grew, so grew with it the savings of the Nation. Whenever the month or year would come that those savings would stagnate, inventories correspondingly must stagnate and business become insolvent. Remember this: In the period from 1928 to 1929 we had a combination of capital formation items that may never be duplicated again in the history of this world. We had done no residential building for 5 or 6 years, but our population at that time was increasing more than 16,000,000 every decade—twice in size what the increase now is. Consequently residential building grew with that great amount of savings to two or three times as much as is now being spent for residential construction. We spent for residential construction three or four, yes, even five billion dollars, in one year; in 1926 alone we constructed almost 1,000,000 homes.

Likewise, we opened up the great automobile industry. We manufactured four or five million automobiles and trucks in the banner years, and we built the factories to produce them.

We enlarged the textile, the glass, and the rubber industry and all the other great industries that lie back of the automobile industry. We erected service stations on almost every corner. We constructed great refineries, and laid down pipe lines, and the States, cities, and counties entered upon a tremendous era of building highways.

Mr. President, we likewise, as will be recalled, entered upon an era of constructing office buildings, and apartment houses, and hospitals, and golf courses, and warehouses, and all the other types of business structures.

What I desire to point out to the Senate is the fact that despite all those tremendous outlets for investment capital, there were not enough outlets even in that magnificent period of expansion to take care of our savings. And what did we do? I am not criticising anyone for what was done. It was a natural social impulse. But under the force and pressure of that great volume of savings we loaned almost $500,000,000 a year, I think, to foreign nations over and above what they loaned us. And that was not enough to absorb those savings, and we developed to its fullest extent this thing we called the installment contract, and for a short period those installment contracts absorbed as much as two or three billion dollars a year. And we granted false credits to the people through the stock-market boom, which in itself acted as a source of consumptive power.

But, Mr. President, the record was written plain in the economic statistics of that time. Whenever residential building should falter, whenever business construction should begin to decline, whenever the futility of foreign loans should be proved, whenever installment contracts should mortgage the worker beyond his paying power, whenever the States, cities, and counties should reach their limit of indebtedness by way of building highways, then, Mr. President, the avenues to take away those savings would falter and fail and the depression would be upon us.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I should rather continue.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. DOWNEY. I thank the Senator very much.

I do not mean to say that anyone could have foreseen exactly how these factors would strike, weaken, and break down the business structure. As will be recalled, when the bears won the victory over the bulls in Wall Street the whole empty edifice came down in ruins, and millions upon millions of our best citizens were precipitated into the unhappy period of the 1930's.

Mr. President, I am not here to criticize any former President of the United States. Even as I desire to extol the President now in the White House, so I pay the tribute to Herbert Hoover. He was a man of high ability, integrity, and devotion. It was not his fault that, caught as he was in the involved circumstances of the Presidency, he failed to see the approaching storm and failed to prepare for it. He thought that the sun would continue indefinitely to shine in the industrial age.

I should like to discuss, for the benefit of the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], exactly what happened in the first 120 days of 1933. Those of us who heard yesterday his question to the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] remember that he asked how it happened, when the Democratic Party was attempting to balance its budget in the first 120 days, that we had the greatest period of industrial development that we have ever had. That statement, which might well be put in Ripley's column, is accurate and correct; but what we should remember is that the period referred to was nothing more than an inventory boom. The devaluation of gold, the approach of the N. R. A., the tremendous depletion of inventories up to that time, and the fear of inflation caused men to work night and day building up shrunken inventories.

I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] that capital growth did not follow. There was an almost complete break-down of residential building and capital formation. By the middle of the summer the inventory boom, which accompanied a stock-market boom, had run its course. We again started upon a deflation, which was not checked until we spent billions of dollars through the C. W. A., I think it was, in the next few months.

Mr. President, I desire at this time to address my remarks particularly to the distinguished junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY]. A new school of thought has arisen in Washington. Many of the liberals and leaders of the New Deal administration are now telling us that the present depression was caused by monopolistic profiteering. In May 1938 the distinguished Senator from Montana delivered what seems to me to have been one of the ablest speeches ever given in this body, although I must say I totally disagree with his conclusion.

His conclusion, and it is the same conclusion which many of the New Deal leaders are now stating, was that profiteering arising from monopolistic practices diverted out of consuming power, by unrighteous and high prices, so large a part of the national income that there was not sufficient purchasing power to take away the goods which were being produced.

To me that thesis is entirely untenable. I would that the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] were present that he might hear and undertake the testing of the validity of what I am about to say.

I declare that in 1937 unfair prices, monopolistic practices, and the profits of business had less to do with the depression than at any other time. I should like to read extracts from a pamphlet published by the Department of Commerce showing why that statement must be true. Preliminarily I wish to say that the cold facts are that in 1937 farm income and wages received a substantially higher part of the national income than in any other period. Business profits did not increase in 1937 over 1936, except in proportion to the increase in income; but wages to all employees and income to farmers did increase. Let me read a few extracts from the report of the Department of Commerce:

> Aggregate compensation of employees, including wages paid on work-relief projects as well as accruals under the unemployment compensation and old-age insurance plans of the social-security program, increased nearly $5,000,000,000, or 12 percent, in 1937 over 1936.

Remember, the national income increased only 10 percent, but wages increased 12 percent. Out of a total increase in actual income of less than $6,000,000,000, wages of workers took approximately $5,000,000,000, and all the rest of it was taken by an increase in farm income, as I shall later show.

The distinguished Senator may well ask me, Where did the increased profits of 10 percent to business come from if wages and farm income took as much as the money increase was? Strangely enough, the payments on account of interest declined about $600,000,000, and the profits of successful businesses increased about $600,000,000. So, while profits did increase in proportion to the increase of national income, we can trace a balance between that factor and the decrease in interest. Wages and farm income increased, in money payments, more than all the increase of national income, which comprehended within it all the increased prices about which the antimonopoly group talk.

Total labor income was 9 percent lower in 1937 than in 1929 as compared with declines of 10 percent in interest payments, 15 percent in entrepreneurial withdrawals, 16 percent in dividends, and 24 percent in net rents and royalties.

In other words, in 1937 labor and farmers had come back closer to a parity with 1929 than had any other group.

Average full-time earnings of all workers, as shown in table No. 4, increased from $1,235 in 1936 to $1,316 in 1937, bringing the level in 1937 to within 9.3 percent of that in 1929.

The income of the workers, considering the decreased cost of living, was brought to a higher actual and per capita level than that of 1929. I have many other figures of the same character to demonstrate that fact.

I wish clearly to be understood upon this question. I am not here defending monopoly and big business. To the extent there were and are monopolistic practices they should be condemned and the present practices should be rectified. I propose now to show to this body that if there had not been a dollar of increased prices on any goods, if there had been no monopolies, the depression of 1937 was still inevitable.

Now let us consider a few facts with regard to savings. The actual physical production of goods in the United States in 1937 was fairly close to that in 1929. While the money income was only $67,000,000,000 as compared to $82,000,000,000 or $83,000,000,000, prices were 15 percent lower on the whole. Consequently the actual physical income in 1937 was almost back to where it was in 1929.

In 1929 we had a superfluity of savings in the financial structure, and, just as in 1929 those savings accumulated beyond the power of inventories to absorb them, so it also happened in 1937. I declare that, as the result of all the figures with respect to savings developed in Washington and elsewhere, it is my firm conviction that we attempted to save $15,000,000,000 in the first 9 months of 1937. We attempted to save far more than there was any possibility of finding an outlet for. Let me say to distinguished Senators who believe in the antimonopoly theory that the percentage of savings was far lower among the higher brackets, due to income taxing, than in 1929, while the percentage of savings among the lower brackets was higher because the workers who were employed—not the unemployed but the ones who were employed—were receiving absolutely a larger income.

Senators, let us bear constantly in mind that what we call savings are diverted out of the industrial income and have to be recaptured or industry will fail. We have one method of saving that we call debt retirement. If you doubt, Mr. President, that that is a method of saving, try it out with the Internal Revenue Bureau, and you will ascertain that the Government does tax you upon income by which debt is retired.

In 1937 we had reached a $90,000,000,000 long-term debt structure. I ask Senators, if they will, to follow these figures, because I declare that in these figures are wrapped up the very heart and soul of the depression and the explanation of how recovery may be made. In 1937 we had $90,000,000,000 of long-term debts. We had $28,000,000,000 of urban mortgages—$17,000,000,000 on homes and $11,000,000,000 on business structures—and we had $13,000,000,000 on our utilities; $13,000,000,000 on our railroads; $7,000,000,000 on our farms, and $7,000,000,000 on our industrial factory structures, making, roughly, $70,000,000,000; and, in addition to that, the States, cities, and counties owed $20,000,000,000 more, or a total of $90,000,000,000.

During the 4 years prior to 1937 the long-term debt had dropped from $94,000,000,000 to $90,000,000,000. Disregarding compositions, bankruptcies, and foreclosures, the debt was being paid off faster than it was accruing.

In 1937 we reduced that debt by 5 percent, or $4,500,000,000. Mr. President, in that same year all the business construction in the United States only took $4,200,000,000 of savings. What does that mean? It means that while in the past the construction of the great cities and factories of the Nation had absorbed our savings, we have now reached a point where debt retirement produces a sufficient sum of money to provide a reinvestment fund to take care of all construction activity.

What happens when debts are retired? Suppose a man owns a home on which he pays $25 a month upon the principal. He receives that as a wage. Does he spend it for the inventories that generated that $25? He does not. He pays it to the bank or the building and loan association or the individual who loaned it to him, and that bank or other creditor does not spend it for the consumptive goods that produced it but loans it. I say to Senators, taking the picture as a whole, we have reached this desperate and hazarous position—and it is desperate and hazardous—that the retirement of loans upon existing debts will be sufficient to take care of all future needs—with perhaps a slight margin lacking—of the States, cities, and counties, the utilities, factories, farms, and residences.

Beyond the $4,200,000,000 that was spent in building our railroads, utilities, farms, and residences in 1937, we spent about $2,000,000,000 more in capital formation. Where did that $2,000,000,000 come from? All of it came from the savings of great corporations. I am not criticizing or complaining of that; I think it probably was a very fortunate thing. That indicates clearly that, so far as the manufacturing business is concerned, from the process of earnings such businesses will develop sufficient capital to provide for their plant expansion and other producers' goods.

Take the Henry Ford Co. That company has developed a billion dollars' worth of assets by the savings accrued from the earnings coming from the manufacture of the Ford automobile. Consequently, I say, Mr. President, that in 1937 debt retirement, plus corporation savings, developed sufficient capital to take care of every need that we could have in 1937.

I likewise make the declaration that it will be many a year before we reach as great an expenditure in capital formation as we had in 1937. We will surpass 1937 in residential construction. In that year we utilized $1,400,000,000, and this year probably we will expend for the same purpose $1,800,000,000; but in every other line of capital formation we will be fortunate if in one year we develop as great an investment outlet as we had in 1937.

Consequently, what was the condition left in 1937? In the first place, we had, perhaps, a few hundred thousand people with incomes in excess of five or six thousand dollars a year. They probably saved approximately four billion or five billion dollars. Let us dispose of that in a simple way. We have what we call dissavings. To the extent one man loses another man can save without impairing the stability of the business economy. If one corporation pays dividends out of its surplus, it sells stock or bonds or borrows the amount, and that allows another individual to make a saving equal to the dissaving. If a farmer loses a thousand dollars and sells a thousand dollars' worth of bonds, that absorbs a thousand dollars of savings. The economists are agreed that the dissavings of our corporations coming from losses in the payment of dividends in excess of their earnings take care of $4,000,000,000 or $5,000,000,000 or $6,000,000,000 of savings. Consequently, let us assume that that balances the savings of the wealthy man.

Now, Senators, I come to the portion of this address which is my deepest and most vital concern, and has been for 15 years, because I say to you this picture clearly indicates that never again can the American worker save. It is just not possible; and if we do not have the courage and the intelligence to shift away from an economy of savings—to the extent that they cannot be utilized—to an economy of pensions sufficient to satisfy the needs of the senior citizens in decency and comfort, this capitalistic civilization is doomed to disintegration, and will carry down with it every property right and every equity in the Nation.

Why do I say that?

My practice has largely been among the middle class and the unfortunates of this world. I have polled their savings and financial conditions over a period of 15 years. When the depression came in 1930 workers were thrown out of their jobs and went to live with their relatives. In my railroad town of Sacramento the young people doubled up with the older people. They ran bills at grocery stores. They used up insurance policies and bank accounts. When we began to go back into an era of prosperity in 1935 the wife who had been through misery, watching her home imperiled, would in many cases say to her husband, "Tom, in Heaven's name do not let us get caught again in that gulf of misery. Let us save $5, or $10, or $15, or $20, or $50 a month out of the pay check." So it was that into bureau drawers and into socks and into banks and into insurance companies and into building and loan associations these savings were diverted out of the industrial income into stagnation.

How much did they amount to? It is my opinion that we had about 20,000,000 middle-class families once more back at work who on an average tried to save $25 a month. Some of them were saving only $5 or $10, or even $1; but others of them were saving $50 or $75, as I know from having polled those families; and I am now regarding only families with incomes of under $500 a month. Twenty million families at $25 a month equals $500,000,000—$500,000,000 coming out of the income that those workers and those families had received from the businessmen of America; $500,000,000 not spent, but $500,000,000 saved; $500,000,000 not utilized in capital formation or residential building, because other mediums of investment money took care of them; $500,000,000 that we can trace in the increasing savings accounts, and the stagnation in the velocity of our demand accounts.

If industry was paying out $500,000,000 a month more than it was capturing, how could industry keep going at all? I will tell you, Senators, how it kept going—by the increase of the inventories. The economic bureaus of the Nation saw that the inventories of our corporations, farmers, miners, and businessmen increased at a faster rate in 1937 than at any other time since at least 1925. Those inventories, according to Dun & Bradstreet and the National Bureau of Economic Research, increased at the rate of four or five hundred million dollars a month. They had increased by four or five hundred million dollars from January 1, 1937, to September 1, 1937.

The reason why I proclaim that profiteering and high prices have nothing to do with diverting too much consumptive power out of the market is this: Corporate savings decreased $1,000,000,000 in 1937. In other words, taking corporations as a whole, they actually paid out of their surplus accounts $1,000,000,000 more than was placed therein; and, Senators, that is only half the story. The successful corporations increased their debts and decreased their cash position—not their corporate surpluses; I am talking merely about cash now—by another $1,000,000,000 in the first 9 or 10 months of 1937. But, Senators, nothing could happen except what did happen. We were attempting to save $15,000,000,000. At least five or six billion dollars of that amount could not be balanced by the dissavings or losses of others, by residential building or capital formation. For 10 months the businessmen of this Nation with confidence and vigor continued to manufacture; and at the ninth or tenth month, when retail orders stopped coming in, when the manufacturer could not sell to the wholesaler and the wholesaler could not sell to the retailer, men said, "Why, we cannot sell what we now have; what is the use of manufacturing more?"

I have heard eminent Senators on this floor declare that big business should have continued to manufacture. Mr. President, businessmen will not manufacture when they know they cannot sell. Complaint is made by the anti-monopolists about a rigid price structure. It is said that the automobile companies, instead of selling at a loss, decreased their output to what is termed the "break even" point. If any of us were the heads of Ford or General Motors or Chrysler or Plymouth, we would do exactly what those business leaders did when we realized that we could not sell what we were manufacturing. Of course, we would let some of our employees go, because otherwise we could not remain solvent.

The claim is made that these great corporations made such tremendous profits that they diverted into stagnation too much purchasing power. Let us take the most gigantic of them all, the greatest technological organism that the world has ever known—General Motors.

General Motors has a capital structure of about $1,600,000,000. In 1937 its gross output was almost exactly that amount. It made something less than $200,000,000—$196,000,000, to be exact. That constituted about 12 percent upon its gross business or upon its capital assets, as you wish to term it. But let me point this out to you in fairness to big business, and to what we call a competitive monopoly, and I feel rather strange in speaking as the advocate of big business in this matter, because it has uniformly and very bitterly opposed me, but may it please you, Mr. President, we must have the facts.

General Motors was the most prosperous of any of the great corporations, and it had reached such a tremendous point of efficiency that it could manufacture a car worth the same amount as the Plymouth or the Ford for 30 or 40 dollars less, give the same bargain to the buyer, and perhaps 50 or 60 or 70 dollars less than the many automobile corporations that lost money. Twenty years ago we had 86 automobile-manufacturing corporations. We now have 16. General Motors has come to its present position by virtue of savage competition. In that competition it has become so efficient, and its enterprises are so far-flung that it could make 12 percent when other automobile companies might make only 2 or 3 or 4 percent. If anyone wants to destroy the profit system, that is one thing, but I say you cannot complain of great business, which by efficiency can produce one of the finest products of all time merely because it is successful.

General Motors gave us far better value in 1937 for the same amount of money than in 1929. It paid higher wages and produced a better car, as I have said. Likewise in fairness to General Motors, let me point this out to you—and I am speaking about that corporation merely as an example of all of them: A substantial part of the stock of General Motors, was owned by wealthy men—Raskob, Du Pont, Knutsen. You will remember that two or three hundred of their executives received cash bonuses amounting to a total of $10,000,000. I believe Sloan and Knutsen received close to $1,000,000 each as a bonus for the profits that had been made. If you complain of 12-percent profits being too high, let me suggest to you that I have a client in California, strange as it may seem, who is a multimillionaire. From 1930 to 1937 he lost about $200,000 a year; but in 1937 he got away to a good start, and he made $1,000,000 clear profit, and a large part of that was in dividends from the General Motors Corporation. Do you know that out of that $1,000,000 he gave about $875,000 in taxes to the Federal Government and to the State of California?

The Federal Government has a tax as high as 64 percent on all incomes of $250,000. The State of California takes another 15 percent, so that there is a tax of 79 percent. I say that in a large majority of the cases of the stockholders of General Motors, after they had paid their State and Federal income taxes, they did not receive over 4 or 5 or 6 percent on their proportionate part of their investment in General Motors; and that is generally true. Most of these profits were made by corporations with wealthy stockholders, and Uncle Sam was the partner who took three-fourths or four-fifths of the big profits; and if Uncle Sam had not gotten those profits from wealthy men, we would have had to levy additional taxes.

I say these things, which I know do not sound well in the ears of certain of my colleagues, but they are the simple truth. We must not deceive ourselves. We must not find another whipping boy for this depression. The truth is that we have reached an era in our economy when the savings of workers alone, coming from a nation fully employed, cannot be absorbed.

Take the case of our railroad companies for instance. If they make not one dollar of profit from now on their workers will save 15 or 20 percent of their incomes in an era of prosperity; and the railroads are built. This is not a question of monopoly or high prices. As Professor Hansen says, we have passed from the era of very large expansion to an era in which we will require very little in the way of new capital goods.

In this particular decade our population increase is less than 8,000,000. From 1920 to 1930 it increased 16,000,000. For many years I lived in the city of Sacramento, and I know almost every home, almost every factory, and certainly every office building there. In Sacramento County we are not producing half of the wealth we could produce if we were freely operating. With depleted income, we cannot absorb half of the savings that will be produced.

Let us see exactly why the depression came in 1937 instead of in 1936. There was only one great change in the factors between 1936 and 1937. According to the Treasury report in 1936, the Government paid out $3,700,000,000 more than it took in, and in the calendar year 1937, according to the Treasury report, we paid out only $200,000,000 more than we took in.

In 1936 the inventories would have increased at the rate of four or five or six hundred million a month, except that there was an increase in installment contracts, and the Government disbursed almost four hundred million of money which it borrowed from savings, and that money kept the inventory increase in 1937 down to $2,000,000,000. Practically every economist in Washington agrees to the mathematical statement which I am making. They are not willing to declare it in public, but I suggest to any of my colleagues that in the quiet of their offices, in consultation, the economists in any of the great departments will corroborate the statements I have made.

Now, what of the future? With our present productive capacity and with full employment we could have a national income of a hundred billion or a hundred and ten billion dollars. There are in our country not only ten or eleven million men totally idle, but there are five or six million part-time workers, and there are professional men idling around their offices who do not work at all. As we go into higher production, we decrease the per unit cost of labor. Let us assume a national productivity of a hundred billion dollars. If as a result of some war or some miracle we should get our production up to a hundred billion, Mr. President, we would have national savings of at least $25,000,000,000, and there is no possible way that capital formation could absorb more than ten or twelve billion at that rate of national income. Our homes and business structures are largely built and our railroads and utilities are completed. In my own State of California we destroy great parts of our farm crops, and our factories now operate at about one-half capacity. We have reached an era, according to almost every economist, when savings will permanently outrun the Nation's needs.

Mr. President, where will this crisis lead? At the present time it is probable that the flow of savings into banks is slightly greater than what comes out in public borrowing and capital formation. It is doubtful that for 1 year we can keep ourselves from another depression. If we keep away from it this year, the second or third year will find us in it; and perhaps the other party will have the trials and tribulations of dealing with the crisis, and I hope that if they do, God may speed them on their way. They will need assistance.

I, for one, cannot accept the possibility of communism, or state socialism, or collectivism. If we would attempt to operate the Nation's industries from Washington, I believe that a Federal bureaucracy would break down under the burdens and trials. I do not believe that the American people would submit to a dictatorship. Should any man or body of men in Washington attempt to set up a dictatorship, I would expect the break-up of the American Union; and I am speaking now with measured solemnity. In any event, as for me, I have no desire to become the regimented member of a homogeneous human herd driven hither and thither and yon at the crack of some dictator's whip.

I say, Mr. President, there are just two simple, easy things that we have to do to extricate ourselves from this dilemma. In the first place, great masses of our people can no longer save, and when they attempt to save they bring on a depression, unemployment comes, and their scanty savings are destroyed. In my own State four out of five people past 50 years of age are in despair and insecurity. They wear around their hearts iron bands of desperation, forged there by loss of jobs, subnormal incomes, their being a burden upon their children or their children burdening them.

The great masses of our senior citizens are the men and women who built this Nation. Nine out of ten of these men and women, past 50 and 60 and 70 years of age, were brought up in frugality, thrift, and hardship. With their toil and their sweat, and sometimes their blood, they built our railroads, our utilities, our factories, and our cities. All we have to do is to run these factories and these cities and the farms at full capacity, and we can produce not only an abundance for them but for the workers besides.

My own economic doctrines have been characterized as fantastic by a great President of the United States and a great ex-President of the United States both at the same time. But as I used to ride along the highways of California, may it please you, Mr. President, I saw literally hundreds of thousands of families standing without shelter, sleeping under some sort of tarpaulin stretched from an automobile to a fence. Driving along the highways I have seen rotting fruit and decaying vegetables which could not be sold, milk that was thrown into the river. When I have seen these hundreds of thousands of families in want, suffering for food that was rotting and decaying around them, with farms and factories capable of producing abundance if they and their children were allowed to work, I have thought, "Perhaps my ideas are fantastic, but this, this seems like some hideous nightmare."

I know that the distinguished Senator from Colorado is a humane and kindly man. I wonder if he realizes the anguish and pang of a family which has to live on $30, or $40, or $50 a month. This Social Security Act of ours—and that is an egregious misnomer; it should be called "unsocial insecurity"—this Social Security Act of ours, which has made poverty official, gives 23 percent of the people past 65 an average of $19.60 a month.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator referred to me a moment ago. He obviously has a very mistaken idea as to my economic views. What I am interested in is to get the people of this country above the level of which the Senator complains. I want to see people taken off relief. I think the thing the Senator speaks of, the productive capacity of our factories and our fields, should be used, that men should be put to work, should be put to work at their own occupations, should be put to work at full time, so that no longer in this land would we have men and women living on these low scales. My judgment is that unless we change our course we are going to continue the things of which we are now complaining.

My interest is in the people as a whole, and not in a limited group. No one deplores more than I do; no one is opposed more strenuously than I am to the low standards of living imposed upon those dependent upon relief. In other words, the Senator's suggestion is a misrepresentation—innocently made, of course—of my views. I want to see a new day. I want the windows opened and the light of a new day to come in. I want to see an intelligent use of the American productive capacity. The situation which the Senator has detailed, of men being idle when other men need the things which these idle men can produce, is a reflection upon the intelligence of the American people and our country.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, first let me say that I am delighted to have secured that statement from the able Senator from Colorado, and I want to say that not in the slightest did I intend to impugn the humanity or the kindness or the vision of the Senator. All I meant was that my lot in life as a lawyer has fallen among the unsuccessful and the unfortunates of the world. The Senator from Colorado is a much more successful and distinguished lawyer than I am, and consequently his lot has fallen more among the successful. Nothing makes me happier than that declaration by the Senator from Colorado.

I am in this pleasant situation, that many years ago I wrote a book, in which I discussed the Senate of the United State, and I am happy to say that I characterized the Senators as men of outstanding ability and integrity. If I had done otherwise I would not be advertising my book.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another suggestion?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator has been good enough again to refer to me, and he suggested that I have occupied a more fortunate station. I know nothing as to the Senator's surroundings, but I came into the world in a two-room house. The water we drank and used was brought to the house from the river in barrels. I lived in as humble surroundings as could be. My father had as his capital a team of horses and a wagon. He hauled and cut ties to help build the D. & R. G. Railroad in our State. We lived 100 miles beyond the terminus of the railroad. He and his brothers, with no capital but their own energy and their own integrity, did move slightly forward economically. I am interested in the establishment of an economic system whereby the individual who has integrity and a capacity for industry may progress if he uses his industry and his integrity, regardless of whether he has capital or not.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I am going to say something now to and about the distinguished Senator from Colorado, and I will not allow any other interruption. I at least am going to insist dogmatically upon this, that the distinguished Senator is a much abler lawyer than I am, because I do know my own attainments, and I have observed his in the committees and on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. I will interrupt the Senator to deny it, if he will permit me.

Mr. DOWNEY. I am delighted to have that declaration from the Senator from Colorado. I wish that every other Senator in this Chamber could take the solemn vow to place patriotic considerations above partisan considerations, to realize that this Nation is in danger. Here in this Western Hemisphere is possibly the last refuge of free men and a free economy. I am compelled to say something that I would rather not say, but speaking as an outsider who has watched the Senate for the last 6 years, I will say that the Senate wrongfully abdicated its legislative powers to the executive branch of this Government. I say to the Senate that here upon the floor of the Senate and in the House of Representatives is the only forum in which to work out, in the crucible of free debate and consideration, the solution of these tremendous problems.

I attended the University of Michigan Law School. We had a lecturer in medical jurisprudence, and he used to tell us there was a great difference between a doctor and a lawyer; that a doctor buried his mistakes, but a lawyer had an antagonist across the table to point out his mistakes.

It is not in private conferences, it is not in a place free of debate and argumentation, that these great issues will be solved, if they are solved, but they will be solved here in the Congress of the United States. We have here representatives from 48 Commonwealths. In the other branch of the Congress there are 20 Representatives from my State. Together with my distinguished colleague the senior Senator from California and the Representatives in Congress from California, we know the problems of California better than any other group of men, however intelligent and devoted they may be.

I have been tremendously impressed in my work upon committees with the ability and knowledge of the members. I find here some man who is an expert in and has an exhaustive knowledge of almost every legislative inquiry that may be made. Many of the Members of the Senate have had distinguished records as Governors of their own States, as judges, or in other exalted positions. Many of them are, by reason of long experience, more capable of understanding, stating, and solving this problem which we are discussing than any other body of men in the world. And, best of all, here upon the floor of the Senate and in the House of Representatives if a man has a weird, a weak, an unrighteous idea, it can be analyzed and destroyed. If, on the other hand, he has a valid contribution to make to society, he cannot be left aside as a fantastic money man or a wild visionary seeking short cuts to Utopia.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. When the Senator was interrupted by the Senator from Colorado he had just reached a point in his address where he was about to give us, as I understood, the remedy for the predicament in which the country was placed. I hope the Senator will not forget to finish that part of his address at the point at which he was interrupted.

Mr. DOWNEY. I deeply appreciate the suggestion made by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska. My time has almost expired now. I want to say that at some later time, when the Social Security Act is under consideration, I shall discuss more in detail the ideas which I would like to submit to this body upon the possible adjustment of these problems. I think they must lie along two lines. We must work out a substantial and decent pension for all persons past 60 years of age not gainfully employed. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that whenever that is done, 90 percent of the American people between 40 and 60 years of age, once they have confidence in their Government and in their pensions, will probably stop saving. I may say that I am a man of modest desires. If I knew that when I reached 60 my wife and I would have $200 or $250 a month, I would very largely stop any saving, and I think that is true of the great bulk of the American people. We have permanently passed out of an era of unlimited savings. We must, as far as we can, shift into an economy of pensions.

Even though we provide a basic pension for the great masses of the people, we will undoubtedly have flowing from the incomes of the well-to-do, middle class, and rich a greater volume of savings than can be consumed.

I do not believe that income taxes should be directly increased; but I believe tentatively, and subject to checking by statisticians and experts, that if we should place a tax upon all unearned incomes over $25,000 a year, not to confiscate those incomes but to force their spending, we would reduce to a rational amount the amount of savings required in our economy.

Let me express it this way: If Mr. Ford makes $20,000,000 a year, and our present income taxes take $10,000,000 from him, I should not suggest that the other $10,000,000 be taken from Mr. Ford. However, if I were the governmental official in power, I should say to Mr. Ford, "You are operating under a free economy. You have produced a fine product. You are entitled to the profits. However, so far as you can no longer use them to build railroads and automobiles, you must spend them." Such a law could very easily be made constitutional. In other words, a 90-percent surtax could be placed upon all unearned incomes of more than $25,000, and the taxpayer could be allowed to deduct all money spent for consumptive goods before returning the tax. I merely suggest those figures tentatively.

In closing, Mr. President, I desire to emphasize this point: Unless we move into an economy of pensions which will at once provide succor for the senior citizens and diminsh the superfluity of savings, or unless we otherwise balance savings against capital needs, our free economy cannot exist. It may exist for 3 or 4 years longer under an expanding public debt. Beyond that it cannot go.

Before I close I desire to pay tribute to the many statisticians and economists working in Washington. Over the past 4 or 5 years they have assembled tremendous amounts of valuable data which are ready for this body whenever this body is ready to receive them.

I have spent a good many hours with Mr. Eccles, whose philosophy very much agrees with the philosophy which I am expressing. He came out of the West with a reputation as an able banker and a great business leader. He has had a wide experience and is a man of the highest intelligence.

Speaking for the senior citizens of America and the unfortunate suffering multitudes of this land, I hope and pray that we may harmonize our intellects, our souls, and our ambitions and march forward into a great economy and a great civilization, which are ready and waiting for us whenever we have the courage and the intelligence to march forward and realize them.

Upon all these arguments, far as I have gone from the issue, and upon the arguments so eloquently offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], my vote will be cast for the amendment.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is obvious that we cannot conclude consideration of the joint resolution today. I now wish to renew the unanimous-consent request which I made earlier in the day, that at an hour not later than 3 o'clock on next Monday the Senate proceed to vote on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto; and that the time on Monday be equally divided between those for and against, the time to be controlled by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] on behalf of those in favor of the amendment and by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] in behalf of those opposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that not later than 3 o'clock on next Monday the Senate shall proceed to vote upon the amendment of the Senator from Florida and all amendments thereto, and that during the time the Senate is in session on Monday, up until the time of the vote, the time shall be equally divided between the two sides, the time to be controlled by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], respectively. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I deeply regret that the proponents of the amendment would not permit a vote today. As I stated earlier, I should like to have a session tomorrow, in order that the joint resolution may be disposed of. The money is being devoted to a worthy cause. At the earliest possible moment the money should be made available to those who need relief.

I have given some consideration to the request made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. I wish to hasten the time at which we can reach a vote. I am told that a filibuster would ensue tomorrow by those in favor of the amendment if we should go forward tomorrow. In view of that situation, and the unfortunate present situation, I am willing to accede to the proposal made by the Senator from Kentucky, provided the hour for voting is made 1 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as I indicated earlier in the day, so far as I am concerned, I should be glad to vote today, and I shall be ready to vote on Monday. However, I have canvassed the situation among the proponents of the amendment, and I cannot obtain their consent to vote at 1 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, as I stated, I wish to vote as quickly as possible. It is amazing to me that there should be continued delay on the part of those who seem to be anxious for the measure to pass. I will compromise on 2 o'clock and stand there adamantly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard from the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I will accede to the proposal if the hour for voting is made 2 o'clock on Monday. That is stretching it just as far as I should, if not much further.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in the Senator's unanimous-consent request he has fixed no limitation of time for any Senator to speak. Under his request one Senator might obtain the floor and consume all the time to which that side was entitled. I do not know how many Senators wish to speak.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will permit me, I will amend my unanimous-consent request by asking that on Monday the Senate meets at 11 o'clock a. m., and that at an hour not later than 2 o'clock p. m. we shall proceed to vote, as previously indicated, the time to be divided in the same way.

Mr. NORRIS. Why cannot the Senate meet tomorrow?

Mr. BARKLEY. It can; and if we do not obtain an agreement, it will, unless a motion to that effect is voted down.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I shall object to meeting at 11 o'clock on Monday. However, I am willing to limit debate to 10 minutes and to vote at 2 o'clock. Otherwise, I should like to have a session tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present parliamentary situation is that there is no unanimous-consent request before the Senate. The Senator from Oregon objected to the last unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McNARY. And gently suggested some amendments.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I think the modified request made by the Senator from Kentucky is altogether reasonable. It would achieve the purpose, which has been suggested by some, of having a vote by 2 o'clock on Monday afternoon, and at the same time would permit Senators who have already indicated a definite desire to speak on Monday to have an opportunity to do so. Therefore it seems to me that the proposal made by the Senator from Kentucky is a very reasonable one, and I hope it will be acceded to by the Members of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in the first place, a number of committees have quite important measures before them for consideration on Monday, so meeting at 11 o'clock would not satisfy me. Secondly, every phase of the question has been discussed. Nothing new can be said on the question. No speeches at all should be made. If it were my amendment I should be willing to vote now, tomorrow, or at 12 o'clock on Monday. I shall not consent to anything other than commencing at 12 o'clock on Monday and voting at 2.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before the motion is voted upon?

Mr. BARKLEY. I withhold the motion for the moment.

Mr. PEPPER. I cannot in this manner and at this time enter into a colloquy with my friend the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. I cannot see why an additional hour on Monday would make any particular difference. I know that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] has already left the Chamber and gone home, with the understanding that the Senate would adjourn until Monday. He has expressly requested 30 minutes in which to address the Senate on the amendment. I am not prepared to say that the Senator from West Virginia has not a legitimate reason for addressing the Senate for 30 minutes on this amendment. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] has definitely indicated a desire to address the Senate, and so has the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO]. I am not prepared to say, and I imagine the Senator from Oregon is hardly prepared to say, that those Senators do not have matters to present that are worthy of the Senate's attention for that length of time. At least four or five Senators have indicated a definite desire to address the Senate on this amendment. If we divide the time, an hour and a half to each side, it can be readily seen that no Senator will have allowed to him any excessive length of time.

I wish the Senator from Oregon would reconsider his objection and be disposed to allow the debate to continue as late as 3 o'clock.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have definitely and positively stated my position.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it occurs to me that it does not make much difference whether we vote at 2 o'clock or 3 o'clock or 4 o'clock; probably nothing will be done on Monday except to consider the joint resolution. Therefore, in order that we may vote as early as possible, and that all Senators may be permitted to speak as long as they wish, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair say to the Senator from Florida that the motion is not debatable. The Senator from Kentucky has moved that the Senate take a recess.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator from Oregon were given assurances by the Senator from Florida that 2 o'clock on Monday afternoon is satisfactory——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair state to the Senator from Florida that that is not a parliamentary question.

Mr. PEPPER. And if he were to withdraw his objection, then would that be appropriate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not a parliamentary question. It is a question of fact, which the Chair is not able to decide. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

RECESS

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 1 minute p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Saturday, April 8, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE

SATURDAY, APRIL 8, 1939

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 6, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Reverend James Shera Montgomery, D. D., Chaplain of the House of Representatives, offered the following prayer:

God be merciful unto us, and bless us, and cause His face to shine upon us;

That Thy way may be known upon earth, Thy saving health among all nations.

Let the people praise Thee, O God; let all the people praise Thee.

O let the nations be glad and sing for joy: for Thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth.

Let the people praise Thee, O God; let all the people praise Thee.

Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us.

God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall fear Him.

Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Friday, April 7, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

ADDITIONAL CLERICAL ASSISTANCE FOR SENATORS

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next, instead of Monday, as heretofore announced, I shall address the Senate on the matter of additional clerical assistance for Senators.

DEFICIENCY JUDGMENTS IN CONNECTION WITH REAL-ESTATE LOANS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, submitting, in response to Senate Resolution 89, agreed to March 4, 1939, his report with respect to deficiency judgments obtained by the Federal land banks and the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation in connection with loans made upon the security of real property, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE AGGRESSOR

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to take just a moment to put a matter in the RECORD.

Mr. President, it has been proposed, and is now being adroitly urged, that we engraft upon our foreign policy the doctrine of "the aggressor." The theory is that in case of war between two or more nations, the United States will determine who, among the powers thus engaged, is the aggressor; that is, who has violated a treaty or in other ways initiated the conflict.

The next step in the program is for this Nation to open up an economic war upon the aggressor nation. We thereby seek to break down its economic strength, to starve its people, and to render it incapable of carrying on war. We take part at once in this economic war.

In view of the fact that practically all modern wars arise out of controversies in regard to trade and commerce and raw materials and territory, we find ourselves involved in what might be called the very heart of the controversy. All this, however, is in the name of peace, and for the alleged purpose of keeping us out of European wars. The fact is that whatever may be the claim, it is the most subtle and effective method yet conceived for bringing us into all European controversies of any moment. We, as a nation, are not supposed to wait until an attack is made upon us or until the rights of our citizens have been disregarded, or our country invaded. We are to go out and take part in a controversy wholly between other nations. We are to act as a moral censor, declaring who is in the wrong, and to proceed in one of the most effective ways known to war to punish the one whom we have adjudged to be in the wrong.

In an article published in the Foreign Affairs Magazine for April 1933, John Bassett Moore, the distinguished authority upon international law and foreign affairs in general, had something to say about the aggressor and what it means. I ask that the portion of the article which deals with this subject of the aggressor be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The portion of the article referred to is as follows:

VI. THE AGGRESSOR

It is dangerous to allow a fallacy to pass unchallenged because its refutation should seem to be superfluous. Especially is this so when it may easily be imposed on uninformed or unreflecting minds by appeals to the sentiment of benevolence. These truths are perfectly exemplified by the spread of the recent agitation for the punishment of aggressors.

The word "aggressor" does not occur in the Covenant, but it has been used as the technical designation of the nation to which the warlike devices of the League of Nations were intended to apply. For this reason many attempts have been made at Geneva to define an aggressor, but never with any success. Among these may be included the delphic effort of M. Briand. "A cannon shot" said M. Briand, "is a cannon shot;" and "you can hear it, and it often leaves its traces." Then, conjectures M. Briand, the League says "Cease fire;" and, "if one of the adversaries refuses, we can surely say that he is not really very anxious about peace." I have great respect for M. Briand, and if this was the best so able a man could do, the case must indeed be desperate. Certainly a cannon shot is a cannon shot. But if the adversary who ceased fire on Geneva's command should then be killed or disabled, he neither could nor would feel grateful, nor would his example inspire enthusiasm. Besides, even if Geneva had large military forces of her own in Europe, and they were not already preoccupied with exerting a peaceful influence in that quarter, it is a long way, for example, to Singapore; and decisive wars have often been of brief duration.

M. Briand's delicate and fragmentary suggestions clearly indicate that he did not intend them to be taken seriously as a definition. More serious in tone but equally futile is the suggestion made on the part of the United States at Geneva on May 22, 1933, that "the simplest and most accurate definition of an aggressor is one whose armed forces are found on alien soil in violation of treaties." Whether the framer of this definition was or was not thinking of Manchuria, he immediately impaled the sudden seizure and occupation of Vera Cruz by the United States in April 1914, in disregard of the Treaty with Mexico of 1848, which expressly provided that neither party should resort to force before trying peaceful negotiation, and, if that should fail, arbitration. The excuse, should it be attempted, that there was no time for discussion, would merely puncture the definition. Moreover, were there no treaty, would an armed invasion cease to be an act of aggression? Might not such an invasion, even if a treaty were violated, be excused as an act of self-defense? In the celebrated case of McLeod, which nearly brought on a war, Great Britain excused her invasion of United States territory on that plea; but as the United States denied that the facts supported the plea, Great Britain made a soothing apology without admitting any wrong. Would, or would not, the new definition justify the landing of foreign troops to preserve order, as has often been done without the consent of the local government? Would it, for instance, make our military occupation of Nicaragua an act of aggression? Furthermore, will it be asserted that the answer to the question whether a treaty has been violated lies on the surface, and may not be a subject of honest difference of opinion, both on the facts and on the law, even among disinterested and impartial judges? Evidently, the draftsman of the definition was less prudent than the knowing M. Briand. It has also been suggested that the aggressor is he who fires the first shot; but the law does not require a man who believes himself to be in danger to assume that his adversary is a bad shot.

Probably it would be unfair to surmise that the persistent effort, after a decade of ghost dancing, to define the aggressor, always reflects the desire by means of some formula readily to obtain the military cooperation of the United States nominally in the righteous cause of peace. The thought of restraining aggressors is very ancient; but the attempt to define aggression for practical purposes has always failed, because, as has been well said,[1] it is impossible to specify beforehand the objective criteria on which the decision whether an act was overt would necessarily depend. Although nations when they go to war always profess to repel overt acts, yet they frequently do not go to war on account of them; but an assurance of associate force would necessarily increase their propensity to do so. Moreover, it is notorious that overt acts are sometimes craftily provoked for the purpose of justifying aggression; and it may be significant that the definition of the aggressor peculiarly preoccupies the minds of those who are best prepared to commit aggression.

On the other hand, the taking of a forcible initiative may be the only means of safety; and the importance of this principle is necessarily enhanced by the insistence of nations or groups of nations on maintaining preponderance of military power. Portugal acted on this principle when, in 1762, the combined forces of France and Spain were hovering on her frontier. In many instances the question of aggression remains indeterminate. The Hundred Years' War, which began in 1292, originated in a first-fight between two sailors, the one Norman and the other English, in the port of Bayonne. In the battle of Navarino which, in 1827, resulted in the destruction of the Turkish fleet by the combined naval forces of England, France, and Russia, the first actual shot was fired by the Turks; but English naval writers later candidly admitted that the Ottoman commander probably believed that he was repelling an attack. In the case of the destruction of the armed brig General Armstrong by a British squadron in the port of Fayal, Louis Napoleon, acting as arbitrator, held that the brig was the aggressor; but our Congress, believing this decision to be wrong, eventually compensated the brig's owners, officers, and crew for their losses. When, in 1894, a Japanese cruiser before war with China was declared sank the British vessel Kowshing, carrying Chinese troops to Korea, an immediate outcry took place in England; but the excitement soon died down on the public justification of the cruiser's act by Holland and Westlake, two eminent English authorities on international law.

As experience has conclusively shown that the attempt to decide the question of the aggressor on first appearance is reckless of justice, we must, unless our purposes are unholy, rely on an impartial investigation of the facts. But this takes time. The Assembly of the League of Nations assumed jurisdiction of the Sino-Japanese conflict on September 21, 1931; the report of the Lytton Commission was signed at Peiping, China, on September 4, 1932; the Assembly adopted the report of its own committee on February 17, 1933. The actual time covered by the proceedings was 17 months, and even then a final conclusion was not reached. Decisive wars have ended in less time. Napoleon escaped from Elba in February 1815, and the decisive battle of Waterloo took place in the following June. The war over Schleswig-Holstein of 1864 was brief; the war between Prussia and Austria of 1866 lasted 6 weeks; the United States declared war against Spain in April 1898, and the peace protocol, which ended the military conflict and defined the basis of peace, was signed in the following August. These are only a few examples.

That intimations that a party to a dispute may be penalized as an aggressor may not have a deterrent effect has just been shown by the course of Peru in her recent dispute with Colombia. The hostilities continued until the sudden death of Peru's Chief Executive brought to the presidency a statesman who happened to have been a diplomatic colleague, at London, of the leader of the Colombian Liberal Party. An exchange of personal messages and a journey by aeroplane to Lima resulted in the conclusion of a pact of peace. The friendly human touch quickly obtained what official admonitions had been unable to secure.

Had the principle of preventing aggression been applied one cannot say what might have been the results to the United States. Our War of Independence was generally regarded in Europe as an act of rebellion against lawful authority. In the War of 1812 we appeared as aggressive assertors of the freedom of the seas. General Grant pronounced our war with Mexico of 1846 an act of unjust aggression. The Government of the United States dealt with secession as an act of rebellion. In April 1898 the diplomatic representatives of six great European powers assembled at the White House and in behalf of their governments made what was called "a pressing appeal to the feelings of humanity and moderation of the President and of the American people in their existing differences with Spain." They evidently did not regard Spain as the aggressor. President McKinley in his reply expressed the confident expectation that the remonstrating powers would appreciate our offer "to fulfil the duty of humanity by ending a situation, the indefinite prolongation of which had become insufferable." Had they, when we forcibly intervened, declared an embargo upon the shipment of arms and ammunition to the United States, while continuing to supply Spain with the implements of war, we should have resented in appropriate ways their partisan action.

Should we attempt to apply retrospectively the principle of staying or punishing the aggressor we should be obliged to determine the question whether the forcible creation of that great agency of law and civilization, the Roman Empire, or the forcible progress of any other great historic movement, should not have been prevented; whether the formation of the British Empire or the extension of France and her colonial empire should not have been opposed; whether the establishment of the Russian Empire should not have been resisted; whether the world should not have prevented the United States from becoming what it is; also, whether the forcible association in earlier times of the vast aggregation of states now known as China did not result from a neglect by other states of their duties and, perchance, their opportunities.

The opposite of self-defense is aggression. We have been told that the limits of self-defense "have been clearly defined by countless precedents." Students of this subject have remarked that it would be "interesting to know" what these "countless precedents" are, but their curiosity has not been gratified. It will not be. The attempt so to define self-defense that its future application would be clear and practically automatic is just as futile as the attempt similarly to define aggression has been—and must continue to be.

[1] "The Slippery Aggressor," The World Tomorrow, June 1930.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I avail myself of this opportunity to submit a very few remarks concerning the cowardly attack of the Fascist government upon a small but independent state, and to have inserted in the RECORD two editorials appearing in two of the leading newspapers of our country, and a statement which has just been issued by the Department of State.

The world has been made aware of the purposes of the Nazi and Fascist governments to disturb the peace of the world and to make war upon unoffending nations; to rob them of their liberty and to dispoil them of their territory. History has many dark pages recording the brutal, wanton, and barbarous attacks of strong nations upon weak nations, and of combinations of cruel and ambitious autocrats to conquer peoples who were pursuing the paths of peace and who desired to live in amity with all the world. Historians of the future will point to the Nazi and Fascist governments as betrayers of treaties and offenders against international law and the peace not only of Europe but of other parts of the world.

Albania is a small country, with a limited population, but its inhabitants are brave and courageous. They love independence and are exhibiting, in the face of this barbarous attack by the Fascist government, a heroism and fortitude that will command the admiration of the world.

It is obvious that they cannot successfully resist the military and naval forces that the Fascist government is hurling against them. The attack by the Fascist government upon this unoffending state calls for universal condemnation. An editorial in today's issue of the Washington Star, entitled "Aggression Unabashed" contains the statement that—

For sheer, cynical international brutality—aggression unabashed—Italy's invasion of Albania outstrips even the crimes for which Ethopia, China, Austria, and Czechoslovakia are synonyms. * * * Mussolini's descent upon his defenseless little Adriatic neighbor presents but one redeeming feature—the stubborn resistence which King Zog's army and the people offered to the ruthless violators of their soil and sovereignty. * * *

The Albanian minister at Washington states that * * * a prize fighter, to show his skill, has knocked down a child.

All civilized people will take note of the fact that this attack from the sea and from the skies and from landing military forces, occurred without notice, and at a time when the Queen of Albania, but 2 days before, gave birth to a son and heir. The Italian Government knew of her condition but with a callousness almost unprecedented compelled her to flee in an ambulance through the mountains to find safety in another land.

The Washington Post of this date contains an able editorial under the title "The Axis Strikes Back." The editorial states that—

The Duce has now seen fit to invade Albania and bombard her towns. His action is the companion piece and sequel to Hitler's equally flagrant and indefensible destruction of the independence of Czechoslovakia.

The editorial further states that—

Thwarted in north and east Africa the Italian dictator has followed the line of least resistance by invading Albania, surrounding this cheap and cowardly gesture with the trappings of war.

The editorial further states that—

His action also suits Hitler who may have been instrumental in instigating it. The violent blows struck at the helpless but courageous Albanians may serve as a warning to Greece and Yugoslavia and other small nations that while Paris and London talk, Rome and Berlin act.

Mr. President, in my opinion, there are few cases in history where a more cruel and wicked invasion of a peaceful and independent state has ever been made. I have just been referred to an article appearing in the Washington Times Herald of today by Mr. Robert G. Nixon, containing a statement issued but a few hours ago by the Department of State. The article is as follows:

[From the Washington Times Herald, April 8, 1939]

ROOSEVELT APPROVES HULL'S STATEMENT BLASTING ITALY

(By Robert G. Nixon)

The United States today formally denounced Italy's invasion of the little, but strategically important kingdom of Albania.

This Government thus extended its vigorous censure to both ends of the Rome-Berlin axis for armed conquest of independent nations of Europe.

Secretary of State Hull branded the Italian invasion as "an additional threat to the peace of the world."

In a brief but pointed denunciation Hull declared:

"Any threat to peace seriously concerns all nations."

APPROVED BY ROOSEVELT

The Secretary of State's condemnation of Italy was made with the full approval of President Roosevelt. Hull conversed at length on the telephone with the Chief Executive at Warm Springs before issuing his statement to correspondents.

The Hull statement of condemnation follows:

"The forcible and violent invasion of Albania is unquestionably an additional threat to the peace of the world.

"It would be short-sighted not to take notice of this further development.

CONCERNS ALL NATIONS

"Any threat to peace seriously concerns all nations and violates the will of all peoples in the world that their governments shall lead them not toward war but along paths of peace.

"It is scarcely necessary to add that the inevitable effect of this incident, taken with other similar incidents, is further to destroy confidence and to undermine economic stability in every country in the world, thus affecting our own welfare."

I have referred to the fact that treaties have been violated by the Nazi and Fascist governments. Italy and Germany were parties to the Kellogg-Briand Pact, which was also signed by 59 of the 64 independent nations of the world who were entitled to participate in the treaty. Albania was likewise a party to the Kellogg-Briand Pact.

It will be recalled that the high contracting parties solemnly declare that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another. And they also agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts, of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them shall never be sought except by pacific means.

The Fascist government flagrantly and brutally violated the treaty and made a cowardly attack upon an unoffending state and its people.

I invite attention to the statement of the Secretary of State referred to, which condemns the forcible and violent invasion of Albania and declares that it constitutes an additional threat to the peace of the world.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the editorials from the Washington Star and the Washington Post to which I have called attention be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Evening Star of April 8, 1939]

AGGRESSION UNABASHED

For sheer cynical international brutality—aggression unabashed—Italy's invasion of Albania outstrips even the crimes for which Ethiopia, China, Austria, and Czechoslovakia are synonyms.

Mussolini's descent upon his defenseless little Adriatic neighbor presents but one redeeming feature—the stubborn resistance which King Zog's army and people offered to the ruthless violators of their soil and sovereignty. That the Albanians' gallantry is doomed to futility against the naval, military, and air might hurled against them by the Fascist bully is a foregone conclusion. The Albanian minister at Washington, Faik Konitza, pictures the situation graphically when he says that "a prize fighter, to show his skill, has knocked down a child," and the envoy adds, "silence is the most eloquent protest in such a case."

Rome's alibi that Il Duce's legions were flung into Albania as a measure of protection for maltreated Italians is, of course, the flimsiest of pretexts. It is as grotesque as the charge that King Zog refused to negotiate for better conditions for them. For 12 years Italy, through a treaty of alliance, had held a preferential status in Albania, which amounted to domination. Rome was in position at any time to impose its will at Tirana without resort to the brute force to which recourse was suddenly had. It is as unjustifiable and heartless a procedure as our might-is-right era records. It reveals periodical Italian peace protestations as a mockery that takes its place alongside the succession of broken words of Germany, which finally killed the "appeasement" enthusiasm of Neville Chamberlain.

Italy having been assured that Germany fully supports the indefensible Adriatic enterprise, there is every reason to suspect that Albania's occupation is the answer of the totalitarian axis to Poland's entrance into an antiaggression coalition and to efforts to extend that "cordon sanitaire"—the European diplomatic equivalent of Mr. Roosevelt's "quarantine"—into a bloc including Hungary and Rumania, and possibly Russia, Greece, and Turkey. Because of its proximity to Yugoslavia and Greece, Albania's seizure may well have as its underlying inspiration the desire of Fuehrer and Il Duce to intimidate King Zog's Balkan neighbors from identifying themselves with the combination of which Prime Minister Chamberlain has assumed the leadership.

Mussolini's personal motive is transparent and notorious. Ever since the Austrian anschluss and particularly since dismemberment of Czechoslovakia, he has registered mounting jealousy over Hitler's hogging of the aggression show. That Il Duce hungers impatiently for his place in the limelight and for his share of the spoils of axis partnership has long been an open secret. When his hope of compensatory booty at France's expense—in Corsica, Tunisia, or elsewhere—was blasted, it became necessary for the Roman dictator to turn elsewhere, to prove that Fascist Italy, no less than Nazi Germany, is capable of successfully claiming more "living space." Albania is the direction in which he chose to make his demonstration of what diplomacy calls "prestige policy."

Above and beyond Il Duce's specific incentive, the dictators manifestly feel under the compulsion promptly and dramatically to challenge the British stop-aggression program. They have elected to show the world that "encirclement" threats neither impress nor check them. It should presently develop whether Great Britain, which holds that the invasion of Albania violates the 1938 Anglo-Italian pact pledging Mediterranean status quo, will view Mussolini's defiance with equanimity, to say nothing of the even wider threat it offers to British influence in the Near East, which the self-anointed "Grand Protector of Islam" is keen to undermine.

Over Easter, with its peaceful traditions, clouds hover again in that cockpit of Europe whence the World War was spawned.

[From the Washington Post of April 8, 1939]

THE AXIS STRIKES BACK

Mussolini has used a sledge hammer to drive a nail. For 12 years Albania has been bound to Italy by the closest political, economic, and financial ties. She has been in fact, if not in name, an Italian protectorate.

Nonetheless, the Duce has now seen fit to invade Albania and bombard her towns. Apparently he seeks to incorporate that nation in the Italian Empire. His action is the companion piece and sequel to Hitler's equally flagrant and indefensible destruction of the independence of Czechoslovakia. It is also the sequel and answer to the recent efforts made by Great Britain and France to bar the way to further aggressions in Europe.

The fact that Albania was already within the orbit of the Berlin-Rome axis certainly did not save her from attack. On the contrary, it made her the kind of easy victim which the Fascist powers needed to demonstrate that they have been neither cowed nor intimidated by London and Paris.

Over a period of several months, Mussolini has sought to bulldoze the French into making far-reaching concessions in Tunisia, Djibouti, and elsewhere. His failure has been complete. Premier Daladier refused to give way to threats and blustering and announced that not one inch of French territory would be ceded to Italy. Mussolini, in turn, realized that a frontal attack on France or the French Empire would lead to a war from which Italy could hardly emerge victorious.

Thwarted in North and East Africa, the Italian dictator has followed the line of least resistance by invading Albania, surrounding this cheap and cowardly gesture with the trappings of war. For he knew that neither Great Britain nor France nor any other nation would or could lift a finger to aid his victim. The attack on Albania was intended to assuage his pride, which had been wounded by the long succession of German triumphs with no parallel triumphs secured by Italy, and to serve notice on Italy's rivals and their satellites that Italy is still on the map.

His action also suits Hitler, who may have been instrumental in instigating it. The violent blows struck at the helpless but courageous Albanians may serve as a warning to Greece, Yugoslavia, and other small nations that while Paris and London talk, Rome and Berlin act.

Mussolini's move, therefore, is partially designed to demonstrate to these small nations that it is dangerous to incur the hostility of the totalitarian states. In that way the efforts of the British and French Governments to create an antiaggression bloc may be handicapped by the refusal of the nations in the path of Hitler and Mussolini to cooperate with the democratic powers. Thus the destruction of Albania's independence, for 12 years more apparent than real, is less important than the deliberately violent manner in which it was brought about.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Reed
Andrews	Downey	La Follette	Schwartz
Ashurst	George	Logan	Sheppard
Barbour	Green	Lundeen	Stewart
Barkley	Guffey	McCarran	Thomas, Utah

Borah	Hayden	Minton	Vandenberg
Brown	Herring	Murray	Wiley
Bulow	Holman	Norris
Burke	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] is detained from the Senate because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are absent on important public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-eight Senators have answered to their names, not a quorum. The clerk will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Chief Clerk called the names of the absent Senators; and Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. BONE, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. FRAZIER, Mr. GERRY, Mr. HILL, Mr. LODGE, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. NYE, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, and Mr. WHITE answered to their names when called.

The following Senators entered the Chamber and answered to their names: Mr. GLASS, Mr. REYNOLDS, Mr. TRUMAN, Mr. TAFT, Mr. HATCH Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. SMITH, Mr. LUCAS, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. SHIPSTEAD, Mr. LEE, Mr. MEAD, Mr. RADCLIFFE, Mr. DONAHEY, Mr. HOLT, Mr. WHEELER, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and Mr. KING.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. MEAD presented a resolution adopted by the Basic Building Trades Council of Syracuse and Vicinity, New York, favoring the immediate withdrawal of the W. P. A. from the building and construction industry, and the employment of experienced and skilled workers already in industry on the construction of public works, which was referred to the Special Committee to Investigate Unemployment and Relief.

Mr. RUSSELL presented the following resolution of the Senate of Georgia, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States has held an opinion in May 1937, as follows:

"The matter of old-age pensions is a national matter with which the States cannot adequately cope", is an opinion in which we concur;

Whereas we find that the State of Georgia faces a rather serious financial condition; and

Whereas we find that we face a very difficult problem to find the money necessary to finance our schools, educational institutions, department of health, eleemosynary institutions, and other necessary and fixed functions of the State government, not to mention old-age pensions at all: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of Georgia, That the 10 Congressmen and 2 Senators of Georgia be requested to make a survey of the old-age pension subject and specifically examine into the merits of House Resolutions Nos. 11 and 2, and other pending old-age pension measures now before our National Congress;

That Congress be memorialized to examine into the pending old-age pension bills now pending and give some definite direction to the best bill that may be worked out, so that the intentions and purposes of the people of the United States seeking to aid old-age pension petitioners may have answer, and that the old-age pension petitioners may receive the help prayed through our National Congress;

That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States Senate and each member of the Georgia delegation in Congress.

Mr. RUSSELL also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Georgia, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Whereas on February 27, 1939, Commissioner William E. Lee and Examiner Michael T. Corcoran reported to the Interstate Commerce Commission that rates on 13 commodity groups were "unduly prejudicial" to southern producing points "to the extent that such rates are beyond levels higher than at present in effect on like articles within the North"; and

Whereas the said report further stated that there was no substantial argument while the rate level for a given commodity shipped from a southren to a northern point should be higher than the level of rates between two northern points of equal distance; and

Whereas it is fitting and proper that the Interstate Commerce Commission immediately equalize rate structures so as to have uniform rates on like articles which are or which may be produced in different sections of the country from such sections to common markets in conformity with the aforesaid report: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the Interstate Commerce Commission be memorialized and petitioned by the general assembly of this State to immediately effectuate the said uniform rate structures in conformity with the said report of February 27, 1939: Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be dispatched to the Interstate Commerce Commission, to each Member of the Georgia delegation in the National Congress, and to the press of this State and Nation.

NEUTRALITY

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, among the many splendid and thoughtful expressions of opinion reaching me from Connecticut citizens is a message from Col. Anson T. McCook, of Hartford. I feel it to be of such importance and entitled to such weight that I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HARTFORD, CONN., April 6, 1939.

Hon. JOHN A. DANAHER,
United States Senate:

Doctrine stated by former Secretary Stimson strikes me as very dangerous to our peace and liberties. It would destroy by indirection the constitutional control over peace and war which rests and should rest with Congress through giving whoever might be President such power to commit us to friendly attitude toward one belligerent or unfriendly to another that war might be precipitated. This could readily happen without declaration of war, thus nullifying powers and duties of Congress.

Col. ANSON T. MCCOOK.

MINIMUM PRICES FOR AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the Secretary of Agriculture has made a report on Senate bill 570, commonly known as the cost-of-production bill, in the form of a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I ask unanimous consent that the letter of the Secretary be appropriately referred and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 6, 1939.

Hon. E. D. SMITH,
Chairman, Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SMITH: In response to your request of January 16, I submit the following comments on S. 570, "The Agricultural Equality Act of 1939," a bill to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in agricultural products; to prevent unfair competition; to provide for the orderly marketing of such products; to promote the general welfare by assuring an abundant and permanent supply of such products by securing to the producers a minimum price of not less than cost of production, and for other purposes.

This bill discloses a genuine recognition of the fact that agriculture should have more satisfactory returns and a larger share of the national income. Many of the sponsors of S. 570 have been intimately associated with various legislative efforts to improve the lot of the Nation's farmers, since the beginning of the agricultural depression in the early 20's. This is one reason why their present point of view as reflected in this bill deserves very careful consideration.

The need for continued, positive action in the field of agricultural legislation and programs is indicated by the disparity in agricultural prices and income. This disparity has persisted in varying degrees since 1920, reaching its greatest depth in 1932 when prices received by farmers were only 54 percent of parity price as now defined in the Agricultural Adjustment Act. But before turning to the consideration of S. 570, I should like to say a word about the improvement in farm prices and income in the past 6 years.

Since 1932, under the agricultural program, monetary policy, trade agreements, other positive actions and general economic improvement, farm prices have increased materially not only in dollars and cents but also in buying power. To be sure, a part of the improvement in farm prices in recent years was due to drought, which in many cases curtailed production below any reasonable limit of beneficial reduction. But the effects of the drought have largely disappeared and surplus problems have reappeared in several classes of farm products. Nevertheless, the general level of farm prices in 1938 averaged 75 percent of parity as compared with 54 percent in 1932. All thoughtful students of farm problems recognize, I believe, that the position of agriculture is not yet satisfactory. It must be obvious to all, however, that significant progress has been made in recent years, especially when improvement is measured in cash income.

In 1932 the total cash income of the Nation's agriculture was in round figures $4,300,000,000. By 1937 it had doubled, reaching a total of $8,600,000,000, including Government payments. The cash income for 1938 was reduced below the 1937 figure by about $975,000,000, due largely to the world industrial recession and the resulting decline in consumer income. Meanwhile prices paid by farmers increased substantially up to 1937 and then declined somewhat in 1938, but the buying power of the farmers' cash income in 1937 and 1938 was higher than in 1932 by 77 percent and 66 percent, respectively. In other words, the average buying power of the gross cash income of agriculture in the past 2 years was more than 70 percent higher than in 1932. Because of the relative rigidity of prices paid by farmers, the rate of improvement was even greater in the income available for living on the farm. This income advanced from about $1,860,000,000 in 1932 to $5,500,000,000 in 1937. Meanwhile the buying power of this income increased 150 percent.

Meanwhile significant improvements have been made in many other directions also. Farm indebtedness has been put on a sounder basis, foreclosures have diminished, tax delinqency has declined, land values have improved, schools and other rural institutions are functioning more adequately, and other signs of improvement are apparent throughout the countryside.

Yet, with all this progress, there must not be any relaxation of effort to consolidate the gains that have been made and to seek every practical means to achieve further advance. Hence, S. 570 should be welcomed as a basis of constructive discussion, for stock taking of the means by which we have obtained the improvements just noted, reviewing present needs of agriculture, and studying possibilities of securing still more effective agricultural legislation. In this spirit, we should prefer to consider every measure proposed by friends of agriculture.

The principal provisions of this bill may be summarized briefly as follows:

Section 1: The provisions of the proposed act apply to each agricultural product (including poultry, livestock, crops, products and byproducts thereof, in an unmanufactured state) which during the preceding marketing year was introduced into interstate or foreign commerce in quantities having a value in excess of $10,000,000.

Section 2: The Secretary of Agriculture would determine for each year the average cost of production to the farmers of each agricultural product. In determining such cost of production, after public hearings participated in by representatives of farmers' organizations, the Secretary "shall consider the average individual farm as a business unit, and shall, among other things, include compensation to farm operators for management and for labor for themselves and their families and hired help, equal to the compensation paid for like time and services in industry, together with adequate allowances for taxes and other overhead charges, maintenance and depreciation of soil, improvements, buildings, farm machinery, implements, tools and equipment, stock-breeding and work animals." Interest on "the fair and reasonable property investment value, not necessarily the market value" is to be allowed at a return equal to the average interest rate on farm indebtedness. Yields and production during the previous 5-year period are to be considered in this determination of average cost-of-production prices. Equitable differentials against varying transportaton costs to market are to be established by appropriate zones or classifications.

Section 3: The Secretary would be required to determine annually for each agricultural commodity (1) the beginning and end of the marketing year for each agricultural product; (2) the volume of production for the current year; (3) the quantity and percentage of the total volume marketed from farms that is required for domestic consumption and is to be distributed in the current of interstate commerce; (4) the quantity and percentage to be distributed in intrastate commerce affecting the portion to be distributed in interstate and foreign commerce; (5) the quantity and percentage remaining for warehouse reserves and export.

Section 4: All dealers, manufacturers, millers, elevator operators, processors, packers, butchers, ginners, compressors, and other agencies dealing in or handling any agricultural product in interstate or foreign commerce are required to be licensed except that no licenses would be required of any producers for selling, disposing of. handling, or storing any agricultural product produced by them.

Dealers, manufacturers, millers, elevator operators, processors, packers, butchers, ginners, compressors, and other agencies dealing in or handling any agricultural product in interstate or foreign commerce are required to pay producers of agricultural products not less than the average cost-of-production price for that percentage of each delivery of such agricultural product as the Secretary has determined is required for domestic consumption.

At the time of making a sale, the producer of the agricultural product is to receive a receipt showing the quantity and grade of the product and other pertinent information. The receipt must be signed by the Secretary and countersigned by the dealer.

Section 5: The dealer is required to turn over to the Secretary that percentage of the product which the Secretary has determined to be the percentage remaining for warehouse reserves or export. The Secretary may have the products processed and sell them to the best advantage on the world market.

In cases of disaster or calamity, the Secretary can sell for domestic consumption the warehouse reserves and export quantities at the cost-of-production price, plus storage and expenses. The Secretary determines the net amount realized for the warehouse reserves and export quantities of each product and establishes a unit rate at which receipts received by producers at the time of sale will be redeemed.

Section 6: The redemption of these certificates will be made by the Post Office Department with funds transferred to that Department by the Secretary.

Section 7: The Secretary is required to prescribe regulations for carrying out the act's provisions, including requirements for issuance of licenses, systems of accounts, auditing accounts, submission of reports, and entry and inspection of licensees' business places by agents of the Secretary.

Section 8: Failure to pay the cost-of-production prices shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Section 9: It is provided that any agricultural commodity owned or hereafter coming into the possession of the United States shall conclusively be deemed to be warehouse reserves or export surpluses and disposed of accordingly.

Section 10: Provision is made for imposing import duties equal to the difference between the world price and the cost-of-production price of each product, plus 10 percent of the cost-of-production price.

Section 11: The act applies to all agricultural products grown, produced, and harvested during 1939 and all subsequent years.

Section 12: The act would continue without change the provisions of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act and the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 relating to freight rates, new uses and new markets for farm commodities, loans on agricultural commodities, crop insurance, and section 32.

Section 13: Separability clause.

It is probable that about 30 to 40 commodities would be included under this bill. Costs computed as prescribed would have averaged for 1938 from 60 to 70 percent higher than costs computed in the usual manner, about 50 percent higher than parity price, and more than twice the average farm price of a dozen leading farm products.

This bill marks definite departures from existing legislation. It has not been possible to make a complete study of all of its provisions, but I should like to make several observations relating to some of the broad economic considerations involved in this bill.

This bill seems to imply three fundamental assumptions: (1) That domestic consumption would not be reduced appreciably on account of the cost-of-production price; (2) that domestic production would not be greatly stimulated; and (3) that any increase in exports due to such reduction in consumption and increase in production as might occur could readily be disposed of in foreign markets.

The economic questions that arise with reference to these assumptions should be examined very carefully in any further consideration of this legislation.

It is a well-established economic fact that consumers, at a given level of income, vary the amount of their purchases with the rise or fall of prices of particular commodities, the extent of the variation differing materially among the several commodities. It has not been possible to make detailed analysis of the probable economic response of consumers under the cost-of-production price, especially inasmuch as that price would be applied to a very large part of the food budget and not to a few isolated food items. In some instances there might be a greater increase in the retail price by reason of some tendency to pyramid the cost-of-production price, and in other instances there might be some absorption by processors and distributors. All in all, however, it is expected that the cost-of-production price paid to producers would be charged to the domestic consumer.

There is no power to compel consumers to take as much of a commodity at a higher price as at a lower price. On the whole, they would do so only if their income were increased sufficiently to enable them to pay the higher price. At a given level of income, the higher price would cause consumers to reduce their purchases. The amount of reduction in some commodities would be relatively small under the bill; in other commodities domestic consumption apparently would be reduced by as much as 50 percent or more. Aside from any consideration as to whether the consumer ought to pay the increased price, the fact remains that the inevitable reduction in his purchases would have far-reaching consequences, especially in the absence of some practical means of differentiating between consumers of low and of high income. The consumers might, of course, turn to products produced within each State, thus stimulating far-reaching realinements in the Nation's production and processing. In this it is assumed that a product produced and consumed within the same State would not be legally subject to the provisions of the bill. The farmer selling his own product is not, of course, subject to the provisions applicable to dealers.

With the guaranteed cost-of-production price, and without any restraint on production (and this bill does not provide for such restraint), the producers would undoubtedly increase production, shifting their lands to products eligible for the guaranteed price. As the domestic consumption percentage would be determined annually, the individual farmer would find it to his advantage to produce as much as possible in any year in order to get the cost-of-production price on as many pounds or bushels as possible. In the absence of any means of limiting production it is likely that the individual's pursuit of the guaranteed price would tend to nullify the general interest of all producers, through increased aggregate and wasteful production.

It is evident, therefore, that our exportable surpluses would be greatly increased as a result of reduced consumption and increased production. This presents the serious question of how these exports could be disposed of in view of the far-reaching restrictions now imposed upon agricultural imports in most of the foreign countries. The improvement in the foreign outlets for our farm products that has been achieved under our trade-agreement program probably would be nullified, partly by that provision of the bill which required that a duty be imposed equal to the difference between the world price and the cost-of-production price, plus 10 percent of the latter, and by retaliatory measures that probably would be imposed by many foreign countries if attempts were made to force into their markets a greatly increased quantity of American exports. Finally, many of the importing countries have quota restrictions, exchange limitations, and similar inhibitions by which they limit the quantity imported. It is a serious question, therefore, as to whether it would be possible to dispose of that increase in the exportable surplus that would result from the application of S. 570 in its present form. At best these increased exports could be moved into foreign markets only at very greatly reduced prices. But with these increased exports we would send abroad much of our soil fertility and endanger the effectiveness of our soil-conservation work because of the premium which the cost-of-production price and uncontrolled production would put on soil-depleting crops and practices.

The reduced domestic consumption and the attempted increase in exports at greatly reduced price would have far-reaching repercussions upon the farmer's returns. It is probable that the returns on some products would be reduced while increased on others. Under the bill as it stands, and considering only its broader economic implications, it is an open question whether the total return to agriculture would be materially improved—whether in the long run it would not in effect impose a severe tax upon the domestic consumer, provide a subsidy to foreign consumers, and afford at best an uncertain benefit to the American farmer.

In my opinion it would be unwise to enact at this time any far-reaching legislation as a substitute for the present program. Moreover, our experience shows that any major legislation in this field should be enacted far enough ahead of the application of it to avoid unnecessarily abrupt change, to enable the Department to formulate specific plans of administration, and to afford producers and the trade an opportunity to become acquainted with the new legislation and the new administrative regulations and procedure developed in pursuance of the statute.

Aside from the broad economic considerations of this measure, there are numerous legal and administrative considerations which should also be given very careful study. While it is not the purpose of this report to discuss the constitutional or other legal problems raised by the bill, I raise the question as to whether or not the provisions of section 12 are sufficiently definite so that, should the bill be enacted into law, it would be possible to tell which statutes now in effect would be repealed.

The administration of this bill would be both difficult and expensive. Experience indicates, I think, that we are likely to be optimistic in estimating administrative expenses in a matter of this kind. This is a vast country, over which administrative machinery would have to be established with reference to some 30 or 40 agricultural commodities. The determination of cost of production under the provisions of the bill would itself be more complex and expensive. The term "cost of production" sounds simple and specific, yet in reality it is exceedingly complex and vague, especially when it is required, as in this bill, that cost be determined on bases which necessarily involve controversial assumptions with maximum of opportunity for debate and group pressure with reference to what is the cost of producing a commodity in a given year. The bill provides that cost would be determined after public hearings, participated in by representatives of producer groups, and necessarily of other groups as well. The licensing of all dealers handling these 30 to 40 commodities in interstate and foreign commerce and the policing to prevent bootlegging of the commodity and to minimize evasion would be a herculean task.

In response to a separate inquiry, made by Senator ELLENDER at your suggestion, we are attempting to estimate more specifically the probable cost of administering this measure if it should become law.

As indicated earlier, I have a great deal of fondness for this or any other sincere attempt to legislate for the economic improvement of agriculture. Our experience, however, indicates that it is possible to attempt a task so complex and within a time so short that disappointment to producers and even some discredit upon general farm legislation may result.

In conclusion, let me repeat that I welcome the discussion occasioned by this bill. Its purpose is commendable and it is sponsored by friends of agriculture, many of whom have consistently supported progressive farm legislation over many years. It is necessary, however, to point out that the bill in its present form rests upon economic assumptions of very doubtful validity, that an attempt to apply it to so large a number of commodities, and with insufficient time to prepare for the administration of it would cause great confusion among producers and members of the trade, and that any attempt to legislate along this line should be undertaken on a much more limited scale and with most careful consideration of the legal and administrative problems involved.

Upon reference of this matter to the Bureau of the Budget, as required by Budget Circular 344, the Acting Director thereof advised the Department of Agriculture under date of March 30, 1939, that there would be no objection on the part of that office to the submission to Congress of this report.

Sincerely,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

FARM CONDITIONS IN THE MIDDLE WEST

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry several letters from farmers in my State, describing the plight of farmers in the Midwestern section of the United States.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

MARIBEL, WIS., March 22, 1939.

Just to show how little a farmer has to live on, I am mailing four statements of our last milk checks. I have a 100-acre farm and 19 head of milk cows. I have to feed 1 ton of dairy feed each month, which costs me about $25 per ton. I have a $65 mortgage, and a family of six children, besides taxes, interest, etc.

If a farmer has no buying power, this country will never prosper. The only thing lacking is the farmer just hasn't any money to buy things which he really needs and other things which he bought before. If he did, the factories in the cities would have to employ men and women to manufacture goods to meet these demands.

You Senators have the power, so let's hope you will do something to benefit the farmer.

Nearly every farmer could use a hired man, but he has to contend with W. P. A.

Mr. J. A. G.

ROSHOLT, WIS., March 8, 1939.

I have been served with notice by the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul, Minn., of intentions of foreclosure on my farm. This is, of course, one of the many foreclosures in progress in Portage County, and at the rate that farmers are defaulting through no fault of their own it won't be long before there will be only 10 percent of the farms remaining in farmers' hands.

I have tried my best under the conditions that have made it impossible to make money enough to make the farm pay. I have worked not only on my farm, but for a salary to get enough to feed my cattle and buy seed for planting, and at the same time keep the soil built up so as to be productive. I've been supporting my family of five boys, my wife, and myself, but it's been all in vain. This is not only my case, but the case of all of the farmers in this territory; and every time a farmer has to leave his farm it means he diverts to the W. P. A. pay roll.

For the past 6 years we have had crop failure and most farmers have had to borrow from the Government departments to get money to buy seed and feed for cattle, and some even additional to keep their family going.

I have managed, through working, not to borrow from any of these farm agencies; but by so doing, I have run behind on interest and taxes. It just cannot be done in this territory until conditions get better. And there should be something done, or some consideration made. The farmers who know their farms can make it go if given a chance, and I feel confident that times are going to change.

Mr. P. R. C.

WALWORTH, WIS., March 9, 1939.

I had an experience yesterday that was so new to me it puzzles me to know what it is all about.

You are well aware of the condition we rural folks are in, so suffice it to say I am just another poor devil trying to get along. I have my problems, as everyone has, and at times I feel rather discouraged. Yet I seem to get along year after year. Just how it is done I cannot quite explain. About the only explanation I have is that we are able to estimate our income from day to day and our expenditures are made accordingly. The result is our budget is always balanced, which is a rare incident these days.

But my story has to do with the local rehabilitation office. That is where I received a shock. I thought if I had a few tools to work with I could get along better by raising better crops and without a doubt have more time to work out by day. All in all it would tend to lift my income to the betterment of my family—six of us.

I rent nearly 4 acres of land and raise truck and berries. But here is the rub. I do all the work by hand. You know a person wouldn't do such a thing because he lacks reason nor because he is overly ambitious. He does it because of one thing, and that is, necessity. So I thought if I could only own a substantial garden tractor with some equipment I could better my conditions to something near a decent standard. My wife and I are college people and we possess an earnest desire to give our children as much as we had.

Some time ago I made application for a loan at the rehabilitation office. I thought my record would stand up under the most rigid scrutiny. I am certain it would. They paid no more attention to my standing. I was told and with great finality "We do not make loans to small truck gardeners, because our experience is they have been unsatisfactory." Instantly it gave me an insight to the entire rehabilitation affair. And I didn't let them pass the buck to the small gardener. Rather, I carefully explained they had admitted something that was not to their credit. If it were true that they had had this unfortunate experience, it was not wholly the gardener's fault, but rather their own inasmuch as they lacked analytical intelligence to properly appraise the individual gardener.

Poor judgment is and always will be the bane of the present A. A. A., and this is but one of the many, many inconsistent parts. It seems to me emotion rather than sound principle of analysis is a component part of the whole set-up. Although I am of an analytical mind, I am not, thank God, immune to emotion. I laud any endeavor that is motivated by emotion—provided it makes sense. This brings me to another phase of yesterday's experience.

In order that I might be appeased I was told I still had two avenues open. First apply for a job on W. P. A. If I couldn't be certified for W. P. A., I could apply for relief. The relief office in turn would decide which would be the cheapest for them, to furnish me with my tractor or keep me on relief. Is there a bureau in Washington that has the superintelligence to work out such a plan as I have described? Where do such plans originate? Is there anything under the sun that will straighten this mess out? The only thing I can think of is ridicule.

I tried to get the opinion of the rehabilitation office as to the definition of that term. They couldn't give a definition, but were satisfied that the name was misleading.

Though I keenly desire to better myself, this letter is not written because of self-pity. It is written because I believe that these flagrant exhibitions of brainlessness can only be overcome through being brought to light. And it seems to me the people should furnish the legislators with actual facts. So this is my bit (and I'm a life-long Democrat), but not a 100-percent or even 50-percent new dealer.

AMHERST JUNCTION, March 1939.

I beg of you to work for the stoppage of foreclosures of Government farm mortgages, and for legislation to allow these victims of recent foreclosures to regain (or at least to rent) their farms.

In this neighborhood, apiece of town of New Hope, Portage County, three farms are going under the hammer and four more, it is said, will go before the end of the year. Some of the victims have large families to support. All of them will have a difficult time making a living. Six of these farms have been in the "owner's" family two or more generations. The Government is merciless in forcing these poor people to vacate. They are industrious but they have been handicapped by depression, drought, and expenses of rearing families, and it has been impossible for them to meet their payments.

So the Government, though wasting millions elsewhere, forecloses, and, to add insult to injury in two of these cases, is on the point of selling the farms to people who are already loaded to the ear with debts, and who eventually will have to let the places go. Why can't the victims get a chance to buy back their farms at the present prices? One man has been paying on a loan of $6,000 when the farm at present prices would probably sell at about $2,000. The Government is wasting money right and left on resettlements and model housing schemes but our farmers are fast becoming homeless.

M. A.

SHELL LAKE, WIS., March 29, 1939.

Senator ALEXANDER WILEY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I see by the paper you are going to investigate the W. P. A. Maybe you would like to know how it works back home around here. I am a farmer and hire some of the W. P. A. boys or I try to hire them for the days they have between periods. The boys are afraid to work for anyone because if they pick up a few days' work they are told they will be fired from the W. P. A. That is the threat the local office holds over them. It makes it bad. We can't get help; the men can't get started at anything else, but worse, it tends to make those in office and the higher-ups more secure.

I expect that the farmers and businessmen will have to pay for all Government expense, and we resent having them conduct their affairs so as to make it harder for us as well as more expensive.

I am in hopes you will and can see that these people are free to find work where and when they can, without being in danger of losing out with the steady work the W. P. A. furnishes.

Sooner or later Government expense must be cut. May it be sooner!

We Americans have so much to be thankful for. Let us make haste slowly with experiments lest we lose the things our forefathers bought so dearly for us.

Be not afraid to be conservative. The people back home will "back" you.

Very respectfully,

Mr. H. N. CROSBY.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McKELLAR:

S. 2112. A bill authorizing the appointment and retirement of Mark Conley as a captain, United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RUSSELL:

S. 2113. A bill for the relief of Mark D. Dukes; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SCHWELLENBACH:

S. 2114. A bill for the relief of Virginia Pearson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CONNALLY:

S. 2115. A bill for the relief of Cecil D. McHenry; and

S. 2116. A bill to correct the military record of Edward A. McGown; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MEAD:

S. 2117. A bill for the relief of Edward R. Daum; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 2118. A bill to amend section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, to increase the maximum amount of insurance for any deposit which may be insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. McCARRAN:

S. 2119. A bill to provide for the training of civil aircraft pilcts, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

S. 2120. A bill granting a pension to Creed M. Click; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MURRAY:

S. 2121. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to contract with the State Water Conservation Board of Montana and the Tongue River Water Users' Association for participation in the costs and benefits of the Tongue River Storage Reservoir project for the benefit of lands on the Tongue River Indian Reservation, Mont.; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. HAYDEN:

S. 2122. A bill to authorize the sale of the Wilmot National Guard target range, Arizona; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mr. ANDREWS, the Committee on Naval Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2111) to amend the act entitled "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service," approved February 15, 1893, as amended, and it was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. McCARRAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000,000 for the construction and equipment of additional buildings and research facilities on military reservations at Langley Field, Va., and Sunnyvale, Calif., etc., intended to be proposed by him to House bill 5219, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 4852, the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1940, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 84, between lines 2 and 3, to insert:

"Lugert-Altus project, Oklahoma, $500,000: Provided, That as a condition precedent to the expenditure of this appropriation for such project an amount at least equal thereto shall be made available for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior by transfer from any funds appropriated for the construction of flood-control projects as authorized in the act of June 28, 1938 (52 Stat. 1215, 1219)."

ADDITION OF LANDS TO SEQUOIA NATIONAL PARK, CALIF.—BILL INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, some time ago I introduced Senate bill 631, to add certain lands to the Sequoia National Park, Calif. Since that time the bill has been under discussion in the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys. Some objection is urged to the bill by the Department of the Interior, and I now ask that the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys be discharged from further consideration of the bill, and that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys I am not willing to have that done without some information as to what the situation is.

Mr. MURRAY. The only explanation I can offer is that at the time I introduced the bill it seemed to be a bill which was very satisfactory to the Department of the Interior, but since its introduction persons who own the lands under consideration have increased the price at which they will sell their lands. The increases in price are so large as to make it impossible to carry out the project. Therefore I do not want to press the bill any further under those conditions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is it the request of the Senator from Montana that the Senate indefinitely postpone the bill?

Mr. MURRAY. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROBATIONARY APPOINTMENTS IN THE REGULAR ARMY—RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL

On motion by Mr. SHEPPARD, the bill (S. 1155) to provide for probationary appointments of officers in the Regular Army was taken from the calendar and recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DOLORES P. DE WILLIAMSON

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 511) for the relief of Dolores P. de Williamson, which were, in line 6, to strike out "$3,500" and insert "$5,000", and in line 11, after the name "Panama", to insert a colon and—

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

FRED HARVEY TRANSPORTATION DEPARTMENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 10) for the relief of the Fred Harvey Transportation Department, which was, on page 1, line 4, after the word "pay", to insert a comma and "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HUBERT H. CLARK AND DR. W. C. COPELAND

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 11) for the relief of Hubert H. Clark and Dr. W. C. Copeland, which was, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "claim" and insert "claims."

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF ART

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the other day the Senate passed a Senate joint resolution authorizing an appropriation sufficient to maintain the National Gallery of Art now under construction. The House passed a similar joint resolution, and they have sent to the Senate the joint resolution passed by them. We have sent to the House the joint resolution passed by the Senate. In line with the courtesy always shown the other House by the Senate in connection with matters of that sort where resolutions of the same kind meet each other on the way, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate House Joint Resolution 225.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 225) amending the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the construction and maintenance of a National Gallery of Art," approved March 24, 1937, which was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the last sentence of section 4 (a) of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the construction and maintenance of a National Gallery of Art", approved March 24, 1937, is hereby amended to read as follows: "For these purposes, and to provide, prior to the completion of the National Gallery of Art, for the protection and care of the works of art in said gallery and for administrative and operating expenses and equipment preparatory to the opening of the gallery to the public, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary."

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration of the House joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time and passed.

TESTIMONY OF BERNARD M. BARUCH AND HENRY L. STIMSON BEFORE THE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE

[Mr. PITTMAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the testimony of Bernard M. Baruch and Henry L. Stimson before the Committee on Foreign Relations on the subject of neutrality legislation, which appears in the Appendix.]

DEMOCRACY IN ACTION—ADDRESS BY HON. FRANCIS B. SAYRE

[Mr. GUFFEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject of Democracy in Action, delivered by Hon. Francis B. Sayre, Assistant Secretary of State, at the Fourth Conference of the Women's National Democratic Club, held at the Shoreham Hotel, Washington, D. C., March 22, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY STEPHEN CHADWICK, NATIONAL COMMANDER, AMERICAN LEGION

[Mr. TRUMAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address by Stephen Chadwick, national commander, American Legion, before the Chamber of Commerce of Kansas City, Mo., February 22, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

ONE MAN'S OPINION—ARTICLE BY GEN. HUGH S. JOHNSON

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have published in the RECORD an article entitled "One Man's Opinion," written by Gen. Hugh S. Johnson and appearing in the Washington News in the issue of March 24, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

W. P. A. GUIDEBOOK AROUSES FUSS—ARTICLE FROM BALTIMORE SUN

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have published in the RECORD an article from the Baltimore (Md.) Sun entitled "W. P. A. Guidebook Arouses Fuss, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 246) making a further additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION $50,000,000 APPROPRIATION

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, on the 6th day of April the able senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] made this statement:

I think the only way to recovery, the key to recovery, is exactly the reverse of much of the philosophy that we have followed, and that is production, increased production, wider distribution. That alone will bring prosperity, and that alone will bring security to democracy against its enemies from without and threats from within.

PHILOSOPHY OF ABUNDANCE AND DISTRIBUTION

Mr. President, that is a philosophy of government which many progressives and liberals have been advocating for these many years, and we in Minnesota have advocated that. I was glad to hear it come from so distinguished a Senator as the senior Senator from Georgia.

The Senator also made this statement:

I voted for relief. I voted for practically all of the relief program. When every other Democrat, with one or two exceptions, voted the other day, I was one of half a dozen Senators here to vote for a $10,000,000,000 bond program offered during the Hoover administration by the distinguished Senator from Colorado, now dead, the late Senator Costigan, and the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

FIVE BILLION DOLLARS PROPOSED FOR PUBLIC WORKS IN 1932

This was the proposal, as I understand, of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. The Senator from Wisconsin had proposed during the preceding year, 1932, the authorization of $5,000,000,000; and that was voted down. In 1933 the Senator noted that an increase in the depression was coming rapidly upon the country, and the Senator from Wisconsin doubled the amount, making it ten billion, for a public works program; and the senior Senator from Georgia has called the Senator's attention to his vote in favor of that planning program.

TEN BILLION DOLLARS PROPOSED FOR PUBLIC WORKS IN 1933

It seems to me that what was proposed then is exactly what we should have done back in those days. It is water over the dam, of course; but we should have engaged in a great public works program at that time, with thorough planning. We should have had blueprints and engineering planning. The entire matter should have been in the files, and we should have been ready to go. In fact, that should have been brought about before 1932. But the Senator from Wisconsin deserves all the credit in the world for introducing the plan so boldly and advocating it so ably at that time. So this program involving $10,000,000,000 was defeated.

PROGRESSIVES AND CONSERVATIVES

Mr. President, it is hard to draw the line between progressives and conservatives. There is a dividing line. Both claim to be progressive, I assume. But may I say that we progressives have advocated planning. But just what did we get when we advocated planning? We were received with smiles and a few sneers. When wheat was bringing $3 a bushel, and the economy of the country was on a high wave and a great crest, they said—the conservatives—there was never to be any depression, there was never to be any panic! Those of us who called attention to the fact that the depressions came fairly regularly, every so many years, in this country of ours, those of us who claimed we should be ready were thrust aside; and our opinions were not supposed to be of any great value. But now, at this late date, we find the ablest and most distinguished of our Senators calling attention to their votes in 1932 and 1933.

NOW IS THE TIME TO INVESTIGATE W. P. A.

Mr. President, I wish to say at this point in my remarks that there are many claims that unworthy persons are on the rolls, that many fads and fancies are being introduced into the Works Progress Administration by impractical theorists. There have been charges even of fraud; and there may have been fraud. But I am unwilling to vote in the negative when it comes to an appropriation to take care of the hungry by means of public works just because there have been a few cases of fraud, and because there have been some fads and fancies, and because a few unworthy persons may have gotten on the rolls.

BOTH OLD PARTIES PLAYING POLITICS WITH W. P. A.

I am unwilling further to vote for an investigation of these matters in the heat of a political campaign, when one party is merely trying to make cheap politics of the Works Progress Administration against another political party. But 1939 is not a campaign year—unless we are campaigning all the time, and I imagine we are more or less. But certainly we can at this time calmly consider the wisdom of an investigation and pass judgment on it. So let any investigation go forward now, and let us perfect and improve the Works Progress Administration in this year 1939 and not wait until 1940, just a few days before a primary. I will not lend my vote to that sort of procedure, but I am willing to support an investigation at this time.

WE MUST NOT FORGET OUR HUNGRY AND OUR DESTITUTE

Whatever course we pursue, never let the American Congress and the American Government forget the millions who are hungry and poverty-stricken and destitute, the one-third who our President said were ill-housed, ill-clothed, and ill-fed. We must not let them suffer. Let us not argue with hunger because of a few fads and fancies which may have crept in, as I have stated, through the activities of impractical theorists, or because there may have been or there may be a few instances of fraud, or may be a few unworthy persons on the rolls. It is not fair to the millions of worthy people to compel them to suffer because it is possible to point out some unworthy cases.

FACTS AND INFORMATION

There have been so many eloquent and able speeches I do not know there is much that I can add to the Senate discussion, except to bring the attention of the Senate to some facts. We can theorize, we can talk about what should have been done and what ought to be done now, but we are confronted by these hundreds of thousands and even millions who need bread today, and will need it tomorrow and the day after tomorrow. Let us take them into consideration.

We hear a good many of those who are experts, or claim to be experts, say that in the United States we have this great land of liberty, and have everything any citizen could require.

Our country is the greatest country in the world. Our economy is better than that of any other nation. But let us examine the record with respect to the unemployment in other nations of the world, and let us see where we stand compared with other countries in respect to unemployment.

WE HAVE 70 PERCENT OF THE WORLD'S UNEMPLOYED

Some time ago I placed in the Record statistics given out by the International Labor Office at Geneva, Switzerland. The International Labor Office at Geneva, Switzerland, is an institution which is part of the sanctified League of Nations, and the statistics I refer to must be correct, because they come from that semisacred institution. The International Labor Office statistics show that we have approximately 70 percent of the world's recorded unemployed in the United States; that approximately 30 percent of the world's unemployed are in other countries than the United States. So we in America, have approximately 70 percent of the recorded unemployed of the world.

BANKING BILL OF 1933

With so great a percentage of the world's unemployed in America, we quarrel about appropriating $50,000,000, whereas we passed a banking bill in 1933 without even having the bill printed, or any Member of the House of Representatives, at least, having read it. I think I have a right to refer to that fact, because I was a Member of the House at that time. That bill was passed without being printed or read in the House of Representatives. We did not know what was in the bill. It was simply passed offhand.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield to the able Senator.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not know what happened in the House. I do know that the bill was not passed in the Senate until it was printed and had been considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency. The bill was printed and was on the desk of every Senator before it was acted upon.

BATTLESHIP OR BREAD

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am very happy to know that the Senate at least gave consideration to the bill. I made the same statement on the floor of the House, and it was not contradicted, and the bill was passed without any consideration in the great House of Representatives. We had no trouble about passing the banking bill. But, Senators, we have now debated for a long time as to whether or not we shall appropriate $50,000,000 for the hungry and unemployed of America. I wish to call attention to the fact that $50,000,000 is just one-half of the cost of one of these dinosaurs of the deep, the battleships that we are building and ordering to be built, 45,000 tons each. One battleship costs $100,000,000, not counting auxiliary vessels needed and necessary to protect this monarch of the deep from being sunk. We order battleships to be built without much debate on the question, but have days of consideration, debate, and argument with respect to appropriating $50,000,000 for the hungry of this country.

INTERNATIONAL LABOR OFFICE

I should like to call the Senate's attention to the figures of the International Labor Office with respect to the unemployed in the various countries of the world. I shall give round figures, and later ask to have the statement printed in the RECORD, giving the exact figures.

Belgium, 240,000 unemployed. Canada, 88,000 unemployed. Our neighbor on the north, the splendid country of Canada, has 88,000 unemployed. On our side of the border there are 10,000,000, 11,000,000, or 12,000,000 unemployed—whatever the number really may be. There is much disagreement as to the number of unemployed in our country.

In Chile there are 5,000 unemployed. In Czechoslovakia, 142,000. In Danzig, 4,000. Denmark, 155,000. Estonia, 2,000. Finland, 4,000. In France there are 460,000 unemployed. We have been busy financing France. We have been busy forgiving the debt France owes to us, to the tune of billions of dollars, but we find that in France there are only 460,000 unemployed.

UNEMPLOYMENT DECREASING IN EUROPE—GREAT BRITAIN

In Germany, including Austria, there are 733,000 unemployed.

For Great Britain we have two figures. One is 1,635,000 and with northern Ireland the figure is 2,039,000. The other day the press reported that the figure for unemployed in Great Britain had fallen three or four hundred thousand, so the number of unemployed in Great Britain now is around 1,700,000. Great Britain has the largest number of unemployed of any country in Europe. There the number of unemployed is 1,700,000, whereas in America there are ten, eleven, or twelve million unemployed. If the same proportion of unemployment obtained in Great Britain today that obtains in the United States, there would be six or seven million unemployed in Great Britain. Yet we are busy financing Great Britain. We are busy upholding her pound in the world markets, and the French franc in the world markets. We have repeatedly read articles about the Federal Reserve bank sustaining these financial systems. We have forgiven billions of dollars of debt due this country by Great Britain and France. Yet those countries have comparatively little unemployment.

In Hungary there are 43,000 unemployed. In Ireland, 105,000; Japan, 230,000; Latvia, 3,000; Mexico, 196,000; the Netherlands, 335,000; New Zealand, 1,000; Norway, 34,000; Poland, 456,000. The population of Poland is 33,500,000, and its unemployed number 456,000. That speaks for itself, and we have been busy financing Poland, Germany, Italy, and Europe in general, both in peace and in war.

Portugal has 40,000 unemployed; Rumania, 5,000. Rumania has a population of about 20,000,000 and only 5,000 are unemployed. Sweden has 122,000 unemployed; Switzerland, 85,000; Yugoslavia, 23,000.

OUR PLANS NOT WORKING SO WELL

With respect to the United States the International Labor Office says "applicants for work registered", and only those who are registered as applicants for work are given. The figure for the United States is 7,215,961. These figures appear in the International Labor Review Political Hand Book of the World 1939.

Those who may be labor-minded, those who may be progressive and liberal, are often lectured by the smart boys of Wall Street. They tell us what wonderful things are about to happen. But they do not seem to be doing so well with their plans. It is about time that the people of this country listen to the presentation of some other plan besides those plans which have failed.

Then we hear theories presented with respect to superwealth, to be piled ever higher and higher, until the structure of superwealth endangers not only those who have it, but it endangers the very country itself. I would not want to endanger any citizen under our flag. However, this superwealth endangers not only those who have the wealth, but the whole country. We will have to tame those Wall Street theorists with respect to their superwealth.

I wish to say that there is no desire in my heart to destroy the capitalistic system. I am not an advocate of any such action. I have never made a statement to that effect in my life. I believe in the free business system of the United States.

But I do not believe in tyranny and business dictatorship such as we have had in this country. These business dictators, these captains of industry, have been leading us on and on and on, until we find ourselves today in the situation that we have an overwhelming, preponderant unemployment as compared with other nations.

DECREASES IN RELIEF ROLLS, MARCH TO APRIL

I have some data from the Works Progress Administration. The figures are Government figures. I suppose they will not be questioned. The figures deal with the decreases in relief rolls from March to April. They are as follows: Connecticut, 2,000; Maine, 270; Massachusetts, 9,000; New Hampshire, 270; Rhode Island, 870; Vermont, 2,000; New Jersey, 7,000; New York City, 13,000; New York, excluding New York City, 4,000; Pennsylvania, 19,000; Delaware, 250; District of Columbia, 990; Maryland, 950; Virginia, 2,700; West Virginia, 3,600; Illinois, 18,200; Indiana, 4,900; Michigan, 10,300; Missouri, 10,600; Ohio, 19,500.

The figures may seem to be dreary, and the question may be asked why I should recite them on the Senate floor. Remember that everyone in these figures represents the head of a family, a family of three and one-half persons, if not four. Those persons are American citizens. They stand under the American flag. They are entitled to bread. We must so act and so conduct ourselves in connection with governmental affairs that we do not have to argue with the hungry. I wish to lend myself to the support of any program the purpose of which is to do away with hunger in America. Up to date we are in a situation which is not much to be envied.

I continue to present the figures from the Works Progress Administration of persons dropped from the rolls: Alabama, 4,700; Florida, 3,600; Georgia, 5,000; Kentucky, 4,800; North Carolina, 3,600; South Carolina, 3,700; Tennessee, 5,900; Arkansas, 4,400; Louisiana, 4,900; Mississippi, 3,800; Oklahoma, 5,700; Texas, 6,100; Iowa, 1,900; Kansas, 2,600; Minnesota, 5,500; Nebraska, 2,200; North Dakota, 1,100.

North Dakota has one of the lowest figures. Yet the 1,100 represent a total of 5,000 persons, Americans, in North Dakota, in want because those 1,100 are thrown off the rolls. Just where are they going for help? Where are they going to get bread? Where are they going to get jobs? And we are appropriating $100,000,000 apiece for the building of battleships.

ADMIRAL SIMS AND BATTLESHIPS

Mr. President, Admiral Sims, the commander of the American fleet in the World War—and he was an able commander, one of the ablest we have ever had—said that in the next war the safest place for our battleships is as far up the Mississippi River as we can get them. We have appropriated $100,000,000 for each of these battleships. Today I am willing to vote not only for $50,000,000 additional appropriation for relief, but I am willing to vote for $100,000,000 additional, and other Senators have made the same statement on the floor, notably the distinguished and able senior Senator from Nebraska. I hope that any one who may see my remarks, and not care to read so humble a statement, will read the eloquent, the marvelous speech made by the senior Senator from Nebraska on the Senate floor yesterday.

I continue to give the figures from the Works Progress Administration. South Dakota 990. Those 990 represent a total of 4,000 persons without bread, without employment, in the State of South Dakota, my native State.

W. P. A. IN MINNESOTA

In Minnesota there are more than 20,000 persons who are affected by the reduction in the rolls. Wisconsin, 6,100; Colorado, 2,400; Idaho, 900; Montana, 1,600; New Mexico, 300; Utah, 1,100; Wyoming, 370; Arizona, 800; north California, 5,000; south California, 3,600. There are nearly 10,000 in the great State of California. Multiplying that by three and one-half or four we have a considerable number of persons affected by the reduction in the rolls.

Nevada, 180; Oregon, 1,400; Washington, 4,800; Hawaii, 150.

Senators are much interested in many public works which have been instituted in their various States. When we have had so great a reduction in the work-relief rolls, what is going to happen to these public works that have been instituted when we reduce the amount requested for relief?

COLONEL HARRINGTON AND THE W. P. A.

I have before me a press release from Colonel Harrington, dated April 1, 1939. Remember that Harry Hopkins is no longer at the head of the Works Progress Administration. He is now Secretary of Commerce. Col. F. C. Harrington, of the United States Army, an able Army officer and engineer, is at the head of the Works Progress Administration. The press release says:

W. P. A. SETS 2,800,000 EMPLOYMENT QUOTA FOR APRIL

Col. F. C. Harrington, Works Progress Administrator, today announced a revised schedule of W. P. A. employment for April to provide jobs for an average of 2,800,000 persons, a reduction of approximately 200,000 from the current level of project employment, by April 8.

There is a reduction of 200,000. Multiplying by 4 gives 800,000. To be conservative we will say 750,000 persons when we consider the families.

Approval by the House of Representatives of a $100,000,000 additional appropriation to W. P. A. was the basis for the new employment quota, Colonel Harrington explained. If $150,000,000 had been appropriated to supplement W. P. A. funds previously voted for the current fiscal year, W. P. A. would have reduced its rolls approximately 100,000 in April. In the event no additional funds were voted, the schedule called for a reduction of about 400,000 during the week beginning Monday, April 3.

W. P. A. ROLLS FOR AMERICANS ONLY

These are the projects in the various States in which we are interested. They are projects on which American citizens are employed. I wish to say that I am entirely in sympathy with keeping the W. P. A. rolls for American citizens only. If a man comes to this country and does not care enough about it to become a citizen of the United States, I am not interested in that man. I am not interested in what happens to him, except that as a human being I may be sorry that he is out of work or off the rolls. However, he owes allegiance to another country and another flag. I am talking about American citizens, not aliens. We are to "reduce employment on those projects or units of projects on which such reduction will not seriously affect the efficient operation of project."

INSTRUCTIONS TO STATE ADMINISTRATORS

The instructions which went to all State administrators were as follows:

All State administrators were instructed to employ the following methods of reduction, looking to increased efficiency of the W. P. A. program, as previously outlined:

1. Reduce employment on those projects or units of projects on which such reduction will not seriously affect efficient operation of project.

2. Discontinue least desirable projects now in operation at completion of work on useful units thereof.

3. Discontinue projects on which Federal man-month nonlabor costs are unusually high due to insufficient financial participation of sponsor and on other projects on which percentage of sponsor's participation is unreasonably low.

4. Possibly discontinue operation of W. P. A. program in those areas or localities where program is being operated on such a small scale that excessive administrative and supervisory costs result.

5. Discontinue projects on which excessive transportation costs which are paid from Federal funds are necessary to transport workers to and from the projects.

The orders, to reach the State administrators Saturday morning, also rescinded effective April 10 earlier instructions to make no new assignments or replacements. After that date, such assignments to projects may be made within State employment quotas.

Colonel Harrington's instructions to State administrators and the revised employment quotas, by States, follow:

"House of Representatives has today approved House Joint Resolution 209 providing $100,000,000 additional for W. P. A. for balance of current fiscal year. This legislation now goes to Senate for consideration. In view of action of House of Representatives I have decided, pending Senate action, to reapportion funds already actually appropriated, which do not include amount carried by House Joint Resolution 209, to provide average Nationwide employment of 2,800,000 for month of April. On this basis employment authorization for your State program for April will be (see State table). Reduction to attain this quota will be made by methods described in my telegram of March 19, and for financial reasons must be completed by April 8. Effective April 10, instructions contained in my telegram of March 13, which stopped new assignments and replacements, are rescinded and new assignments and replacements may then be made within your employment authorization."

The order is to be effective April 10, 2 days from now. Senators may hear from some of the projects in which we are interested.

THE ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE W. P. A.

Mr. President, I am not an administration Senator. I was not elected by the Democratic Party. However, I wish to be fair, and to give credit where credit is due. I want to refer to the accomplishments of the Works Progress Administration. We have heard great outcries about some fraud here and there, or some political set-up here and there by which someone was trying to obtain votes, or by which some unworthy persons got on the rolls, as I mentioned a while ago, through some fad or fancy instituted by an impractical theorist. Let us get down to the real accomplishments of the Works Progress Administration.

BUILDINGS, SCHOOLS, LIBRARIES, ROADS, AND BRIDGES

With respect to public buildings, schools, and libraries, we have 12,112 new constructions of schools and libraries by the Works Progress Administration. There have been additions to 1,363 buildings, and improvements to 36,510.

I know from my examination of youth problems that we have been neglecting our school children in many parts of this great country. We have not furnished them with proper facilities. Localities and States have been unable to carry on and erect the necessary buildings. Many of the buildings were of the Civil War period, and unfit for human habitation or school purposes. The Works Progress Administration stepped in and, if I read rightly, some 50,000 school buildings and libraries have been constructed, or have had improvements or additions made to them. I think that is quite a considerable accomplishment.

We come next to recreational buildings. Those of us who examine the news from Europe know that sports stadiums are being built all over Europe and great athletic meets are being held everywhere. Certainly our record in the Olympic Games shows America to be in the lead. However, in many places recreational facilities are lacking. The accomplishments of the Works Progress Administration in that field show new constructions of 3,777; additions of 238; and improvements of 2,664. Approximately 6,000 recreational buildings were affected.

BUILDING TRADES

With regard to institutional buildings, there were 284 new constructions, 61 additions, and 2,484 improvements. The total number of institutional buildings affected was approximately 3,000.

Public buildings show new constructions of 615, additions of 116, and improvements of 2,545. The total number of public buildings affected is approximately 3,000.

Those engaged in the building trades, such as carpenters, bricklayers, hod carriers, lathers, plasterers, and all those engaged in the building trades are interested in these figures. They are interested in the construction of the buildings which have been erected by the W. P. A.

GREAT CREDIT IS DUE THE W. P. A.

I am a critic of the administration on certain policies; but I desire to give credit where credit is due. Great credit is due the Works Progress Administration in this matter.

In connection with bridges, roads, and streets, there were 46,650 miles of new construction and 158,694 miles of improvements. Considerably more than 200,000 miles of highways, roads, and streets were built and perfected by the Works Progress Administration.

I wish I could make this presentation more attractive to the Senate. Figures are dull. Many of the statistics are not so interesting. However, I want them in the RECORD, and I hope Senators who may not care to listen to my poor words on the floor will give some attention to the statistics and data which I am placing in the RECORD.

In connection with sidewalks and paths, there were 5,156 miles of new construction, and 30,297 miles of improvements. Upward of 40,000 miles of sidewalks and paths in this country were affected by the program.

BUILDING AMERICA

I am tremendously interested in building America. I am not interested in building Germany, France, Britain, or other countries across the sea. I am interested in building the United States. I am interested in our buildings, our roads, streets, bridges, and other improvements which we need. If there ever was a time when we should have public works and public construction, it is now, with the top-heavy unemployment that we have in the United States. We need a sound and sensible program of public works. The only fault I find with the parties which have been in control of the Government is that they did not see the point soon enough. They should have planned this thing in the high tide of prosperity, for the evil day which was sure to come. We should have had our blueprints and plans ready. The senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] found fault with the W. P. A. because it was not thoroughly planned. I admit that it was not planned as well as it should have been planned. It should have been planned long in advance. However, as a matter of quick planning for an emergency, there was perhaps as good planning as any party in power could have done under the circumstances.

In addition to these have been airports and airway equipment, miscellaneous recreational facilities, drainage systems, electric and communication utilities, ground improvements, nonconstruction activities such as conservation, food and fuel distribution, work in libraries, medical, nursing assistance, and educational classes.

W. P. A.—UNITED STATES SUMMARY

These are not my figures. These are the W. P. A., United States Summary. That is the authority for these figures.

I cannot understand how Senators can vote against a program that is building America as that program is, even though it is an emergency program, not perfectly planned. I just cannot understand how anyone can vote against it.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. MURRAY. Is there any criticism of the W. P. A. program on the part of big business in this country? I find, in my State, that all the newspapers of Montana which are directly under the control of big corporations have carried editorials during the past several years in which they have commended the program of the W. P. A. in my State. I assume that the situation must be the same in other States of the Union. I do not see how it is possible for anyone to find fault with the program of public works that has been carried on under the W. P. A. in the United States; and I should like to inquire of the Senator if he knows any State in the Union in which the corporate interests are criticizing the program.

NEWSPAPER PROTESTS

Mr. LUNDEEN. I will say to the able Senator from Montana that I have here editorials from great newspapers which I propose to read, if the Senate will hear me, showing that many business interests in the country are interested in the W. P. A., and that they do not want this money withdrawn from our grocery stores or our building trades or business in general which in turn will pour the money back into the arteries and veins of commerce of America, and, of course, will aid these business institutions. I want to see business prosper.

I am not desirous of destroying business. The only fault I have ever found with business is with topheavy business; that is all. I want to tame top-heavy, destructive, illegal business. I believe that business which is lawfully conducted and which is carrying on for the good of America should be encouraged, and business should be interested in this governmental activity; I will say to the Senator that I think much of it is.

Mr. MURRAY. I am glad to have the Senator say so

STUART CHASE AND THE DICTATORS

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I desire to read an excerpt from an article entitled "How to Stop Dictators," by Stuart Chase, published in the New Republic for January 25, 1939. It has a bearing on this discussion. I ask Senators to remember that these are not my words; these are the words of Stuart Chase, the author:

> The Nazis publish a newspaper called Der Angriff. One task of its editors is to prove to Germans that political democracy is an inferior form of government to the totalitarian state. Not long ago Der Angriff published a series of pictures showing American billboards with their cheery slogans: "There is no way like the American way," "The world's highest wages," and so on. Just below it ran a group of photographs taken in the United States showing unemployed men at factory doors, slums, bums, breadlines, shacks of tenant farmers. It captioned the two exhibits: "Thank God, we have a better way!"

In one sense the Nazis have.

I am reading from Stuart Chase; these are not my words; they are the words of Stuart Chase:

There were 6,000,000 unemployed in Germany when Hitler came into power. Today there are practically none. The outlook for German youth was black in 1933; now the future is dangercus but full of action. Factory chimneys were cold; now they are belching smoke. (Poetic image; German engineers save the smoke.)

We had better not try to win a contest against dictators simply by shouting about the blessings of "liberty" and "freedom." People do not eat liberty and freedom; these words make no jobs. For every cultivated American liberal who cares profoundly about the Bill of Rights there are 99 citizens in the lower income groups who care more profoundly about employment and security.

I am still reading from Stuart Chase.

WE MUST MAKE OUR ECONOMIC MACHINE WORK

Americans have political democracy rooted deep in their folklore, but it is rash to suppose that they are prepared to defend it at the price of permanent economic misery. If we value our liberties of speech, press, and ballot we shall have to make the economic machine work better than it has worked since October 1929.

I desire to repeat that statement:

If we value our liberties of speech, press, and ballot we shall have to make the economic machine work better than it has worked since October 1929.

TWENTY MILLION AMERICANS ON RELIEF

With 20,000,000 American on relief those cheery posters warrant a razzing from Hitler or anybody else.

Why were Italians converted to fascism? Because they were suffering from intolerable economic conditions, unemployment, insecurity, and were disappointed over Italy's share in the spoils of the Versailles Treaty. They turned to a strong man.

Why were Germans converted to nazi-ism? Millions of them, remember, had been voting a Socialist ticket. They were suffering from unemployment, terrible economic conditions, poor food, savage reparation payments, unending debts to foreigners, the iron ring of Versailles, the middle-class fear of communism. They turned to a strong man.

WHY EUROPE TURNED TO DICTATORS

Why do the people of many nations in Europe support dictators, and hang out a "To rent" sign on their houses of parliament? Because of desperate economic conditions, unemployment, insecurity. Will such conditions produce a strong man in France, in England, some day? If they continue long enough, they probably will. There are already signs of it in Paris. They once produced a Napoleon in France, following a queen who said: "Let them eat cake."

This is the end of my quotation from Stuart Chase.

I desire to call attention to the fact that we now have a dictator in France. A dictator is in power in France today. When we talk about dictators, let us ask whether it is the dictator of Rumania or the dictator of Poland or the dictator of France or the dictator of Germany or the dictator of Italy. So far as dictators are concerned, they blossomed down in South America years before we heard of them in Europe, at least in modern times; and there are quite a few of them down there now.

POVERTY AND HUNGER IN AMERICA WHILE WE DISCUSS FANTASTIC WARS

My point is that we must do something about this misery and poverty and hunger in America lest we endanger our institutions of government. We are engaged in seeing bogeymen in the attic, talking about fantastic wars, about other nations coming over here to conquer us. Who is going to conquer this great and grand and glorious Republic, with more than one-half of the industrial establishments of the earth here in America and a great ocean on each side? And I want to call attention to the statement of Mr. Sikorsky, American aviation expert, who the other day was over in Europe and recently came back, in which he said that the bombing planes of Europe are built for European service. They are small bombers. They cannot cross the ocean.

When we are engaged in voting those huge sums—and I have gone along so far—why should there be extended debate on a measure which proposes public works for the unemployed and the hungry of America, for American citizens? As I understand, the aliens are off the rolls, or are being taken off the rolls.

FARMER LABOR

Lest there may be those who say, "Of course, that is the statement of a labor Senator," let me say that I am proud to be a labor Senator. I am proud to come here with a mandate of the farmers and the laboring men of Minnesota and the small-business men of our State. I am glad to come here and speak for them as best I can; but I want to read the words of someone else, and I want to place in the RECORD the sentiments of great newspapers which perhaps may not sympathize with my political views.

I read an editorial from the Philadelphia Record under date of April 5, 1939:

Where's the economy in firing the customers?

That may be a partial answer to the able Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY].

WHY FIRE THE CUSTOMERS?

Where's the economy in firing the customers?

The clinking noise comes from the chisels of the economy bloc in the United States Senate.

The economy bloc is so strong for economy it is willing to fire hundreds of thousands of customers of business and call it economy.

That won't be economy to the merchant. It will slash his income. That won't be economy to the big corporations whose production, now happily on the upgrade, will have to slacken when Congress forces a cut in public purchasing power.

It won't even be economy for the Government. Workers thrown off W. P. A. will land on State relief rolls—which will rise accordingly, and force State taxes up, in turn.

WATCH THEM REDUCE TAXES

And we have had some folks elected to office lately in various States and local communities who have promised to reduce taxes! We are giving them a swell chance to reduce taxes by throwing folks off the National Government pay rolls and throwing them back on the local rolls. We shall see how many taxes they reduce. Taxes are going up all over America, and they will continue to go up all over America.

The other night at a banquet I sat beside a very able lawyer who was complaining to me that he was paying 9 different kinds of taxes in the District of Columbia, and at the same time he was arguing that we should go over and regulate Europe and tell them how to run their governments, and so forth. I said to him, "If we do that you will not be paying 9 different kinds of taxes; you will be paying 19 kinds of taxes, and you will not have much of anything to pay taxes on, either, because if we are dragged into another war we shall become confiscatory in our taxing methods in America."

EUROPE, TAXATION AND CONFISCATION

Remember, it was not long ago that Mussolini made a 10 percent capital tax levy. He walked right in and took 10 percent of the capital of the country. He walked right into the banks of Italy. I do not want that situation to come about here in America. I am doing my best, with my vote and what words I may be able to speak, to prevent that situation from arising here.

The editorial continues:

This is from the Philadelphia Record editorial of April 5, 1939; and the Philadelphia Record is a great metropolitan newspaper in the third largest city in the United States:

Why, then, cut $50,000,000 off the $150,000,000 W. P. A. deficiency appropriation?

Merely to spite President Roosevelt.

Because he asked for $150,000,000 he must receive less, just to show the people that Roosevelt can't tell the economy bloc what to do. No, sirree! Those gentlemen are independent, even at the cost of other men's jobs.

We think a lot of the Senators who voted with the economy bloc last time are not going to do so this time.

ECONOMY DRIVE OF 1933

I may call attention to the fact that we had an economy drive in 1933, and there was economy and economy and talk about economy. We economized at the expense of the veterans of the World War. We threw them off the rolls, we threw them out of hospitals into the streets of American cities, men who were crippled and gassed and hungry, some of them unable to walk. In instances the Government even demanded the clothes they were wearing from them, demanded that they bring in substitute clothes and leave their uniforms behind.

We economized at the expense of the widows of the veterans of the World War, the Spanish-American War, and the Civil War. We economized at the expense of the men of the Spanish-American War, and I know that hundreds of them committed suicide because they had little insurance policies, and that was all they could give to their families.

The economy went on. But how did it end? It ended in a repeal of the Economy Act, and I am glad to say that I introduced a bill to repeal the Economy Act the day after it was passed. Of course, we were laughed at, but we are not interested in what some people may say on one day when we know that they will have to reverse themselves in a few days. Those who were advocating economy did reverse themselves and the Economy Act was repealed.

BONUS MOTION AND PATMAN BONUS BILL

Not only was that act repealed, but I had the honor to offer the motion that took the Patman bonus bill out of the committee, where it lay dormant, and that motion was adopted by the House of Representatives, and the bonus bill carrying $2,400,000,000 passed the House on that motion and went to the Senate of the United States. It became a law, and these billions of dollars of money were poured into the arteries and veins of commerce in the United States, and the very business people who had been fighting the bonus were the ones who benefited from it, and the upturn of business began at that time. If economy measures are started now, just watch the curve go down.

BUSINESS AND CONFIDENCE

To those who talk about business and confidence and all that, I repeat my statement of a few days ago. Many captains of industry want us to adjourn and get out of the Capital so they can have business confidence and business may go on. But as soon as we do adjourn, and they are sinking deeper into the mire of depression, they want us to come back so that we can vote some more money to rescue them out of the Slough of Despond. That happens time and again. It has become a regular cycle.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. I should like to inquire if it was not due to the very prosperity which the Senator has just described that the big basic corporations of the country immediately began to raise their prices, to take advantage of the increased prosperity which had come over the country, and that the major corporations of the United States made more profits in 1937 than they had made in 1929 which was the highest period of industrial activity in this country? And was that not all because of the fact that they raised their prices? As a result of that effort on their part to skim the cream off the public spending that was taking place, they brought on the depression of 1937. In other words, there has been a complete and utter failure on the part of big business in this country to cooperate with the Government in its effort to put men back to work and to bring about prosperous conditions in this country.

PROFITS INCREASE, WAGES FAIL TO KEEP STEP

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator has well stated the situation as to business, and the depression and prosperity cycle, which we have been discussing, and I thank him for his valuable contribution. He is correct in his statement. And not only did profits increase but wages failed to keep step with the increased profits, if I am correct in my recollection.

Mr. MURRAY. In 1938, when I pointed that condition out on the floor of the Senate, one of the Senators present interjected that over a period of 8 years the corporations of the United States had made an average profit of only 2 percent, and inquired whether that was not a reasonable profit. Of course, 2 percent is a very reasonable profit; in fact, it is less than they would be entitled to earn. But he selected as his period for determining the rate of profit they were making, the period running from 1930 to 1936, which, of course, was during the time when the corporations of the United States were not able to make anything over a large portion of the time. But when the moment came that prosperous conditions did develop, then they moved in, raised their prices, and prevented the country from going ahead under prosperous conditions.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I thank the Senator. The editorial from the Philadelphia Record proceeds:

We think leading Republicans as well as Democrats are not going to let the spite of a few men for President Roosevelt be taken out on the children of W. P. A. workers.

That's why we think this drive of the economy bloc will be beaten.

There is a reference at this point to a Senator, which I will leave out in the reading.

* * * * * * *

We are glad to reprint in today's Mail Bag a letter which says we have been unfair.

On going back over our files, we find we did print the statements—but perhaps we did not give them the prominence they merited.

* * * * * * *

Business was better—better than it is now—back in the winter of 1936, just before the last wholesale slash in W. P. A. funds.

By the time a million men had been laid off W. P. A., business wasn't better any more.

That business decline was the fastest and sharpest in the country's whole history.

Why?

What could anybody expect when a million customers of American business were wiped out at one fell swoop?

That musn't happen again.

Mr. President, I ran across the following article in the press:

GENERAL GRANT'S NEPHEW DIES FROM EXPOSURE—FOUND HUDDLED ON A COT NEAR COLD FURNACE

CHICAGO, February 6.—Jesse Root Grant, 74, a nephew of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, former President, died in poverty last night at the county hospital. His death was caused by exposure.

He was removed to the hospital Saturday from an eight-room home in suburban Wilmette where he had lived for 15 years with his son, Ulysses S. Grant, 38, apparently too proud to seek relief. He had been found in a coma on a shabby cot near an unlighted furnace in the basement.

The house was cold and almost barren of furniture.

The son said he has been unemployed since 1931 when he lost his job in a Chicago bank. He said his father had lived in the basement in recent weeks because a leg ailment had made it difficult for him to mount the stairs. The son was wearing an overcoat in the house when newspapermen talked to him.

He said his paternal grandfather was Orvil Grant, a brother of General Grant, and that his father had been born in General Grant's home at Galena, Ill. He exhibited a shiny pewter coffee urn which, he said, had belonged to the general.

He said he has an uncle—his father's brother—also bearing the name of Ulysses, who lives in New York City. His uncle, he said, is a retired banker of modest means and until recently had helped with his father's expenses.

Jesse Grant retired in 1928 from his position as an accountant for the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad. For a time he and his son lived modestly on a small legacy left him by an aunt. His wife, Gertrude, died in 1929.

Certainly there must be something wrong with our social security when we can have instances like that in American life. And they can be multiplied by the thousands.

I read now from another editorial which appeared in the Philadelphia Record:

STILL NIBBLING AT W. P. A.

The "we hate Roosevelt" bloc in the House is now engaging in a drive to cut $50,000,000 from the President's request for $150,000,000 for W. P. A., though the entire amount is needed to avoid several hundred thousand dismissals.

This pathetic effort to nibble and gnaw at the President's requests reveals a desire to secure a purely token victory over Roosevelt. It is a confession of political bankruptcy by the economy advocates.

They don't dare say, "Throw the whole W. P. A. set-up out the window." They don't dare say, "Let's save some real money by wiping out relief." They know the country isn't back of them; they know that business itself has come to appreciate the stimulating effect of W. P. A. pay rolls on business volume.

They don't have the courage to challenge W. P. A. flatly and then face their own constituents.

The truth is that the Woodrums and the Adamses want a token victory that will let them gloat but not one that cuts so deep as to alarm the voters. If a few hundred thousand jobs are brutally and callously upset in the process, they don't mind.

Following this policy of nibbling at what they don't dare to fight, they cut $150,000,000 from the President's original $875,000,000 request in January. Then they hurriedly said they didn't mean it by adding an amendment banning dismissals and virtually inviting the President to ask for the slashed $150,000,000.

A $100,000,000 ERROR

I call attention here to the fact and remind the Senate of the fact that we cut $150,000,000 from the appropriation a short time ago, and those who voted to do that presumably thought they knew the conditions in the country. Now the same people who voted to cut the $150,000,000 out of the appropriation come back and ask for two-thirds of it, ask that $100,000,000 be replaced. So at least they were wrong to the extent of $100,000,000, and it is some error when one makes a mistake in figures to the tune of $100,000,000. Perhaps they are also wrong to the tune of another $50,000,000. They admit they were wrong to the extent of a hundred million. What about the fifty million? Perhaps they are wrong there, too.

If an error is to be made, let us make it in favor of our American people. If we are to make a mistake, let us be a little more liberal and have less economy talk so that no mistake can be made.

I am sure that if the W. P. A. administrators find that they can obtain no people to put on their rolls, that they can obtain no workers to toil on their projects, I say I am sure they will then turn the unused money back to the Public Treasury, but up to date I have not heard about any such situation. The President did ask for $150,000,000 and, if I remember correctly, he did so within 24 hours after our economy complex took legislative form. The editorial continues:

Now they are nibbling at the $150,000,000 in the same nervous, startled-fawn manner. They know the country hasn't swallowed their arguments about W. P. A. "extravagance," they know the country values a $10,000,000,000 rise in national income more than it fears a $1,000,000,000 rise in the Budget.

And so they heave and strain and back and fill, hoping to end up with at least a 5-cent piece slash out of the appropriation, just to defy "that man in the White House."

That, incidentally, they are endangering many jobs doesn't disturb their sleep.

We think that the idea of "A job for every American," as the way to defend democracy and make it work, is taking root in this country.

Let me repeat that sentence. The editorial in the Philadelphia Record states:

We think that the idea of "A job for every American," as the way to defend democracy and make it work, is taking root in this country.

If this Congress doesn't sense how deep that aspiration goes in American life, the people will elect one that will sense it.

I quote from the Philadelphia Record:

ONE THOUSAND RALLY IN FIGHT AGAINST W. P. A. CUTS—LABOR AND BUSINESS URGE $875,000,000 BUDGET ASKED BY F. D. R.

Labor and business, represented by 1,000 persons, protested any slash in the President's $875,000,000 budget for W. P. A. at a rally last night at 150 North Broad Street.

Joseph McDonough, elected Wednesday to head the Central Labor Union, pledged support of the American Federation of Labor.

I suppose some persons may think that the American Federation of Labor does not count. It counts in this matter because the federation deals directly with the unemployed. The unemployed come to their union offices, to their business agents. The unemployed are in contact with the American Federation of Labor day after day, and the federation spoke up in Philadelphia.

"Thousands of our members need work and want work," he declared. "The least I can do is lend my signature to any movement protesting a reduction in jobs."

Let us remember that the proposed policy means a reduction in jobs.

WARNS OF BLOW TO BUSINESS

Nathan Bloom, Philadelphia textile manufacturer, said the $125,000,000 cut proposed in Congress would be "disastrous" to industry as well as to labor.

"Jokes about W. P. A. aren't so funny when you consider that the W. P. A. worker is laboring to buy food and clothing his family needs, and in so doing is providing customers for industry."

Benjamin Knox, State director of the Federal art project, pleaded for maintenance of that program.

BENEFIT TO PUBLIC

"We're not only giving work to unemployed artists," he explained, "but also giving the public an acquaintance with art. Right now murals are in progress in five Philadelphia schools and hospitals. Elsewhere in the city we are conducting exhibitions—intended to enhance the lives of every citizen."

Other speakers were Carl Bersing, president of the C. I. O. council, and Russell Watson, secretary of the local Workers' Alliance.

Let me read from the Minneapolis Tribune, one of the great metropolitan newspapers of Minnesota:

CITIES' RELIEF PLIGHT

In cutting the Minnesota deficiency relief appropriation from $3,000,000 to $2,000,000 the Senate Finance Committee is actuated by laudable motives of economy. But the cities of Minnesota, where relief rolls are largely concentrated, must take care of the people. Their financial conditions are serious, and are rapidly getting worse.

I wish I could make this reading of long articles more interesting to Senators on the floor. We have here an article in the Minneapolis Tribune which says that the people's financial conditions are serious and are rapidly getting worse. I hope some one or two or three Senators may hear that.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. The Senator from Minnesota makes an excellent point when he points out to the Senate the serious situation confronting our local governments. Yesterday I explained to the Senate that the State of New York was appropriating the largest sum of money to meet current needs ever appropriated in the history of the State. I likewise pointed out the difficulty which beset the mayor of the city of New York in an attempt to balance the budget of that great municipality. I added that it was relief need which made it difficult for both the Governor and the mayor to balance their budgets. And I pointed out, as the Senator from Minnesota has just pointed out, that the situation throughout the land affecting local government is such that it is unfair, if not unsportsmanlike, for the Senate of the United States to shift the burden at this time and overload our local relief agencies.

WE MAY SHIFT THE OBLIGATION—BUT THE OBLIGATION IS THERE

The distinguished Senator from Minnesota is making a splendid argument in favor of the maximum appropriation. I wish to say further that no matter what we do in this instance, we cannot avoid the obligation of taking care of the Nation's unemployed. We may shift the obligation temporarily from one government to another, but the obligation is there.

DEMOCRACY IN THE BALANCE

Mr. President, I wish to reiterate the statement I made day before yesterday, which was agreed to by the Senator who is now making so able an address, that we were quick to render our support and aid in the case of the Armenians, and the Belgians, and other stricken peoples of the world, and when the leader of this Nation, at a time when democracy hangs in the balance, requests our aid for our own people we should embrace the opportunity with enthusiasm, and give to that President the amount he requested, which in his judgment, with the understanding that he possesses of the present needs, supported and augmented by the information that comes to him from the head of the W. P. A., is necessary. We should give him the full amount requested in the amendment offered as a substitute for the committee proposal.

I wish to say further that the criticism leveled at the character of the projects included in the W. P. A. program may have been with a degree of appropriateness leveled at the character of the projects a few years ago; but like every other Government instrumentality pioneering in a new field, the W. P. A. program and the character of its projects have improved materially in the last few years. Today the projects approved for local governments are of an unusual type—not current projects, not those that are necessary in the day-by-day functioning of local governments, but products of an unusual type and a noncurrent character. All projects require local sponsorships, and all projects require local participation insofar as furnishing funds for the completion of those projects is concerned.

I may add also that the local welfare agencies in most instances furnish the relief labor for the projects.

Therefore the W. P. A. projects of today are superior, and the administration of those projects today is by far superior, to what was the case with respect to its predecessor organizations, either the F. E. R. A. or the C. W. A.

I commend the Senator from Minnesota for the argument he is making, for the eloquent appeal that he is putting forth for an adequate appropriation to carry out the pending program of the Works Progress Administration.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I thank the able Senator from New York.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, because of the importance of the question and the argument that he is making in support of the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Florida, if it is agreeable to the Senator from Minnesota I shall suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield for that purpose?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I shall be glad to yield for that purpose with the understanding that I may have the floor after the roll call shall have been completed.

Mr. MEAD. That is understood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would advise the Senator from Minnesota that he would recognize the Senator from Minnesota at the conclusion of the quorum call, but that under a strict interpretation of the rule the Senator would have lost the floor and would be beginning his second speech.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, under those circumstances I think I shall prefer to go on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota declines to yield.

Mr. MEAD. In accordance with the Senator's desire, I withdraw the suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I thank the able Senator from New York. I wish to commend the eloquence with which he stated the case yesterday. I also wish to commend the able Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] for the great speech he made yesterday. I have already referred to the distinguished and able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and I have asked the country to read his speech. I suggested that if I can do no more than call attention to the speech of these able Senators perhaps there may be some light thrown on the situation.

I thank the Senators for doing me the honor to listen to the statements I am making and the editorials and articles I am reading from various newspapers.

I continue to read from the editorial in the Minneapolis Tribune:

Nathan Harris, utilities engineer for Minneapolis, warned the committee that Minneapolis will reach its debt limit by the end of the year, and will be unable to borrow further. Then what? St. Paul is borrowing from other current funds to pay relief costs.

The great capital city of Minnesota is now taking money out of other funds and putting that money into the relief fund, which is exhausted.

Relief is not merely a problem for the cities. Thousands of the persons on city relief rolls have come within the last 5 years from farms or country towns to live in the cities, and now are local charges. Meanwhile, because of high local taxes, many city residents are acquiring rural homes.

The problem is State-wide. Harry Fiterman, tax analyst, estimates that $140,000,000 was paid out in Minnesota last year for relief of all kinds, Federal, State, and local. Much of the Federal money went to rural communities.

All the cities ask from the State is a fair understanding and treatment of their situation. It is no occasion for stirring up sectional feeling. The interests of all are closely tied together.

CUTTING RELIEF IN MINNESOTA

So, Mr. President, we find in Minnesota a cut in the deficiency relief appropriation from $3,000,000 to $2,000,000. The Minneapolis Tribune says conditions are serious and rapidly getting worse. St. Paul is taking first from one fund and then from another fund and putting the money into the relief fund. Minneapolis is rapidly approaching the debt limit. Then at this end of the line we are trying to make a cut in the relief appropriation. So there is to be a cut at both ends. Just where do the unemployed come in? Just what is going to become of the hungry and the destitute?

I read from the Philadelphia Record of March 24, 1939:

Investigate W. P. A., but keep the workers working.

I think that is a pretty good statement. I have made only brief reference to that point. I shall make it a little more plain if I can.

UNWORTHY PERSONS ON ROLLS

Frequently we hear the charge made that unworthy persons are found on Works Progress Administration rolls; that there are instances of fraud; and that fads and fancies have crept into W. P. A. Grant all that. I believe unworthy persons have found their way on to some rolls. Fads and fancies have been instituted by impractical theorists. I believe it would not be surprising if fraud reared its head here and there. However, I am not going to vote to inflict poverty, hunger, and destitution on millions because of isolated instances of wrongdoing in the administration, even though they be fairly numerous. Nor will I vote for an investigation in the heat of a campaign, immediately before election.

If there is to be any investigation, let that investigation come now; 1939 is the best year for an investigation. We can now calmly investigate and pass judgment on the matter without entangling the investigation with our political campaigns. I am in favor of any reasonable investigation. Let investigations go forward. However, they are for the future. You cannot argue with hunger; and there are millions of hungry persons in America today. We must give them bread. I repeat that statement more fully so that my position may be clear in that respect.

The Philadelphia Record continues:

The House Rules Committee, by a 7-to-4 vote, has approved a resolution ordering a congressional investigation of W. P. A.

Meanwhile, the House Appropriations Committee wrangles over chiseling at the $150,000,000 appropriation for W. P. A. asked by President Roosevelt.

Nobody we know of opposes a fair investigation of W. P. A. For ourselves, we welcome it.

We think such a probe, impartially conducted, will show the enormous amount of good W. P. A. has done, the vast benefits it has returned the country: (1) In the maintenance of purchasing power; (2) in keeping families from starvation; (3) in the valuable public-works projects which have given the country new schools, new parks, playgrounds, sewers, soil reclamation, flood control * * * to mention but a few.

LONG-TIME PLANNING NECESSARY

I will say to Senators who have just come into the Chamber that I have been reciting numerous instances, running into the tens of thousands, of buildings, roads, and other improvements. More than 200,000 miles of roads have been built. Perhaps they were not perfectly planned. They were quickly planned in an emergency. However, such a plan is better than no plan at all. Of course, planning should have been done years ago in times of prosperity. However, it was not done, and so the only way out was the way adopted.

Yes, we would like to see the whole story of W. P. A. told to the public from the spotlight of a congressional forum.

But—

First, let Congress do the decent thing and approve the $150,000,000 which President Roosevelt has asked to keep W. P. A. going without any further firings of jobless workers.

President Roosevelt and Colonel Harrington, it is to be presumed, know more about the operations of W. P. A. than the Congressmen who haggle over how many jobs they shall destroy.

LISTEN TO THOSE WHO KNOW

I do not think it is any reflection upon the Members of the House and Senate to say that the President and Colonel Harrington, an Army engineer, with his great staff experienced by many years of labor under Mr. Hopkins—and they are improving from year to year—know more about the situation than we know, and know more about it than any committee can know, with all due respect to the able committee which has considered the matter, and to the able and distinguished chairman of that committee, for whom I have the greatest respect.

Those in charge of the administration of the W. P. A. must know. They live W. P. A. facts day after day, morning, noon, and night, and they know the figures. They know what the country is up against, and I think we should listen to them.

The very proposal for an inquiry is a confession that Congress does not know the needs of W. P. A.

To slash the appropriation simply to take a gratuitous whack at the President is not only cheap politics but a type of strategy which will be resented by most people regardless of party affiliations.

Investigate W. P. A.? Yes, but not until Congress first has voted the funds to keep W. P. A. going.

The jobless need the jobs. Business needs the customers.

I wish I could say that loud enough so that all Members of Congress could hear it. If they do not hear my words I hope at least they will read the RECORD tomorrow.

The jobless need the jobs. Business needs the customers.

The Philadelphia Record of April 4, 1939, says:

State drops 15,000 after W. P. A. clash. Many projects ditched.

Projects will be ditched in your State and in mine. They are being ditched now, while we are considering the matter on the floor of the Senate. Thousands of workers are being thrown off the rolls.

ECONOMY VICTORY TO AFFECT 35,000

HARRISBURG, April 3.—State Works Progress Administrator Chief E. C. Smith abandoned "undesirable" works projects by the dozens today in line with instructions from Washington to cut Pennsylvania W. P. A. personnel 15,000, to an economy quota of 220,510.

If my estimate is correct, that means that Pennsylvania will still have left on the rolls upwards of 1,000,000. Many persons seem to fail to understand the seriousness of the situation.

The reduction, forced by victory of the economy bloc in the National House of Representatives which clipped $50,000,000 from the W. P. A. deficiency appropriation urged by the President, affects an estimated 35,000 Pennsylvanians.

Public Assistance Secretary Howard L. Russell estimated that 50 to 75 percent of the project workers furloughed would seek direct relief grants for themselves and their dependents after a 3-week waiting period.

For the life of me I do not see how they can wait 3 days, with their $40 and $60 a month payments. I do not see how they can wait any 3 weeks. They will go right on the local and State relief rolls.

I wish to say that not only am I ready to vote for the additional $50,000,000 but I am willing to join with the able senior Senator from Nebraska, whom we all love and whom the country loves, to make the amount $100,000,000, as he so eloquently suggested yesterday. I am willing to join with those who wish to remember the many who are now being thrown off the rolls, and who will be left without bread and jobs.

YOU CANNOT ARGUE WITH A HUNGRY MAN

I repeat, you cannot argue with a hungry man. He wants a job. He wants bread. If he is not given a job to earn bread, he is going to seek relief.

I wish to make my position clear in the matter. I am not in favor of giving a penny, a nickel, a dime, or a dollar to any able-bodied employable person for relief. I do not believe in it. An able-bodied person in need should be given work on public works and public projects. Of course, the projects should be planned, and they should be necessary works. Such a man should be given an opportunity to earn bread for himself and his family. However, if he cannot obtain employment, then we must give him relief. It seems to me that that statement is primary and fundamental.

From 50 to 75 percent of those dropped from the rolls will immediately go on local relief. I wonder what we are going to say when the flood of telegrams, letters, telephone calls, and delegations begins to pour in on us later from the local communities and from the States, demanding that we do something because the localities and the States cannot handle the great tidal wave that is coming in upon them. Just what are we going to say?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRAZIER in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Certainly.

Mr. MEAD. A moment ago the Senator said that he would not appropriate a dollar for an able-bodied man. I know that the Senator has in mind a condition which I wish to emphasize at this particular juncture of his remarks. I have in mind the worker who is past 40 years of age, outlawed by the modern machine system of our age, unable to find work in industry, and forced into idleness because of the fact that the modern world holds him to be inefficient.

It occurs to me that the able Senator should include in the list of those who would be eligible for relief if we reject the appropriation for work relief those citizens who may be, and no doubt are, able-bodied, but who, because of the demand for efficiency in the machine age, have been condemned to idleness by industry. The Senator, recognizing the fact that opportunity has been closed for the older workers, would, of course, provide for them in any relief appropriation, either for home relief or work relief, would he not?

SOCIAL INSECURITY

Mr. LUNDEEN. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from New York. Long before the present social-security system was enacted into law I advocated a social-security system. I introduced in the House a social-security bill providing for all Americans—not part of them, as does the present system—a plan taking in all farmers, domestics, and professional persons. I tried to cover the field. I tried to provide for real security, instead of what some have called social insecurity. Of course, the instances the Senator now mentions should be covered by social security.

JOBS FOR ABLE-BODIED MEN

The point I am making is that a strong, able-bodied man should be given a job. He does not want relief. He does not want to have to extend his hands and ask any man for relief. He is strong. He is able and willing to work. He is an American, who wants to make his own way in the world; and he is entitled to that opportunity. He is entitled to a job. We do not want people by the millions saying, "Give me this" and "Give me that." We want them to be in jobs so that they can earn their own way and, in a self-respecting manner, take their places in the community. That is all they want. I am sure the able Senator agrees with me.

Mr. MEAD. I entirely agree with the Senator; and it occurs to me that because the problem of the older worker is becoming more acute as time goes on, because included in the older workers of America of today are to be found the majority of the veterans who only a short time ago offered their services in defense of our country, and because of the increased numbers of our older workers who have been outlawed by industry, we ought with greater fervor than ever to maintain the Works Progress Administration, so as to offer an opportunity for the older workers to find gainful employment.

When it comes to the youth of America, who are likewise intended to be cared for by this Works Progress Administration appropriation, and in whom we should have a deep and abiding interest, it must be remembered that when employment opportunities are available industry is particularly anxious to employ youth, and to reject the applications of the older workers. It probably is true that our own Government sets an example similar to that set by private enterprise, in that we discriminate against the older workers.

I venture to say that not a handful of Senators could be found, probably less than 10 men in this Chamber could be found, who could file applications with any large industrial concern in America and have them approved. They would be rejected instantly for the reason that they are too old.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Let me interrupt the Senator for a moment to say that if we do not relieve the present unemployment situation, if we do not meet the economic conditions we are now facing, some of us may have to file those applications, and see what happens to us.

Mr. MEAD. The Senator is making a good point, for the reason that economic pressure, operating through every impoverished farmer and every unemployed worker, is constantly asserting itself; and unless we adopt a program which will meet this modern emergency, as the Senator has well stated, some others will come here and accomplish the task for us. Therefore, in view of the fact that the W. P. A. program is gradually being perfected, and in view of the acuteness of the problem of our older workers, it is my opinion that we ought to continue this agency with a maximum appropriation until some other and better solution is found for the problem.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I thank the Senator for his contribution. In that connection I desire to say that we owe much to many Senators who on the floor of the Senate advocated social security for those beyond 40, 50, and 60 who cannot obtain work; notably the able Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], who spoke yesterday, and who advocated social security as he understands it. Whether or not that particular form of social security be adopted, whether it be a Townsend plan or whatever it may be called, the agitation for the plan will turn men's minds toward that problem. No man can expect to have his plan adopted in toto, or 100 percent. In debate it will be changed and adjusted as the Congress may think best; but all these Senators and other distinguished citizens who have contributed to the discussion have aided those who need social security.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MEAD. In that connection, let me point out to the Senator that I have introduced two bills which are now pending before committees of the Senate, one eliminating age restrictions in all civil-service examinations. It occurs to me that if we want industry to change its viewpoint with regard to our older workers the Government of the United States ought to set an example for industry to follow. Therefore one of the bills I have introduced will eliminate age restrictions, and, of course, will require sufficient qualifications to guarantee the ability of the worker to measure up to the requirements of the position.

I have introduced another bill to authorize a study of the problem of the older workers by our Department of Labor. I really believe this is one of the all-important labor problems of today. The acute condition of the older workers of America is one that is pressing for solution; and by reason of the fact that an overwhelming majority of the personnel of W. P. A. are older workers, outlawed by Government and by private enterprise, we ought not to curtail that agency at this time.

WE SHOULD LISTEN TO OUR EXPERTS

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I am much interested in his discussion, but I want to say that under the policy we pursue these people are just out of luck. They are just Americans, and so they are out of luck. If they were Armenians, as the Senator well said awhile ago, or refugees, or Belgians, or other foreigners or aliens, of course, we would not debate about the matter. We would give them the money right away. That is the policy Congress has pursued in the past. But there seems to be a great deal of debate here over an appropriation which the President of this great country says is needed for Americans. Of course, the President personally cannot know all the facts, but he bases his request upon Colonel Harrington's statement and upon the statements of W. P. A. officials, who have an organization that ramifies all over this great country and seeks to take care of the unemployed. They have expert advice on this matter, and we should listen to it.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield at that point?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MEAD. We also have the information which the Senator from Minnesota has already placed in the RECORD, which indicates that this burden cannot be carried by the municipalities. So, if the head of our Government, the leader of this administration, and the chief executive officer of this agency tell us that this appropriation is necessary, together with the information which comes to us with regard to the financial plight of local government, in my judgment, that offers an overwhelming reason why this maximum appropriation should be approved.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Christian Science Monitor of April 3, 1939, reports:

W. P. A. drops 2,000 a day.

That means that approximately 8,000 American citizens will be without sufficient funds to purchase food, clothing, and rent.

NEW YORK, April 3.—Approximately 2,000 W. P. A. workers were dropped from relief rolls today and a like number will be laid off daily until a total of 10,800 have been dismissed by Saturday, Lt. Col. Brehon B. Somervell, W. P. A. administrator here, announced today, following receipt of orders from Washington.

I note that this administrator is an Army officer, Lieutenant Colonel Somervell.

The reductions will bring the W. P. A. lists here down to 156,740 persons, Colonel Somervell said. Unessential workers without relief status will be the first to go, followed by employees, regardless of relief status, with work ratings of "unsatisfactory." Workers with ratings of "fair" will next be dropped. Those having the longest period of employment on the W. P. A. will be the first discharged in each category.

REDUCTION DESTROYS EFFICIENCY

In other words, the folks who have worked the longest, and have become the most efficient, are going to be put off the rolls to make place for some one who has not had any work. There is not very much efficiency in that. I suppose some foreman, or some senior worker who has become expert in efficiency, for instance in erecting public buildings, will be thrown off the rolls now to make place for some person who has never had a chance to be on the rolls. There may be some justice in that, but it does not line up with efficiency, and no doubt is made necessary because of this reduction.

A further lay-off of 20,000 workers is envisaged if the Senate does not restore the $50,000,000 W. P. A. appropriation cut voted by the House of Representatives on President Roosevelt's relief appropriation request for $150,000,000.

In the past, 50 percent of discharged W. P. A. workers have been eligible for home relief and on the basis of this, 5,400 relief employees are expected to be thrown onto the city's home relief, thereby adding about $270,000 a month additional expense for home relief.

Expecting the cut, Colonel Somervell during the last part of March rushed work on all projects to bring as many as possible to completion before the pay-roll cuts went into effect, and he announced today that 142 projects were completed during the month. Twelve white-collar projects have been discontinued, he added.

MARYLAND W. P. A. DROPS 950

BALTIMORE, MD., April 3.—The W. P. A. will drop 950 persons from its Maryland rolls this week, Francis H. Dryden, State administrator, announced today. This represents approximately a 6.3-percent cut in the rolls, thus reducing the total number of those employed in this work to 14,000. Dismissal action was forced, Mr. Dryden said, by lack of sufficient congressional appropriation to carry the W. P. A. through the next 3 months.

Mr. Dryden said the cut would be made without closing any project in the State. He added the dismissals must be completed by Saturday, and that no further reduction in the employment rolls were contemplated this month.

[From the Christian Science Monitor of March 21, 1939]

LAGUARDIA WARNS NEW YORK W. P. A. MAY DROP 25,000 APRIL 3

NEW YORK, March 21.—New York Members of Congress were notified by Mayor LaGuardia today that New York City would drop 25,000 Works Progress Administration employees on April 3 unless the national body voted favorably on President Roosevelt's request for an additional $150,000,000 for the W. P. A. The cut will bring the relief work rolls from 170,000 persons down to 145,000, and the mayor declared further cuts would be made before June 30, the end of the fiscal year, when between 40,000 and 45,000 more persons would be taken off the rolls.

"The result is just too terrible to contemplate," the mayor said, "I don't think Congress will do anything like creating a situation such as we know will happen."

NEW YORK WORLD'S GREATEST POPULATION CENTER

This is from the greatest city in the world, New York City, if we consider the metropolitan area of 25 miles about New York. There we find 10,000,000 people, the greatest population center on earth, and we have here the words of the mayor, published, and given to the Members of Congress from New York:

The mayor's statement followed a conference with Lt. Col. Brehon B. Somervell, W. P. A. Administrator here, late yesterday. Colonel Somervell stressed, however, that the figures given by the mayor were "anticipatory" and would be rescinded if Congress approved an increase in the W. P. A. allotment.

Colonel Somervell declared projects in the city would be rushed in an effort to complete as many of them as possible before April 1, so that the reduction of workers would not leave a number of unfinished projects. Other reductions, he said, would be made by reducing employment on projects where it would not affect efficient operation. Discontinuance of projects will be equitably distributed between construction and nonconstruction projects, the Administrator disclosed.

Lay-offs will be made in the following order, Colonel Somervell revealed: (1) Unessential nonrelief employees; (2) employees, regardless of relief status, with ratings of "unsatisfactory"; and (3) employees having ratings of "fair," regardless of relief status, those with the longest period of employment on the W. P. A. to be separated first.

THE GRAND COULEE DAM

Now, I wish to read from the Seattle Post Intelligencer of March 21, 1939. We go now to the far West, to the great city of Seattle, to the great King County, to Washington, that marvelously beautiful and wonderful city and State represented in the United States Senate by one of the boldest and fiery warriors of any time, Senator BONE. That is where we are constructing the Grand Coulee Dam, and I was happy to vote for the construction of the Grand Coulee, the greatest structure ever built by man on this earth at any one place. There is only one structure that can compare with it, the Chinese wall; but that extends over a great area. This great structure will contain three times as much concrete as is found in Boulder Dam, and there are great possibilities of employment. Thousands of men are employed on that project. Not long ago statistics were placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD showing how many thousands of men would benefit in every State of the American Union because of that project.

BONNEVILLE DAM

I was happy to vote for the appropriation for the Bonneville Dam, in which the able and distinguished leader of the minority is no doubt greatly interested, the Bonneville Dam, with its thousands of employees, and with all of the employment, ramifying back into the 48 States.

These structures are proving successful. There is one thing particularly pleasing to me about the Bonneville Dam, the Grand Coulee Dam, the Boulder Dam, and T. V. A.; you cannot repeal a dam. It is going to stay there for a thousand years, and it is going to be turning the wheels of industry. It is going to be aiding and helping and giving power and light to the American public for a thousand years.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I think the Senator voted for the appropriation for T. V. A., did he not?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I certainly did, and I was happy to vote for it.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator voted for the appropriation for the Gilbertsville Dam, did he not?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Yes; and I was glad to vote for that.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Those two great enterprises having succeeded in getting what they needed out of the Public Treasury, does not the Senator expect that those most interested, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the great Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], to come to the front now and vote with us to give food to the hungry?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I do not ask the Senators to read my poor and halting speech; but if they will read the statistics and statements of fact I am placing in the RECORD, they will feel compelled to vote for this increased appropriation, I am sure.
